Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The State board of health is very much concerned over the situation there, not only because of the error in not ceding the land upon which the hospital is situated, but I am under the impression that pending action by the legislature in order to make possible the use of these hospitals with the ceded land, something must be done by the Federal Government during the interim in order to take care of this serious situation from tuberculosis and trachoma among the Indians there. If I am incorrect in that understanding, I am sure the gentleman will correct me.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think that is substantially correct. There is a very great emergency there, and the medical staff of the University of Minnesota have been represented here and have urged this matter as one of public concern. They are willing to take hold and run this hospital.

I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if we may pass over this item until I can find out just what is the text of this proposed amendment. I would like to offer it under unanimous consent later on.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman simply asks unanimous consent that this item be passed, with the privilege of returning to it for the purpose of considering his amendment alone?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not to reopen the whole thing?

Mr. STEENERSON. Of course it will be subject to objection, if any gentleman desires to make the objection.

Mr. MANN. Let that come later. I see this item carries an appropriation of $95,000 payable out of the tribal funds, and then provides that $42,000 of that may be used for agency purposes, $20,000 for helping the State support the schools, $20,000 for aiding indigent Indians, and $17,500 for Indian hospitals. Of course, the total of that amounts to more than $95,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the only appropriation is the $95,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the only appropriation.

Mr. MANN. This item provides for payment out of the tribal funds to the State of Minnesota of $20,000 for the support of public schools. Then it provides—and this is what I want to find out about—

And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to convey to the proper district school authorities such undisposed of land as may be required for the proper use of any such school, and, if sufficient undisposed of land is not available, to use a part of said sum in the purchase of necessary land for any such school, and to convey the land when purchased to the proper school district.

When we convey to the State this Indian land that is undisposed of, will we be called upon later to pay the Indians for the value of that land? In many cases in the past it has been quite customary for the Government to convey certain Indian lands for the benefit of the Indians but without their consent, and then afterwards to have claims stirred up that we ought to reimburse the Indians for the lands which we have so conveyed.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, it is not the expectation of the committee that such a claim will come upon us, and I do not anticipate that it will, but I am not familiar with the precedents to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I recall that when I secured the passage of a special bill providing for the conveyance of certain Indian lands to a school district, albeit it was for the benefit of the Indian children as well, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] we inserted a nominal price in full consideration. We might provide here words that would meet the situation in a similar way, and require that the land should be conveyed for a consideration not exceeding a certain sum, if that is desired.

Mr. MANN. I do not care about that, but of course it is not customary for the Government to buy land with Indian funds and donate that land to one of the States. It is a very unusual provision.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to explain this situation to the House. Although the White Earth Reservation is supposed to be an Indian reservation, it has nearly all passed into private ownership, and at least 85 per cent of it is owned by white people. Now, when it was a reservation there were several Indian schools established—perhaps half a dozen or more—where the children could go to school in the daytime. Of course, some of them went off the reservation—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like a little more time.

Mr. MANN. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Since the land has been taken up by white people under the laws passed by Congress authorizing the conveyance of the land, school districts have been organized.

It has been found by experience that it is very much better for the Indians to go to the same school with the white children. It has a civilizing influence in itself, and instead of maintaining Indian schools separately it is better to have them go to the white schools. That has been the opinion both by the Indians and by the white people, that they should have common schools, and so these Indian schools have been abandoned very largely. It is thought better for the Indian children to go to the common schools, but in some places they are very far away. Now, if they can utilize the United States schoolhouses and make them into common schools—district schools—they will be utilized, and it will be for the benefit of everybody.

Mr. MANN. Take the case where, as the gentleman says, there is no Indian man living in a school district, but it is settled by white people. Why should we take the Indians' money to buy a school site for white people?

Mr. STEENERSON. We are not doing that.

Mr. MANN. That is exactly what we are doing here.

Mr. STEENERSON. The schools contemplated here were built for the Indians.

Mr. MANN. This provides that if sufficient undisposed-of land is not available they may use a part of said sum in the purchase of necessary land for any such school and convey the land when purchased to the proper school district. That means taking the money out of the Indian funds and buying a school site for the white people living there.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, that would be a very limited amount.

Mr. KNUTSON. Not more than an acre or so.

Mr. MANN. If it does not cost anything, why can not the white people buy it?

Mr. STEENERSON. The schoolhouses are situated on land that belongs to the United States.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Who furnished the money to build the schoolhouses?

Mr. STEENERSON. It came out of the Indian funds.

Mr. EVANS. Why should it now be taken from the Indians and given to the white people, as the gentleman from Illinois asked?

Mr. STEENERSON. For the reason that it is for the interest of the Indians to have a school system and to attend the school.

Mr. EVANS. If these Indians are citizens, why should not they have the benefit of the district schools?

Mr. STEENERSON. They do, but here are schools built with Indian money that have been abandoned, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Knutson] tells me that 85 per cent of these children adjacent to the schools are Indians.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me call attention to the fact that much of the land formerly held by the Indians is now held by whites, in the hands of speculators.

Mr. EVANS. Why should not they pay the taxes?

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, the people who live there are the Indians.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Indian Bureau has made a careful study of this, and I have been on the reservation and I know it has been demanded for several years that we take over these schoolhouses so that the children may have the same facilities as the white children.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, there is one feature that should be mentioned, and that is that previously the schools were maintained by the United States out of the tribal fund. It is natural that the Indians should prefer to turn them over to the State of Minnesota, knowing that the State can not make any charge against the tribal fund. It is easy to understand why the Indians want it, but I am not so well advised as to why the white men want it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order, although I do not feel very well satisfied.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer my amendment a little later.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is understood that when we return to this paragraph we return for this purpose only.

The CHAIRMAN. Consent has not yet been given to return to the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be returned to later, and that the gentleman from Minnesota may offer the amendment to which he has referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph for the purpose of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steener] offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean that the only thing you can do is to act on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. CRAMTON. That was my object.

Mr. WALSH. All right.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., including pay of superintendent, $45,000; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $51,000.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 46, line 7, by striking out "$6,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$8,000," and by striking out "$51,000" and inserting "$53,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. CLAGUE: Page 46, line 7, strike out "$6,000" and insert "$8,000"; strike out "$51,000" and insert "$53,000."

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, at Pipestone, Minn., there is located an Indian school which has an attendance of something like 225 pupils. It runs that attendance practically all of the time. I notice the appropriation provides for 200 pupils. That school has not more than one-half the capacity for the number of pupils who desire to attend. The subcommittee hearings on page 345 state that the value of the school plant, the real estate, is $190,000. At that school there are 780 acres of land. It is very valuable land, located near Pipestone, Minn. It adjoins the city limits. The land itself is valuable for school purposes. The farm raises practically all of the supplies for the school in the way of farm products. There are 29 buildings at the school. I am well acquainted with the school buildings and have visited the place often. In my opinion it would cost $300,000 to replace those buildings in the condition they are to-day. Only $6,000 is provided in the bill for the general repair of same. I visited the place last September and personally know general conditions of farm and school buildings. To take care of the general repairs for $6,000 at that place can not be done. The department admits that one of the best men in the whole system has charge of that school as superintendent. The repair expenses are kept down as low as possible. Take, for instance, the farm buildings. They have a herd of cattle there which produces the milk for the school. They have 60 milch cows. They have a large number of horses and the horse barn needs repairs very badly. A number of buildings need repair. The school is very crowded, for the reason that it can not take care of more than half the pupils that need to be taken care of. The superintendent does everything that he can to help out the Indian situation. I just called up the department when I learned that they had cut this to $6,000, and asked why they did it. They said that they know that we need more at that place, but that the Budget Committee told them to cut $500,000 from the general repairs of Indian schools, and that they simply cut $2,000 from this plant, although they admitted that they knew $8,000 was needed. Is it the policy of this House and of this committee when these buildings are in need of repair to allow them to run down? Eight thousand dollars is what they have been getting, and they need that amount badly. I trust that the amendment will be agreed to. The full amount of the $8,000 is actually needed for the coming year to keep the buildings in repair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the valuation of the plant given by the department is $190,000. The amount allowed by the committee is that which was submitted by the Budget, $6,000. It is stated by the bureau that that amount will make only the repairs and improvements that are most necessary. Your committee believes that this item should be treated as items generally, and that only those things that are most necessary should be provided for at this time.

Mr. CLAGUE. I admit that it takes care of those that are most necessary; but there are other repairs needed there.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. As a matter of fact, have we not done the same thing with this school that we have done with every other?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. And provided only for repairs that the bureau said were necessary; and, furthermore, is not this the same amount that is recommended by the Indian Bureau to the Budget? Is it not a fact that the Budget did not cut this item, but that the Indian Bureau itself presented this amount?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is my understanding. Of course, they cut it by reason of recognizing the need there is for paring down things to the limit at this time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Minnesota stated that the Director of the Budget had directed that the item for repairs be cut by $500,000.

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. If that be the case, is it not possible that this cut was made blindly?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not say that the Bureau of Indian Affairs was entirely uninformed as to the schools under its jurisdiction.

Mr. CARTER. I think I can answer that question. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs advised us that when he found out about this demand for economy he created a budget committee in his own bureau, and he told them he wanted them to cut down the bill just as low as it possibly could be cut without doing damage to the service. After this budget committee, of which Mr. Meritt was the chairman, had finished with the bill, he then went over it himself and corrected it and made some other cuts. I do not know whether he added anything to any of the items or not, but he said he went over it and corrected it. The gentleman from Minnesota ought to know the Commissioner of Indian Affairs well enough to know that when it comes to handling a matter for which he is responsible he does not do things in a haphazard way.

Mr. KNUTSON. I was not directing a criticism at the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but the condition at Pipestone is just as my colleague has stated it. It is almost a village in itself. They have a large number of buildings there, some of them fine, large, modern buildings, and it would seem to anyone who has had any experience with repair work and upkeep of buildings that $8,000 would be indeed the minimum they could keep those buildings in first-class condition with.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I take it that what the gentleman had in mind when he made his observation a moment ago in reference to this being done blindly was this, that when the cut was made necessary through the department, the department, without any special consideration of the condition of the buildings at the present time, merely allowed this amount.

Mr. CLAGUE. That is what the department said.

Mr. KNUTSON. They made a pro rata reduction all along the line.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And everyone knows that these horizontal cuts when applied are not the best method of economy, because when repairs are needed and neglected the next year you have to spend thousands where hundreds previously have taken care of them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely; and it is merely a case of where one stitch in time will save nine, and it looks to me like false economy.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, does not the gentleman from Minnesota think when there is a uniform plan of economy adopted applying to the whole Indian Service that it ought to apply even to the State of Minnesota, notwithstanding the very distinguished whip is from that delegation?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman that reductions should be made in accordance with the needs. Now, there are branches of the Government and undoubtedly individual agencies receiving more money for specific purposes than is actually needed, whereas in other instances there is barely enough, in other instances where they have not received enough. If you go to work and make a 25 per cent reduction along indiscriminately, of course you are going to paralyze different activities when they practically have not been receiving anything in the past.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will point out to the Committee of the Whole any place where we got the figures too high, I will take the chance on the other figures being high enough.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, I am not prepared to go into details, Mr. Chairman, but I am under the impression that my colleague [Mr. CLAGUE] rightly stated that the $8,000 is not any too much for the upkeep of this magnificent set of buildings at Pipestone; in fact, I would say it is a very reasonable amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no horizontal cut made by the department on these estimates. I heard several gentlemen refer to a horizontal cut. This cut was made with deliberation by the Indian Office. On page 44, Mount Pleasant School, Mich., the cut for repairs and improvements was from $10,000, carried in the current law, to $9,000. That is a cut of only $1,000 from $10,000.

Mr. CLAGUE. They may not have needed the repairs as badly.

Mr. MANN. And evidently the Indian Office gave consideration to the necessity for repairs at this place; and it would hardly be fair for us, although I give consideration in my mind to the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota, to change the figures at one place and not at another.

Mr. CLAGUE. Well, I have not heard any other Member from these particular districts make any statements that they did not have sufficient to take care of repairs.

Mr. MANN. That shows how active my friend from Minnesota is. The others would if they thought it would do any good.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of roads and bridges on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, including the purchase of material, equipment, and supplies, and the employment of labor, $9,000, to be paid from the funds held by the United States in trust for the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota: Provided, That Indian labor shall be employed as far as practicable.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, before we leave Minnesota, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] has his amendment ready.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, after line 3, page 46, insert the following that I have marked.

"That section 8 of the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1921, is hereby amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to turn over to the State of Minnesota with the Chippewa hospitals mentioned therein such amount of land as may be deemed necessary for the proper use of said hospitals."

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, in further explanation I will say these hospitals are very good buildings. They were supposed to be turned over by that act to the board of health, which are to operate them at their own expense, and they find it did not provide for turning over the land. This land belongs to the United States, as well as the buildings, and they want to have an easement as long as they operate them and to have sufficient land upon which to do this work, and I hope there will be no objection to the amendment. It is a very urgent matter; the board of health has had a special man down here to urge it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Indians under the jurisdiction of the following agencies, to be paid from the funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribes, not to exceed the sums specified in each case, to wit: Blackfeet, $39,000; Crow, $140,000; Flathead, $18,000; Fort Belknap, $30,000; Rocky Boy, $8,000; Tongue River, $25,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that a $39,000 appropriation is carried in this paragraph for the Blackfeet Indians, of Montana, for support and civilization of Indians under the jurisdiction of that agency. Are they the same Indians for whom we appropriated a portion of this $100,000 earlier in the day?

Mr. CRAMTON. Those Indians were included in the 30 various tribes provided for in that item.

Mr. WALSH. What is this money used for? Do they feed them and still let them suffer?

Mr. CRAMTON. Early in the day the gentleman's remarks led me to believe that he had read carefully the statement of Commissioner Burke in reference to these Indians.

Mr. WALSH. I have.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will state that we had a fund available this year, which by the 1st of March will be entirely exhausted. The amount for the current year was $40,000 for support and civilization. I suppose that "support and civilization" is a general term, intended to be broad enough to enable them to do about anything that they think it necessary to do.

Mr. WALSH. What activity is engaged in? Is it to keep their stomachs full and blankets to keep them warm?

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume that is the primary duty involved.

Mr. WALSH. It is a very interesting explanation, and I have begun to think that I ought to congratulate the gentleman upon the modesty of the appropriation proposed earlier in the day for the benefit of these agencies that are taken care of by this $100,000 proposal.

Mr. CRAMTON. I agree with the gentleman that we were remarkably economical and careful in that item.

Mr. WALSH. I am very glad to hear the gentleman recommend himself so highly. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing construction, maintenance, and operation of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana, $200,000 (reimbursable), to be immediately available.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to page 49, line 9, to strike out the "$200,000" and insert the figure "$20,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Amendment offered by Mr. RHODES: On page 49, line 9, strike out the figures "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "$20,000."

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment is that if it is adopted, together with the sum provided for on line 16 on the same page, there will have been made available the sum of $50,000 for continuing construction work on the irrigation project on the Flathead Indian Reservation.

I think I should give the committee the benefit of some information which I have on this particular project. At page 219 of volume 1, entitled "Hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs," in Washington, in the month of September, 1919, among other things the following facts were developed: According to this table, at page 219, just mentioned, it is shown that up to that time the Government had spent $3,415,500 for construction of the irrigation project on the Flathead Indian Reservation. The further testimony was—and this table shows it—that during all the years during which these reimbursable appropriations were made but 6½ per cent of the funds thus appropriated has been turned back into the Public Treasury.

In addition to what this table shows, the testimony in these hearings disclosed this remarkable fact, that according to the engineer in charge of this project, which involved an irrigable area of 135,000 acres, the acreage actually brought under the ditches was but 32,000, and of this 32,000 acres under water 92 per cent was farmed by white men and 8 per cent by Indians.

A few moments ago during the course of this debate I made a general observation which I herewith wish to make apply with particularity to this case. In this particular case, Mr. Chairman, the demand for carrying forward this great reclamation project did not arise among the Indians.

The further testimony was that there were 60,000 acres under water for which there was no demand.

The further facts are, gentlemen, that Congress began these appropriations back in 1908, first having appropriated $50,000, and year after year the appropriations were increased until in 1916 there was $750,000 appropriated, and in 1917, 1918, and 1919 Congress appropriated annually $750,000.

A subcommittee authorized by Congress went upon that reservation, and we not only found that there was little demand for water, but we found that there was no demand for water on that reservation that could not be supplied.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RHODES. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman kindly indicate when he visited the reservation?

Mr. RHODES. Two years ago last May.

I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that the testimony shown on the reservation by the Indians themselves is that there was but little demand for water; and, as I stated before, but 32,000 acres were actually being farmed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RHODES. That 32,000 acres of land was all that was being farmed, with water for 60,000 acres more within the irrigable area and nobody to farm it. And because of that fact, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Indian Affairs, having charge of the matter at that time, was of the unanimous opinion—and I am glad to see at least one of that committee present on this occasion—that no further money should be expended on this project except for upkeep. I do not care whether you call it a "Treasury account" or whether you call it by that misleading term "reimbursable appropriation" or not, but the committee was of the opinion that no further sums should be expended for construction purposes, and that only such sums should be expended as are necessary to keep up the repairs on the project.

I want to state this further fact, that I believe should be made known to the committee: Gentlemen have been speaking about the magnanimity of Congress in making these reimbursable appropriations and that some day all this money will come back into the Public Treasury. I want to warn gentlemen that it is very doubtful if any of this money ever comes back into the Public Treasury; and if it should come back, I want to ask the House now if it is right and fair to the Indians on the Flathead Reservation to pile up this excessive reclamation charge on their lands?

I know cases where as much as $3,500 or $4,000 are taxed up against certain 80-acre allotments on this reservation, and the land would not sell for that money to-day. In other words, Congress has encumbered these lands in many cases with larger sums of money than the lands are worth.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODES. Permit me to finish this statement. In the face of that my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], in charge of the bill, made the statement on the floor of the House this afternoon that if the Indians did not pay this money back at some future time some white man would. Why, Mr. Chairman, no white man, no Indian, no man who knows land values in that country will ever obligate himself to the extent that the gentleman believes he will be willing to do.

Another thing. The testimony was presented before your committee that in many cases these allotments produced more money annually from the sale of the wild hay that was cut from them than they have ever been made to produce since reduced to agriculture. It is very doubtful, Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Cato Sells, who was Commissioner of Indian Affairs at that time, expressed grave doubt at the hearing as to the feasibility of this project. I say, gentlemen, that the Indians on the Flathead Reservation do not want this expenditure of money. The Indians on the Flathead Reservation have never wanted it. They are disputing the right of Congress to increase their burdens year by year through these reimbursable appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RHODES. May I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RHODES. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. I wish simply to ask the gentleman, in view of the fact that over $4,000,000 has been spent in the partial construction of this project, whether the gentleman takes the position that we should now suspend the construction of it and not follow it to completion?

Mr. RHODES. That is a very pertinent question. My answer is that we should not suspend operations entirely. But this project consists of three distinct units, either one of which can be operated without regard to the others. This irrigation project does not mean that somewhere on the Flathead Reservation is one great reservoir of water, from which all the water goes to irrigate all these lands. There are various units, either one or any number of which can be used at any time in order to supply all the water that is necessary. Further answering the gentleman's question, and further replying to my good friend from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], one engineer was before the committee and admitted that he did not know whether there was a demand on the reservation for the water or not, but he said that as an engineering proposition, from the engineer's standpoint, he was justified in asking for the completion of the project. Why, there is no reason; there is no justification; there is no authorization in existing law for this large appropriation, and in my humble judgment you gentlemen should not press it. Why do you not do as the committee did for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, cease this extravagance and discontinue the increasing of these burdens upon the Indians' lands against their will and make a reasonable recommendation of about $50,000 for upkeep?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I presume that in beginning my remarks I should make a slight correction of a statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES]. He stated that with the $20,000 which he has proposed for this irrigation project, coupled with the $30,000 provided in line 16, on page 49, the total would be $50,000 for this project. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the $30,000 in line 16, page 49, applies solely to the Blackfeet Indian Reservation and has no connection whatever with the Flathead Reservation project.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I concede that I was in error as to that, and I ask unanimous consent, with the gentleman's permission, to amend my amendment by making the amount $50,000 instead of $20,000.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have no objection to the gentleman from Missouri modifying his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by making it read "$50,000" instead of "$20,000." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RHODES. That modification should be made in the light of the correction made by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. McCORMICK], which I concede. It ought to be $50,000, and it ought not to be any more.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I had heard of this matter for a good many years before I came to this House. These questions have all been gone over time and time again, and I call attention to the fact that last year an effort was made to confine the appropriation for the Flathead project to the sum of $50,000. That effort was not successful, and I assume that the present well-intended effort of the gentleman from Missouri will be equally unsuccessful.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman does not dispute the fact that for the preceding year the sum authorized for the Flathead project was $50,000?

Mr. McCORMICK. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. RHODES. Of course, I am speaking only from memory.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, his memory is not doing him justice, because the item has never been below $200,000 since 1912.

Mr. McCORMICK. I am glad that the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. CRAMTON] has made that statement. I was about to read to the same effect from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this refers to a question of policy. As indicated by the chairman of the subcommittee, we have expended some $4,000,000 upon this project, and the question is, Are we going to make the project such as we intended and such as the Government promised the white settlers when they came out there that we would make it or are we going to stop in the midst of a great work for the accomplishment of a temporary economy? I will concede the fact that a number of Indians on the reservation—in fact, most of the full-blood Indians—are of the opinion that the Government has not kept faith with them in charging up against their ultimate holdings these liens which must be imposed by virtue of the improvements proposed by the Government.

You have a large number of white settlers and you have an increased number of settlers going on there at the present time by virtue of the Government's previous promise to them that the project would be completed within a reasonable time.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMICK. I will.

Mr. EVANS. On what theory does the gentleman charge the Indian fund with promises made by the Government to white settlers?

Mr. McCORMICK. I will state that under the provisions of the act passed by Congress for the irrigation of land in that region the Indian funds were appropriated with the idea of making farmers out of the Indians, and on the theory of the special improvement of the Indian land. That is the theory upon which Congress proceeded.

Mr. EVANS. Without any treaty?

Mr. McCORMICK. Without any treaty, but merely by an act of Congress. If I had the power to do it, I would raise this appropriation to $1,000,000. In my opinion there ought to be $1,000,000 a year appropriated for two years in order to complete this project within the shortest possible time. You have a skeleton organization there, and the longer you put off completing the project the more it will cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMICK. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. My friend from Montana has just stated that if he had his way about it he would raise the sum to $1,000,000. I would like to ask the gentleman what he would do with the project and what the people of Montana would do with the project in the way of making beneficial use of the water if they had an appropriation of $1,000,000?

Mr. McCORMICK. If the people of Montana knew there were to be a million dollars expended each year until the project was completed, there would be more settlers on that particular project than the land could take care of.

Mr. RHODES. Does the gentleman know that there were in 1920 at least 20,000 acres of land on the Flathead Reservation under water for which no demand was made for the use of it?

Mr. McCORMICK. I have no such information.

Mr. RHODES. I will state to my friend that that is the testimony in the record that I have just cited.

Mr. McCORMICK. What year was that?

Mr. RHODES. In 1920. In other words, the land was under water and nobody to use it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have had some knowledge of facts and conditions which might lead some one to testify that about it, but I will state that the Government has been so dilatory in putting water on there that it has forced a number of farmers to leave their homesteads and go elsewhere in order to maintain their families. Due to drought and general conditions and the failure of the Government to supply water many have been compelled to leave the reservation in order to support themselves elsewhere.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMICK. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. There was no evidence before the Committee on Appropriations of a demand for an extra amount. The testimony shows that there is under constructive work 94,000 acres, and actually irrigated 40,000. I would understand that that means that many acres could have the water if people wanted it. Is that correct?

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the gentleman mean to say that there are 40,000 acres that can be had?

Mr. SNELL. Fifty thousand.

Mr. McCORMICK. The report of the committee in treating the testimony of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated that there were this year at least 40,780 acres irrigated.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman answer my question so I can get this thing straight. When it says that there are so many acres under constructive work, I would suppose that that number of acres could have water supplied if they wanted it. Is that correct?

Mr. McCORMICK. That number could have the water supply if the water were immediately available.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. May I answer the gentleman?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There are 160 acres of land in each homestead, but it is impossible for the ordinary homesteader to put all of his land under cultivation the first year. Probably he only puts under cultivation one-third or one-quarter. In addition, much of his entry may not be susceptible of irrigation on account of the rough character of his land.

Mr. SNELL. Am I right in my construction?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Not exactly.

Mr. SNELL. Then, according to that, the five-ninths of this quarter only was taken up.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The whole quarter section may have been entered, but possibly half of it could not be placed under irrigation by the entryman because of lack of means or because of the rough character of the land.

Mr. SNELL. There should be some way of adjusting those claims in regard to the five-ninths.

Mr. McCORMICK. We are not asking for more money. There are certain reasons why the farms have not been cultivated all over, and that is due in part to high freight rates and falling prices.

Mr. SNELL. But the high freight rates will continue next year. I hope they will not, but I believe they will.

Mr. McCORMICK. I hope the gentleman will use his influence and his statesmanship to get them reduced.

Mr. SNELL. I am with the gentleman on that, but I fear they will be the same.

Mr. McCORMICK. The reclamation project will also be there in the future. It is a question before this House at this time as to whether we should abandon this project.

Mr. SNELL. We are not asking you to abandon it, but there was not a particle of evidence before the committee that shows that they need more land than they have at the present time, and there are five-ninths that is not being used, and yet you come here and ask for more money.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, as I have previously stated, the reason for the noncultivation of much of this land is the fact that these farmers have been forced to go elsewhere for employment, due to the dilatory tactics of the Government. It has not been profitable for farmers, not only in this particular section, but in other sections of the country, to cultivate all of their lands, and you are going to have that condition facing this country this year, if the condition of the farmers in general is not alleviated by legislation or by the general policy of the administration. You will have that same condition obtaining in other parts of the country, much to the detriment of the people who live in the more populous regions. I do not wish to leave the impression that the lands in the Flathead region are being abandoned, or ever will be abandoned. I do leave the impression and wish to leave the impression, however, that if we can be assured of adequate and continuing appropriations such as will give notice to prospective settlers that the Government will not be niggardly in this regard but will pour out a greater amount of largess, as it ought to do, to complete this project, in order to cut down overhead expenses, then you will have contented settlers on the Flathead, and with the alleviation of the general condition you will have 100 per cent of the land cultivated.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the hearings contain the statement of Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that a good deal of this land is owned by white people. The reservation was opened and white people went in there and took up the land, with the understanding that the irrigation project would be constructed. Inasmuch as they bought land with that understanding, they feel that the Government has not kept faith with them in providing the small appropriations requiring so many years to complete the project. Something over $4,000,000 has been expended, and it is estimated it will take $2,200,000 more to complete it. While I am not informed as to the figures, I think it is very safe to assume that while some of the land that is under the constructed project is not tilled today, that will be found to be land that is owned by the Indians.

Mr. RHODES rose.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, I want to complete this statement, and then I will yield to the gentleman. Other land within the project as proposed but not yet constructed perhaps is in the hands of whites who went in there and bought the Indian land, expecting the project would be completed. Instead of that, we have been dribbling it along, and they have been waiting, so that now even in this bill we are appropriating only $200,000, and of that amount only $120,000 is to be used in construction work of certain laterals. Still the gentleman would not only have us stop absolutely the work that is to relieve these men who bought the lands expecting water would be brought upon them, but he wants to stop the operation and maintenance of the project, because his amendment even as he has doctored it up, after one or two efforts, provides only for $50,000, whereas the estimate shows that it will cost $70,000 for operation and maintenance alone.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman must wait until I am through. I am trying to give some information which gentlemen have been seeking. The gentleman insists that this project will never repay any of this money to the Treasury. The gentleman has his opinion, but I prefer to take the opinion of the Indian Office, as contained in the hearings, which shows that the estimated cost per acre when completed will be only $51.50 and the average value of the land per acre when completed will be $100. I have just confirmed those figures by telephoning to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. They say that those figures are very conservative; that the cost of the project will not reach $51 an acre and that the value will be above $100 per acre. They stated to us over the phone that this is one of their best projects, and that positively that money will come back some time to the Treasury. Mr. Meritt said in the hearings that every dollar of this money will be eventually reimbursed to the Government. They asked for $200,000. It seemed to us that $120,000 for construction work was very reasonable, a very modest amount, in view of the fact that it is going to take $2,200,000 to complete the project. With $70,000 for operation and maintenance, there will be left only $10,000 for miscellaneous expenses, such as stream gauging, surveys, and so forth. I hope the gentleman's amendment will not be adopted. To adopt it would perhaps endanger the $4,000,000 which we have already invested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from Michigan said that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES] would stop maintenance and operation. The hearings show on page 367 that operation and maintenance charges are collected from the water users.

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Why would his appropriation entirely stop all of the work?

Mr. CRAMTON. They are collected from the water users, of course, but first we have to operate and maintain it. It is a reimbursable item. Having operated and maintained it, we can collect it from the water users, but if you appropriate only $50,000, you will have only $50,000 for operation and maintenance.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to know how much was returned to the Treasury last year from the maintenance and operation collected from the water users.

Mr. CRAMTON. I tried to get those figures for the benefit of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RHODES. I have already given the gentleman that amount.

Mr. CRAMTON. But I have found that the gentleman has had to back up on some of his information to-day, and at best his figures are ancient. I wanted the figures up to date. The difficulty is that the Reclamation Bureau constructed this project, and the Indian Service has not the figures immediately at hand.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman any real evidence to show that the balance of 138,000 acres have been sold to whites, and that they are actually calling for water, or is that just a supposition? Is there anything before the committee that would lead the gentleman to believe that?

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, I am trying to explain these figures, and I will admit to the gentleman I do not know but I gave him what seems to me to be the most reasonable explanation. I do know this, that, generally speaking, it takes quite a while to get the Indians to use irrigation even after the work is completed.

Mr. McCORMICK. If the gentleman will yield, practically all of the irrigable land of the Flathead Reservation has been taken up and approximately 95 per cent would come under this project.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman perhaps is advised of the fact as to whether many of the whites have bought land expecting it to be brought under water, and it has not yet been brought under water?

Mr. McCORMICK. I will say practically 100 per cent of the whites have done that very thing.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, just one minute. In answer to the question whether or not there is a demand, there was a reservation opened a little over a year ago in Wyoming and pending the opening there were 30 applicants for every number giving permission to make entry. In other words, people from New York, Missouri, and all the other States rushed in there and wanted to get the land to the tune of thirty times the acreage available. They were all soldiers, too.

Mr. SNELL. Does that prove anything in reference to a project where according to the testimony five-ninths of the land is not being used at the present time? What has that got to do with this project? When you come to 30 people I would be glad to talk to you, but I think that where five-ninths of the land is not being used you ought not to ask for more money.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, how many of these applicants were not required to reside on the land at all?

Mr. FRENCH. Under the homestead law a soldier is given credit in lieu of residence for his period of service.

Mr. MANN. How about those people in hospitals, and so forth? Are they required to reside on the land before selling it?

Mr. FRENCH. I am not aware—

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If they entered the land before entering the hospital they are not required to live upon the land.

Mr. MANN. If they entered the land, and they are now in hospitals, can they receive the land or are they required to live on the land?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They are excused from residence on the land if they filed before they entered the hospital.

Mr. FRENCH. They would have to go upon the land before making entry; that would be true.

Mr. MANN. Under these new laws we have passed I am not very well informed about them, but I was under the impression that these soldiers who had lost their legs or arms or otherwise injured and in hospitals were entitled to make entry and go upon the land, or at least having the filing postponed until the soldier could file.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There is no law permitting anyone to enter a piece of land except through a United States commissioner or the United States land office in the district where the land is located. If he is a soldier, he is excused from residence if discharged for disability.

Mr. MANN. What proportion of these were at the land office where the gentleman says thirty times the number presented themselves—

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I understand they presented themselves at the land office.

Mr. MANN. I think most of them presented themselves by attorneys.

Mr. FRENCH. What I think the gentleman had in mind touching absenteeism is this, that at the time entryman makes entry he must have been upon the land; and in further response to the gentleman from New York I would say the condition that existed to which he referred exists in all the western country. Wherever there is an opening due, if the land is a large amount of acreage, it has been necessary for the department to inaugurate a system of registration in order that any sort of order should be maintained. Settlers or prospective settlers—

Mr. SNELL. Is it not just to get the land free? That is another proposition, that is not to save the Government the expense of an irrigation project.

Mr. FRENCH. These settlers did not get this land for irrigation free. They pay for it. They pay what the irrigation system costs.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question? The gentleman from Michigan stated a while ago that the committee was without information showing the amount of reimbursable funds returned to the Public Treasury on account of the Flathead project. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman from Idaho if any effort was made by his committee to ascertain what, if any, money had been reimbursed on this account since 1920? I will say that my reason for asking that is this: I stated positively, giving book and the page where the tables show, coming through the Indian Office in Washington, that during all the years of this reimbursable legislation but 6½ per cent of those funds have been returned. Does the gentleman dispute that?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, may I have another minute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. The surprise would be, at this early stage in the development of that project, that it would be so much. The fact of the business is that this money is to be paid back over a period of years, and I would be surprised if any considerable amount of it should be paid back at this time, when the work is scarcely more than half done, maybe nearly two-thirds done. Then, when the work shall have been completed, will be the time to see whether the moneys will be coming back. According to the testimony brought out by the representatives of the Indian Bureau, as the chairman has indicated, the lands now under water have a value of approximately $100 an acre upon this particular project, while the outside estimate of the cost to reclaim the project, the cost of the construction work, is approximately $51. The land stands as a lien for the Government expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has again expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., including pay of superintendent, $40,000; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; in all, $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the misspelling of the word "including," on line 14, page 54, will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 700 Indian pupils, including native Indian pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., including pay of superintendent, $140,000; for general repairs and improvements, $20,000; in all, $160,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 63, line 7, after the semicolon, insert "For a boys' dormitory, $60,000."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will make a brief statement, and then ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to insist upon or withdraw his point of order before I proceed further.

Mr. Chairman, this amount was submitted in the estimates that came to the Committee on Appropriations in the Budget estimates. The purpose of this $60,000 is to replace an old wooden building, constructed some 35 or 40 years ago. It has been used for a boys' dormitory, I think, during all that period. Being made of wood, the foundation has decayed, and the sills of the building have rotted away. They have in part been replaced from time to time, but it has reached such a point of deterioration now that the supports of the building are so far impaired as to make it a dangerous structure. The building settles first in one place and then in another. Cracks open in the roof and let in the water, and the building is damp in part almost all the time.

The building is crowded with boys. I was there some two years ago and went through the entire building. It is crowded with beds on all floors. A great number of young boys are kept there, and if a fire should break out the building is so old and the wood in it so aged that the superintendent says it would be almost impossible to prevent a great disaster. They have fire guards and such appliances as they are able to provide, but the danger is very great. The rotting wood and the dampness underneath make it a continuous menace to the health of the boys. The superintendent told me that some of the boys who slept in that building were on the sick list nearly all the time, and undoubtedly this is due mainly to the insanitary condition of the building.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Have not a great many of our schools and colleges all over the country wooden dormitories that are not fireproof? That condition alone is no different from thousands of other colleges and schools?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am making my principal argument on the great age, and the consequent decay of the materials out of which the building is constructed.

Mr. SNELL. It is not necessary that it should be fireproof?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; but it would be better if it were fireproof. The building is so old that the rain in the winter keeps the building damp, and the rooms are insanitary, and that condition causes illness among the boys.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. How many buildings are there in this school at Salem, Oreg.?

Mr. HAWLEY. About six buildings in the plant.

Mr. WALSH. Do they never repair any of them?

Mr. HAWLEY. They repair them from time to time. This building has been repaired many times and is a source of continual and considerable expense for that purpose. But the point is now reached where it is no longer possible to place it in good condition. It is better to put up a new $60,000 building than to spend that money in a few years on repairs and still have an unsatisfactory insanitary building during that period. A new building is an absolute necessity, and it would be cheaper to use the moneys now expended from time to time in the construction of a new building.

Mr. WALSH. Is this to be a concrete fireproof structure?

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose it would have a concrete base and brick walls.

This building has been estimated for a number of times by the Indian Department. Every inspector who has visited it has said that it should be torn down and replaced; that it is unsafe in its present condition. I was there one day when a strong wind was blowing, and I could feel a tremor vibrating throughout the building. Some day, if it is not replaced, the old wooden structure may give way, with great danger to the lives of the boys. The building has served its purpose. It is dangerous to health and to life, and it ought to be replaced, and it ought to be replaced now.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. How many boys is it proposed that this school building shall accommodate which you propose to build for $60,000? Are there 700 pupils in that school?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is approximately the number in attendance at the school. I think some 60 or 75 boys are housed in this building.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. How many do you expect to house in this dormitory?

Mr. HAWLEY. As I remember, there are from 60 to 75 boys in this dormitory. They are crowded in on all of the floors, and the cots are placed very closely together, which increases the danger.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma insist on his point of order?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I think the question ought to be settled as to whether unauthorized buildings can be provided for on an appropriation bill, and for that reason I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. The only authorization for anything in reference to the education of Indians is that carried in the original act creating the Indian Bureau, which authorized the expenditure of money for education. It has been ruled time and again that that did not authorize the erection of new buildings. Under the language of the recent authorization act, passed, I think, at the last session of Congress, it is not stated that new buildings may be provided in an appropriation bill. I think the chairman has the act before him. It provides, if I recall, for the extension and improvement of buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects. Now, I do not think it can be said that the erection of a building is an extension of the school plant, any more than it might be said that a new unit might be taken up on an irrigation project as an extension of that project; and about the same language is contained in the authorization act with reference to irrigation projects as is contained with reference to school buildings.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be heard at any length. While I am not in favor of the gentleman's amendment, I want to suggest to the Chair that there are possibly two constructions of the language contained in the Snyder Act of November 2, 1921. One has been urged by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. That act reads:

For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

I want to suggest to the Chair that that language might very fairly be taken to mean that there is authority for the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of existing plants and projects. That is to say, that instead of the words "enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair" referring individually to each particular building they may be taken to refer generally to the words "buildings and grounds." For instance, it is admitted that this dormitory might be repaired or be enlarged or improved or extended. If that is properly within the jurisdiction of the bureau, it would seem reasonable and logical also that the bureau should have the jurisdiction to enlarge or extend or improve the buildings and grounds of an existing plant. Under that construction of the language the amendment would be in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if that construction of the language is taken by the Chair, of course there is no limit to what can be done under the authority to which the gentleman refers. But the words should be given their ordinary, usual interpretation; and I think the Chair by referring to similar authority carried in other organic acts and special acts will find that it has always been ruled that under authority such as this committee can not by way of amendment offered from the floor authorize the beginning of new buildings or new projects. They can repair or enlarge an existing building and extend it; but to undertake to replace it by an entirely new structure has always been held to be going beyond the scope of the authority. I do not agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] in his interpretation of the act passed in 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. In passing on this point of order—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the Chair if the Chair is ready to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I can not cite the page now, but there is a ruling which holds that at soldiers' homes, for instance, it is not in order to provide for an entirely new building in an appropriation bill. I think there is a provision that where you are building on a foundation already existing, or where you are adding to a new building, that is in order; but I think the construction of an entirely new building has been held not to be in order on an appropriation bill. It seems to me that is on all fours with this proposition. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] offers an amendment providing, not an addition to an old building, not for the continuation of a building upon a foundation already existing, but an entirely new building. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has pointed out that if that is held in order it will present practically unlimited possibilities of building. Therefore the decision is quite important.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. In passing on this point of order two things must be kept in mind. First, the words of this act of November 2, 1921, must be given their fair and ordinary interpretation; and, second, it seems to the Chair that the rule doubtless is that a strict construction should be given to every authority that is contained in any act of this kind. In other words, if there is doubt about the authority it ought not to be construed to be an authorization. The section of the act of November 2, 1921, involved in the point of order reads as follows:

For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

The amendment offered is for a boys' dormitory, $60,000. This is evidently a new building. It does not come under the language of the act of November 2, 1921, because it is not an enlargement, an extension, improvement, or a repair of an existing building, but is a new building entirely. The language of the act says "the enlargement, extension, improvement, or repair" of an existing building. Under that language it must be manifest that extensions or additions can be made to an existing building, but no authority is there given for the erection of a new building.

The remainder of the language of this section of the act of November 2, 1921, provides for the enlargement, extension, and improvement of grounds of existing plants and projects. A new building would not certainly be within the meaning of the language "improvement of grounds." There are some decisions along similar lines as pointed out by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. For instance, in Hinds's Precedents, in volume 4, pages 503 and 504, several similar cases are given. The erection of a laboratory building for the Department of Agriculture was held not to be a continuation of a public work already in progress. The purchase of a site and the erection of a building for the Weather Bureau not being authorized by prior legislation and appropriation therefor is not in order on an agricultural appropriation bill as the continuation of an existing public work. The construction of barracks at the navy yard was held not to be a continuation of a public work. While these are not exactly on all fours with the present question, they are along a similar line and are precedents favorable to the position taken by the Chair. The point of order is sustained and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 6, after the semicolon insert the following: "For the extension, improvement, and repair of the boys' dormitory, $60,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this authority will not be given. When we do authorize a dormitory we ought to do it right and not waste the money on this old structure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAWLEY) there were—ayes 9, noes 15.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In view of the congested and crowded condition of the Chamber, does the gentleman from Michigan think he will make much progress with the bill to-night?

Mr. CRAMTON. As far as I have any information, there are no stumbling blocks and no matter in controversy during the few pages remaining in the Indian bill, and I hope we may run through that and reach pensions before we rise. If the Clerk is permitted to read, it will not take more than 10 minutes to finish the Indian bill.

Mr. WALSH. There are one or two items that may provoke a little inquiry for information, but I have no objection to running along for a while.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support and civilization of Indians in Utah, not otherwise provided for, including pay of employees, $5,800.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he can give us any idea as to how many Indians are affected by this provision. I have carefully gone over the report, and have been unable to determine.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no information immediately at hand with reference to that. It is a small amount, and I take it there is not a great number of Indians.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. My impression is that the number of Indians affected is about the same as the number affected in the item for investigation and maintenance at Fort Hall, and my information is that there are about 579.

Mr. CRAMTON. The item is one that for several years was carried at $10,000, then $8,000, and the current year carried $6,000, and there was recommended $5,800 by the bureau. The total number of Indians in Utah is 1,559. How many of those will be affected by this I could not state.

The Clerk read as follows:

For aid of the public schools in Uintah and Duchesne County school districts, Utah, $6,000, to be paid from the tribal funds of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians and to be expended under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That Indian children shall at all times be admitted to such schools on an entire equality with white children.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLTON: Page 67, line 8, after the word "Utah," strike out "$6,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000."

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I only care to say in regard to this amendment, that for a number of years the appropriation was $12,000, and then for some cause, the reason for which I have not been able to find, is cut in two. This was done notwithstanding that the children affected have largely increased. There are peculiar conditions out there. Over 45,000 acres of land have been leased to white people for the special benefit of the Indians, because unless this were done they could not obtain title to their water. A large number of the settlers are doing this work, and the small counties that are struggling for existence are compelled to school these children without any taxes at all coming from the lands and the property occupied by these white settlers. In other words, the land is not taxable, the children must be supported, and the counties are poor and unable to maintain the schools for as long as eight months of the year. Yet they have no funds with which to educate the children of these lessees. I certainly think that instead of the amount being cut down, it ought to be kept where it was during 1920 and 1921.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman I would say that the amount recommended is the same as that for the current year, and the committee had no evidence to justify increasing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLTON) there were—ayes 5, noes 11.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing construction and enlargement of the Wapato irrigation and drainage system, to make possible the utilization of the water supply provided by the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 604), for 40 acres of each Indian allotment under the Wapato irrigation project on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $250,000: Provided, That the entire cost of said irrigation and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916: Provided further, That the funds hereby appropriated shall be available for the reimbursement of Indian and white landowners for improvements and crops destroyed by the Government in connection with the construction of irrigation canals and drains of this project.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. What authority is there for the final proviso that the funds appropriated shall be available for the reimbursement of Indian and white landowners for improvements and crops destroyed by the Government in connection with the construction of irrigation canals and drains of the project?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suppose that if in the course of construction of the irrigation canals and drains improvements and crops are destroyed, it would be held a necessary incident of the construction, and as there is authority to appropriate for the construction, there would be authority to appropriate for those damages that were necessary as an incident of the construction.

Mr. WALSH. That is a supposition, but is there authority? In this act, is it supposed that where they cut through improved land, that is the contribution to the project instead of the Government being mulcted in damages for it?

Mr. CRAMTON. As a parliamentary proposition, these are the necessary incidents of the construction, and they would have the same authority as there is for the appropriation for construction.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. In regard to the damages, the gentleman can understand that they may be constructing a ditch through land that is already in cultivation, and the ditch has nothing to do with the water on that land. There may be growing crops there that will be destroyed. Evidently that ought to be reimbursed. That is the sort of thing that this provides for.

Mr. WALSH. I assumed that that is what the provision is for.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It has been carried year after year.

Mr. WALSH. Was it in the act of May 18, 1916, which is the authority for reimbursing the cost of this drainage system? Unless it was in that act, I submit that there is no authority for the Government to permit the payment of these damages.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It may have been provided since then.

Mr. WALSH. Only in an appropriation bill. Of course, it has been carried in an appropriation bill since then.

Mr. SINNOTT. Is not there authority under the Constitution for this, the taking of private property without compensation? When we destroy a man's crop or other property in the erection of irrigation systems, it means the taking of that property—

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, of course, it is the taking of property, but you have to provide for legislation by a legislative committee. The Appropriations Committee can not come in here—

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts the Constitution quoted by my friend from Oregon prohibits the taking of property without compensation.

Mr. FRENCH. Does not the gentleman think it is quite as important to buy a little tract of land, we will say, as it is to buy timber to make a flume or materials to make a dam, when by the purchase of a little tract of land the Government can connect up and build its irrigation system? It seems to me that necessarily the Government would have authority to do it for the completion of the project.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is there a point of order pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a reservation of the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that this is legislation; that there is no authority of law for the language in the provision contained in the final proviso to the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to state that it is a necessary incident to the work of construction that we would have to appropriate for along with the construction of the work.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10329, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. DUNBAR was granted leave of absence for four days on account of business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. APPLEBY], for the insertion in 8-point type in the RECORD of an address made by him last evening at New Brunswick on "Lincoln, the Man."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN—THE MAN.

The name of Abraham Lincoln needs no introduction to an American audience. Historic man waited 4,000 years for the coming of Lincoln. Such a character never lived before, and the world may never see his like again. He was created for a purpose; he was a man with a mission. Born in 1809, the same year that gave light to England's grand old man, William E. Gladstone, of humble origin, but splendid parentage; limited education, but an intense student of the few books at his command, as well as of the men and conditions with which he came in contact; reared in the great outdoors, God's country, and near to nature's heart, he early became a leader; and in his early life, through his experiences as a clerk in the proverbial country store, and as he graduated from the school of "hard knocks," he assumed a leadership in each association that was never questioned. The pathetic story of his early life and constant struggles with poverty and destitution will fill the heart of any man with deeper sympathy for the poor and needy. His successful struggles under constant adversity to better his condition will be a beacon light that will guide many a storm-buffed boy into the harbor of success. His life was a succession of striking epochs. His unselfish patriotism and devotion to his country made him a marked man at the very beginning of his professional life. In one of his first debates with Douglas he declared: "Think nothing of me; take no thought for the political fate of any man whomsoever, but come back to the truths that are in the Declaration of Independence. While pretending no indifference to earthly honors, I do claim to be actuated in this contest by something higher than an anxiety for office. I charge you to drop every paltry and insignificant thought for any man's success. It is nothing; Judge Douglas is nothing. But do not destroy that immortal emblem of humanity—the Declaration of Independence."

From Springfield to the National Capital, as he entered upon his duties as President, we find the same determined spirit actuating him. Entering the White House at the most critical time in the history of this Nation, hampered in every way by the dissension between the States, disturbed at times by the differences of opinions among the members of his Cabinet; oftentimes disappointed in his generals as the battle raged between the North and the South, he courageously stood at all times for what he believed to be right, and, dying as he did by the assassin's bullet before the fruits of his fondest hopes were realized, he yet died victorious, not alone in the circumstance of triumphant arms and a Nation reunited but in the victory of unselfish devotion to the cause of human freedom.

Such, in a few words, is a brief history of the great emancipator whose 113 birthday we celebrate to-day. His deeds, his words, will live forever, bright spots upon the pages of history. His speech at Gettysburg, delivered at the bloody angle, which proved to be the turning point of the war, has given greater inspiration to the youth of this country—yes, to the youth of the world—than perhaps any other single utterance. His words, "It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth," are immortal and will go down into history as the supreme effort of unselfish patriotism.

More biographies of this beloved American have been printed, more books written around episodes in his life, more incidents told of his acts and character, more stories built upon his homely philosophy and exquisite humor, more shafts erected to his honor, more institutions named for him than any other man whose name has graced the pages of American history. The great Lincoln Highway, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, traversed by thousands of people each day, binds the States in a great memorial; and one of the crowning monuments of all time, the great Lincoln Memorial, now in process of erection in the National Capital, to be dedicated the coming summer, is destined to become a national shrine. Of purest white marble, with its massive classic columns, on the banks of the historic Potomac, surpassing in architecture any similar memorial in the world, surrounded by an artificial lake whose limpid waters reflect with crystal clearness its stately beauty and whose banks are resplendent with the finished art of the landscape gardener, it typifies in its strength, beauty, and design the love and devotion of a grateful people. I can but note the emotions which came to me as on November 11 last, at the service to the unknown dead, I stood with thousands of others in the National Cemetery at Arlington listening to the stirring address of President Harding, and my eyes swept that wonderful vista, unlike any in the world, stretching from Arlington to the National Capitol. First, the wonderfully beautiful marble amphitheater crowning the west bank of the Potomac in which the services were being held; then the Lincoln Memorial, its classic outlines gleaming in the sun; then a little further along, in a direct line, that magnificent shaft, the Washington Monument; and, lastly, to the extreme east, still following the line as an arrow might fly, the Dome of the Capitol, conceded by all as one of the most impressive and striking achievements of architecture. Once seen, it will never be forgotten.

The question may be asked, "Why have Lincoln day dinners remained so popular?" To me the answer seems to be in the patriotism possessed by all true Americans. The average business man becomes so engrossed in his own affairs that he becomes a veritable machine. His activities are directed into many avenues but his mind is always carrying the load, and when he considers an evening of relaxation, the fact that he may join with his friends and associates at least one evening in the year where new phases in the life of one of the greatest Americans who ever lived will be presented, brings him both joy and comfort. Patriotism has always been the mainspring of America's national existence, and as the life of Abraham Lincoln was dear to those who knew him when he lived and moved among them, it is as fully revered and honored by those who have come after. The stimulation of his example is felt by all, and so long as America lives her people will cherish the name and be guided by the teachings of Lincoln, one of the sweetest, greatest, grandest characters in human history.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 15, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee that though all secrets are known unto Thee and our ways are scrutinized we can come to Thee, notwithstanding our failures, and ask from Thee a continuance of Thy mercy, assured that Thy goodness shall never fail us. Help us to fulfill our tasks, to do Thy will, and to prove acceptable before Thee. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, February 13, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ACCOUNTS OF THE EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION (S. DOC. NO. 105).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury calling attention of Congress to the necessity for legislation to provide for an audit of the accounts of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation by the General Accounting Office, and suggesting an amendment to the act approved July 1, 1918, for this purpose, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. R. 9931. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River.

VIEWS OF JUDICIARY ON LEGISLATIVE QUESTIONS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, on yesterday I called the attention of the Senate to a speech of Mr. Justice Clarke, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in regard to the cancellation of our foreign war debts when Members of the Senate and the House had delayed discussing those questions on account of the Limitation of Armament Conference being in session. In my address I also expressed regret that the Republican Party had nominated Mr. Hughes for President while a member of the Supreme Court. Since then it has been called to my attention that Mr. Justice Clarke made a speech in New York in which he discussed other matters with which Congress has to deal, including prohibition. I have also been informed that Chief Justice Taft has recently made some speeches which have been different from those made by any other Chief Justice, but I do not recall them.

We all know the efforts of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] in directing attention of the country to the baseball contract which Federal Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis made, and how that has lessened the respect for the judiciary. I think the Senator from South Carolina has rendered a splendid service in this and many other important matters. All such things will injure the judiciary of our country.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Has the Chief Justice or the associate justice expressed an opinion upon the Muscle Shoals project?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am a great admirer of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. My colleague and I differ with reference to him. I voted for his confirmation and my colleague voted against it. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court has the respect and confidence of the people of my section. While President he appointed an ex-Confederate soldier, Justice White, of Louisiana, Chief Justice at a time when it took a brave and generous man to do it, and our people will never forget him for that. There was at a time when there was a Federal soldier on the bench whom he might have promoted to that high office. He also appointed Joseph R. Lamar, one of the ablest lawyers of my State, a Democrat, to be a member of this highest court. Justice Lamar distinguished himself and our section by the splendid services rendered on the Supreme Court, but the hard work shortened his useful life.

I think William McKinley and William Howard Taft rendered the country a great service when, as Presidents of the United States, they tried to do away with sectionalism and reunite our people. I am a great admirer of the present Chief Justice, but the judiciary is going to be injured, and the people will not have the same high respect for it if the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States make speeches in public not in their line of duty as has been done recently.

I have referred to the generous and broad-minded spirit shown ex-Confederate soldiers by the present Chief Justice and the late President McKinley, and I hope I may be pardoned for a personal reference. When I was made Director of the United States Census Bureau in 1913 one of the first things I discovered was that a number of the ex-Federal soldiers and widows of Federal soldiers employed in the bureau were not having the comforts that younger men and younger women were receiving.

One of the first acts of my administration was to see that they were given the best attention and every comfort. When I left that bureau all the ex-Federal soldiers and the widows of Federal soldiers came to me in a body and said that I had shown them more consideration than any director who had ever held the position, although I was the only southern man appointed to fill that office up to that time. While in that position it gave me pleasure to appoint ex-Confederate soldiers to many positions in the South. There is an agent in each county in the South to collect cotton statistics for the Census Bureau. I probably appointed more ex-Confederate soldiers to Federal positions in the South than any other person. My father was a Confederate soldier, served four years, and I am proud of his record, but he quit fighting when the war was over and there was no bitterness in him. In my humble way I have done what I could to bring about a complete understanding between our sections. During the Spanish-American and the World War there was never any complaint made about the sons of the Northern or Southern soldiers failing to do their duty—just as their fathers did in the Civil War no matter which side they fought on.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING presented a petition of sundry citizens of Sisseton and Peever, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MOSES presented the memorial of Mrs. Daniel Connell and sundry other ladies of Somersworth, N. H., remonstrating against the proposed increase in the rates of duty on women's leather gloves in the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NEWBERRY presented petitions of the Woman's Literary Club, of Pontiac, and of sundry members of the American Association of University Women, of Birmingham, both in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Battle Creek, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. CUMMINS. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 497) thereon.

I ask that the report be printed in the Record as well as printed under the general order, so that Senators may acquaint themselves with the subject. It is a very important measure and I give notice that within a short time the bill will be called up for consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if that is the bill known as the pork barrel judges bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not recognize the designation applied by the Senator from North Carolina, but I am sure he understands pretty well what the bill is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar, and without objection the report will be printed in the Record.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report it back to the Senate with an amendment, and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

Amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the following number of district judges for the United States district courts in the districts specified in addition to those now authorized by law:

"For the district of Massachusetts, two; for the eastern district of New York, one; for the southern district of New York, two; for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one; for the western district of Pennsylvania, one; for the northern district of Texas, one; for the eastern district of Michigan, one; for the northern district of Ohio, one; for the northern district of Illinois, one; for the district of Minnesota, one; for the eastern district of Missouri, one; for the eastern district of Oklahoma, one; for the district of Montana, one; for the northern district of California, one; for the southern district of California, one; for the district of Arizona, one; and for the northern district of Georgia, one.

"Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of any district judge appointed pursuant to this act the same shall not be filled unless the Congress shall so provide.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States, or, in case of his disability, of one of the other justices of the Supreme Court, in order of their seniority, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and annually thereafter, to summon to a conference on the last Monday in September at Washington, or at such other time and place in the United States as the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any of said justices in order of their seniority, may designate, the senior circuit judge of each circuit. If any of said senior circuit judges is unable to attend, the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any justice of the Supreme Court in the order of seniority, may nominate any other circuit or district judge belonging to the circuit whose senior circuit judge is unable to attend, that each circuit may adequately be represented at said conference.

"It shall be the duty of every such senior or other circuit or district judge to attend such conference, and to remain throughout its proceedings, and to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States may be improved.

"It shall be the duty of the senior district judge of each district court of the United States to make, on or before the 1st day of August of each year, a report to the senior circuit judge as to the condition of the business in his district and a recommendation as to what additional judicial force, if any, is needed to dispose of the business of such district with reasonable dispatch. It shall not be sufficient for him merely to state in his report the cases as shown upon the docket of the court, but, after investigation, he shall express his best judgment as to the condition of business existing or likely to arise in his court during the ensuing year. The senior circuit judge, or, in his absence, a judge representing the circuit at the conference, shall present such reports to the conference, with a summary thereof, and his comments thereon.

"The Attorney General shall, upon request of the Chief Justice, report to said conference on matters relating to the business of the several courts of the United States, with particular reference to causes or proceedings in which the United States may be a party.

"The said conference shall be presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, or in case of his disability, by any justice of the Supreme Court in the order of seniority.

"Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the conditions of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans and schedules for the assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or the condition of business indicates the need thereof, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

"The Chief Justice and each justice or judge summoned to and attending said conference shall be allowed his actual expenses of travel and his necessary expenses for subsistence, not to exceed $10 per day, which payments shall be made by the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the written certificate of the Chief Justice.

"Sec. 3. That sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, as amended by the act of October 3, 1913 (chap. 18, 38 Stats., p. 203), of the Judicial Code, be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 13. (1) A district judge for a district may be designated to act in another district or the same circuit (including territory attached thereto)—

"(a) In the place of a district judge who is physically or mentally unable for the time being to perform his duties or who is or who is to be necessarily absent from his district;

"(b) In aid of a district judge who on account of the accumulation and urgency of business is unable to perform speedily all the work of his district;

"(c) In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

"(2) Such designation shall be made by the senior circuit judge whenever he is satisfied that condition (a), (b), or (c) exists and that the designation can be carried out without such prejudice to the regular work of the designated judge as to make it inadvisable.

"Sec. 14. (1) A circuit judge may be designated to act as district judge in any district of his circuit or of attached territory in any case where a district judge might be so designated.

"(2) Such designation may be made by the senior circuit judge (who may designate himself) whenever he is satisfied that the occasion therefor exists and that the public interests so require.

"(3) This section shall apply to the circuit judges formerly comprising the Commerce Court.

"Sec. 15. (1) A district judge of a district (called herein the home district) may be designated to act in any district of another circuit or its attached territory (called herein the aided district) in place of or in aid of a judge thereof, in case—

"(a) The senior circuit judge of the aided district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that the public interests require the designation of an additional judge or judges in such district and that it is impracticable to supply the need from among the judges of his circuit; and

"(b) The senior circuit judge of the circuit of the home district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that neither the business of that district nor of other districts in that circuit will suffer by the proposed designation.

"(2) Such designation may be made by the Chief Justice if, in his judgment, the public interests so require.

"(3) For the purposes of this section the District of Columbia is to be deemed one of the districts which may be aided and likewise a circuit, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is to be deemed a district court to which designations may be made, the justices of the Court of Appeals as circuit judges, and the Chief Justice thereof as the senior.

"Sec. 16. (1) The designation provided for by sections 13, 14, and 15 shall be in writing, signed by the judge or justice designating, and shall specify the district aided, the judge designated, and the period of service.

"(2) It shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered in the minutes of the district court of the aided district; and when so filed and entered shall be conclusive evidence of all the facts necessary to support it.

"(3) A certified copy shall at once be furnished by the clerk to the judge designated; also to the judge of the aided district; also (if under section 15) to the senior circuit judge of each of the two circuits.

"Sec. 17. (1) During the period of service named the judge designated under sections 13, 14, or 15 shall have all the duties, powers, and rights of the judge of the aided district (excepting the power of appointment to a statutory position or of permanent designation of newspaper or depository of funds): Provided, however, That in case a trial has been entered upon before such period of service has expired and has not been concluded, the period of service shall be deemed to be extended until the trial has been concluded.

"(2) Any designated judge who has held court in another district than his own shall have power, notwithstanding his absence from such district and the expiration of the time limit in his designation, to decide all matters which have been submitted to him within such district, to decide motions for new trials, settle bills of exceptions, certify or authenticate narratives of testimony, or perform any other act required by law or the rules to be performed in order to prepare any case so tried by him for review in an appellate court; and his action thereon in writing filed with the clerk of the court where the trial or hearing was had shall be as valid as if such action had been taken by him within that district and within the period of his designation.

"(3) Whenever, pursuant to any law, more than one district judge is authorized to hold court in the same district, each may, separately, but at the same time, hold a district court and discharge the judicial duties of the district judge therein, but subject to section 23 hereof.

"Sec. 18. (1) Any power given by section 13, 14, or 15 to the senior circuit judge may be exercised by the Chief Justice or associate justice allotted to that circuit, or by the circuit judge who, on account of the illness or absence from the circuit of the senior, is acting as such.

"(2) In case of vacancy in the office of Chief Justice, or his disability from illness or absence, any power given to him by this section or section 15 may be exercised by the senior associate justice."

"Sec. 4. That section 118 of the Judicial Code, as amended by the act approved February 25, 1919 (40 Stats. L., p. 1156), be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 118. There shall be in the second, seventh, and eighth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges; in the fourth circuit three circuit judges; and in each of the other circuits, three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. All circuit judges shall receive a salary of $8,500 a year each, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit and when appointed shall be a resident of the circuit for which he is appointed. The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or otherwise, as provided for and authorized in other sections of this act."

Section 1 of the bill provides for the appointment of 19 additional judges of the district courts of the United States in 17 districts, as follows: Two judges in each of the districts of Massachusetts and the southern district of New York, and one judge in each of the following-named districts: Eastern New York, eastern Pennsylvania, western Pennsylvania, northern Texas, eastern Michigan, northern Ohio, northern Illinois, eastern Illinois, Minnesota, eastern Missouri, eastern Oklahoma, Montana, northern California, southern California, Arizona, and northern Georgia.

The committee feel that the appointment of so many additional district judges at this time can only be justified by the fact that an emergency exists in the business of the courts of the districts named. This emergency has largely been brought about by the increase of business on account of recent legislation of Congress, an accumulation of business occurring during the recent war, the intricate character of the litigation in certain districts, and the large size of some districts making it difficult for one judge to do the work to advantage. The committee also feel that much of this accumulation of business is of a more or less temporary character, and have therefore provided that whenever a vacancy occurs in the office of any district judge appointed, pursuant to this act the same shall not be filled unless the Congress shall so provide.

Section 2 provides for an annual conference of the senior circuit judges of all the circuits, to be held at Washington, and to be presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States. It is made the duty of the senior district judges of each district to report to the senior circuit judge of his circuit the condition of business in his district with his recommendations, and such reports shall be presented to the conference by such senior circuit judges together with their recommendations and comments thereon. The Attorney General is also, on request of the Chief Justice, to report to the conference on matters pertaining to the several courts of the United States with particular reference to causes or proceedings in which the United States may be a party. The object of the conference is to "make a comprehensive survey of the conditions of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans and schedules for the assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or the condition of business indicates the need therefor," and to "submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business."

Section 3 amends sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 of the Judicial Code, so as to provide more efficient machinery for the designation, assignment, and transfer of district judges from one district to another district in the same circuit, from a district in one circuit to a district in another circuit, and the designation of a circuit judge to act as a district judge within his own circuit, and to arrange the provisions in a more logical order.

The amendment to section 13 covers the subject of assigning district judges within their home circuit, and includes everything on that subject found in House bill 9103, and in sections 15, 16, and 17 of the Judicial Code.

Section 14 of the Judicial Code as amended covers the subject of appointing circuit judges to hold the district court.

Section 15, as amended, covers the subject of assigning district judges to service outside of their home circuit. It includes what is now found in section 18 of the Judicial Code and section 5 of House bill 9103; also, it brings into the same frame the treatment of the District of Columbia courts found in section 7 of House bill 9103.

Section 16, as amended, covers the manner of designation in all cases. It includes the provisions on that subject made by sections 3 and 4 of House bill 9103 as affected by the remaining sections of the Judicial Code.

Section 17, as amended, unites into one section everything that is found about the duty and power of the designated judge, in House bill 9103, and in sections 13 to 18 of the present Judicial Code. It adds only the power to decide certain matters after the judge has gone home, which is the present practice.

Section 18, as amended, unites into one section the power of other judges to designate in addition to the primary one.

Section 4 of the bill amends section 118 of the Judicial Code only to provide for three circuit judges in the fourth judicial circuit instead of two as now provided in said section. This is the only circuit that now has only two judges.

A table showing the state of the business in several districts is hereto attached.

Amend the title to read as follows: "An act for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the fourth circuit."

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to call up the resolution (S. Res. 236) which I introduced on Monday last and which comes over under the rule.

Mr. CURTIS. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads [Mr. TOWNSEND] I ask that the resolution may go over without prejudice until his return.

Mr. SWANSON. The request of the Senator from Kansas is entirely proper. I think the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads should be here when the resolution is disposed of, and I ask that it may go over without prejudice and with the privilege of calling it up in the morning hour on any day after the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads shall have returned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go to the Table Calendar.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES—APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 213) to amend the Standing Rules of the Senate so that all general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 498) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 3154) for the relief of C. M. Reives; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3155) for the relief of L. S. Boyer; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARRISON (for Mr. UNDERWOOD):

A bill (S. 3156) to change the terms of the district court for the northern division of the southern district of Alabama; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 3157) for the relief of John G. Sessions; to the Committee on Claims.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On February 13, 1922:

S. 2124. An act to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands contained within sections 17 and 20, township 3 south, range 1 west, St. Stephens meridian, Alabama;

S. 2468. An act providing for the sale and disposal of public lands within the area heretofore surveyed as Tenderfoot Lake, State of Wisconsin; and

S. J. Res. 140. Joint resolution relative to payment of tuition for Indian children in Montana State public schools.

On February 14, 1922:

S. 2802. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920;

S. 2994. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.," approved October 5, 1917; and

S. J. Res. 99. Joint resolution providing a site upon public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., for the erection of a statue of Dante.

THE FOUR-POWER TREATY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask that the Secretary may read it.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 237), as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, all drafts or forms presented to or considered by the delegates of the United States, the British Empire, Japan, or France in considering the subject of the four-power treaty.

Also copies of all proceedings, records, negotiations, arguments, debates, discussions, and conversations which occurred between the delegates of the United States, the British Empire, Japan, or France, or any of them, covering the subject of the four-power treaty or the supplementary note which accompanied it or the supplementary agreement relating to it and subsequently signed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If there is no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, I should like to have it acted on at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is not here to-day, but expects to be here to-morrow. I ask that the resolution may go over under the rule. I understand that nearly all the matter asked for has been printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, Mr. President. I had the impression, when the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations asked to have certain documents printed, that there would be printed a full report of the negotiations which occurred between the American delegates and the delegates of France, Great Britain, and Japan which led up to the four-power treaty, but after a very careful examination of the records printed reveals the fact that there is absolutely nothing which records the negotiations or the conversations or forms of discussion or debates which led up to the four-power treaty.

The large volume which was printed (S. Doc. 126, 67th Cong., 2d sess.) is divided practically in two parts. The first half of it relates to the details of the discussion of the disarmament treaty. The latter half of the volume relates almost exclusively to discussions of the Chinese question. There is almost nothing at all explanatory of the four-power treaty, which, as we all know, is the most debatable of all those presented.

I may say to the Senate that this is not without precedent. We have the very best possible precedent for asking for the information. Inasmuch as great interest attaches to the four-power treaty, it seems to me there ought not to be any opposition to laying before the Senate the full details of the discussions.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say that this is all the more important because there was an open and notorious disagreement between the President of the United States and his chief representative upon the American delegation, the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, as to the meaning of the four-power treaty, and that disagreement led to some revelations at the time and finally to a supplementary note explanatory of the treaty itself.

I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that we are all familiar with the precedent to which he has alluded. I think the precedent also carried another element, namely, the reference of all such inquiries to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I will say further to the Senator that the Committee on Foreign Relations is to meet to-morrow morning, and in this connection I ask if he has any objection to having the resolution referred to that committee. I assure the Senator that when the committee meets to-morrow morning I shall very gladly join with him in asking for any proper documents which we have not yet received. I have not examined the bulky document which has been sent to us, and while I have no disposition to question the Senator's summary as to what it contains, it is altogether probable that the chairman of the committee, who will be here to-morrow, may be able to furnish any further information desired.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I see no need for referring this simple resolution asking for information to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I can see the propriety of having it go over until to-morrow, when the chairman of the committee will be here. It may be that the whole matter can be adjusted on the floor. At least, in preference to having it referred to the committee, I would like to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas that it lie on the table and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MOSES. Under the rule it would have to do that in any event, unless it were referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule. The morning business is closed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhul, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7077) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

RELIEF AGAINST DEPRESSION AND UNEMPLOYMENT.

Mr. KENYON. In accordance with the notice which I gave on yesterday, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2749) to prepare for future cyclical periods of depression and unemployment by systems of public works.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like first to have the bill read, and I then wish to explain its object to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Whereas a sound economic policy requires that a larger percentage of the public works and projects of the United States be undertaken and prosecuted during a period of major industrial depression and unemployment, when labor and capital are not fully employed in private industry, that a smaller percentage of such works and projects should be undertaken and prosecuted during a period when private industry is active and competing for the same men and material with resulting business strain and overextension, and that the prosecution of such works and projects should be utilized as a stabilizing force during a period of overexpansion as well as during a period of depression. It is the purpose of this act to grant the authority necessary to carry out this policy: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the head of each executive department is authorized to prepare and to periodically revise the necessary plans for all public works and projects within his jurisdiction concerning which a report has been requested by Congress or a committee thereof under the provisions of existing law, and to make the surveys and to prepare the engineering plans necessary for proposed public works and projects, in order that the work may be commenced immediately and properly prosecuted when an appropriation becomes available therefor.

Sec. 2. (a) That the Secretary of Commerce shall prepare and publish monthly reports as a supplement to the Current Survey of Business of the Bureau of the Census, or otherwise, concerning the trend of business conditions, the approach of periods of business strain and overextension, or of periods of business depression, in order that the President, the heads of the executive departments, the Congress, the governors of the respective States, the mayors of cities, and persons engaged in private industrial enterprises may properly prepare for and plan against such periods.

(b) The Secretary of Commerce shall transmit, with his recommendations, copies of such report to the President, the heads of departments, and to the Congress.

(c) The Secretary of Commerce shall utilize the available statistics collected or compiled by any department, bureau, office, or agency of the Federal Government or of a State, or by an industrial, banking, labor, or other association, and he is authorized to obtain such additional facts and statistics as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Sec. 3. That the head of each executive department is authorized, upon the advice of the President, to postpone the date of the commencement or retard the prosecution of such portions of the public works and projects within his jurisdiction as may be necessary, in order to prepare for and to prevent a further rise in the cylindrical wave of industrial expansion and resulting business strain and overextension and, within the appropriations therefor, to enter upon a maximum program of public works and projects as a preparation for and in order to counteract an impending period of industrial depression and unemployment. Where a time limit has been specifically provided within which any such work or project, or any part thereof, is to be commenced or completed, this section shall not be construed to extend or remove such limit.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think this is an important measure, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	Keyes	Phipps
Borah	Fletcher	McKinley	Poindexter
Brandegee	Gooding	McNary	Sheppard
Bursum	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Capper	Harris	Nelson	Sterling
Caraway	Harrison	New	Trammell
Culberson	Hitchcock	Newberry	Wadsworth
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Willis
Dial	Kellogg	Page
Ernst	Kenyon	Pepper

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Hefflin	Lenroot	Simmons	Swanson
Kendrick	Norris	Smith	Warren
Ladd	Pomerene	Stanley

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Cameron	Glass	McCormick	Shortridge
Colt	King	Ransdell	Stanfield

Mr. RANSDALL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BROUSSARD] is detained from the Senate on official business. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the following Senators are detained from the Senate in attendance upon a meeting of the Committee on Finance: The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, from the recommendations of the Unemployment Conference which was held at Washington some time ago has come this bill. I have been anxious that some concrete thing be passed by the Congress as a result of that conference, and for the purpose of helping the situation as to unemployment in the country.

I want to say now that I do not believe this bill will accomplish very much as to the present situation of unemployment, nor do I believe that it will be a panacea for that condition, or a solve-all for the future. I believe that it will merely be helpful.

This bill does not seek to assist the unemployment situation with charity or by any abnormal expenditures. It carries no appropriation, but simply proceeds on the theory that public works in the country should be stimulated during times of industrial depression and held back during times when there is great activity in all lines of business and great demands for labor and great demands for material. That is the theory of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not exactly understand that. Suppose that one corporation in one line of business is very active in doing business and another is not. Does the Senator mean that the power is given to stop the business which is going on and is prosperous?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no. What I mean is this: Here is a general market for labor. Private industry is after labor. Labor is being employed at good wages. In those times there is not much necessity for Government work from the labor standpoint; so under this bill the President could hold back certain parts of public work, and then concentrate that work at the time of industrial depression. It does not interfere, of course, with anybody's private business.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he does not think section 3 gives very broad arbitrary power to the President—who would act, perhaps, on the recommendation of the head of a department—to postpone work or operations in any one portion of the country and to carry it on in another, and to stop work in one part of the country and proceed with it somewhere else, and delay it as far as he might see fit, in order that, looking ahead, he might arrange conditions so that what he conceived to be for the public good might be accomplished?

The objection to this, to my mind, is that after Congress has authorized certain public works to be prosecuted, and has passed its judgment upon those public works, feeling that the necessity is there for the prosecution of that kind of work, it is proposed then to vest in the President, in a way, the power to nullify absolutely the acts of Congress, the expressed will of Congress, with reference to carrying on those works.

I suggest to the Senator that it seems to me that is a very broad power to put in the hands of the Executive, and the question in my mind is whether it is a safe thing and a wise thing to do. Of course, I do not question but that the present Executive would exercise great wisdom and splendid judgment in connection with that matter; but we know that the President has not the time to consider all these details and that he has to depend upon the heads of the different departments for their recommendations. The question in my mind is about the wisdom of vesting that extensive power practically in the heads of the different departments.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it is true that a good deal of power is lodged in the President under this bill; but I call the Senator's attention to the concluding paragraph of section 3:

Where a time limit has been specifically provided within which any such work or project, or any part thereof, is to be commenced or completed, this section shall not be construed to extend or remove such limit.

So that if Congress had provided a time limit the President could not do it.

I will say to the Senator that, as he knows, appropriations have been made for public buildings. They have been simply held up in view of the general financial situation of the country, and this very thing is going on now without any well-regulated plan, such as there would be under this bill. That is my answer to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I will ask the Senator from Iowa whether, under this bill, the heads of departments could not pile up against the Government a large deficiency bill, which the Congress would be legally bound to pay?

Mr. KENYON. No, I think not; because the works are merely to be planned and surveys and engineering plans made. That would cost something, of course; but I am advised that this work could be started without any appropriation, and none has been provided for here.

That simply stands in readiness to be used when Congress makes the appropriation. A bureau head could not stop anything and could not start anything. The heads of the executive departments would take up the matter with the President of the United States, and then he would determine whether a certain amount of this work could be retarded for a year or two.

Let me illustrate the matter in this way:

Suppose, under the reports which are provided under section 2, that the Secretary of Commerce is getting reports from the country—and I may say that we have no reports now that amount to anything, practically, as to the situation of unemployment—or suppose he sees that an industrial depression is to come. The President, under the appropriations made by Congress for certain lines of work, holds back this year 20 per cent, the next year he holds back 20 per cent, and the following year 20 per cent. Then suppose the depression starts. They have this reservoir of employment, 60 per cent more, to put right into that depression. That is the object of it.

The Federal Reserve Board is a reservoir for credit. This is a reservoir for labor to draw on. It will not be large; it will not accomplish a great deal, because the amount of labor engaged in public work is a very small percentage of the entire labor employed in all the work of the country. I will show what it is; but it is a little, perhaps, over 1 per cent.

Mr. President, the economic theory that I am trying to advance is the only proposition I have known to be before Congress at this session to do anything at all for labor, and I have hoped that we might give it some serious consideration. This bill was reported out of the committee unanimously. I think the committee felt that it would not accomplish a great deal, but that it would accomplish something, and that it was worth trying.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. PHIPPS. I do not recall having been polled on the matter of reporting out the bill, perhaps on account of absence during the holidays; but I have no recollection of any hearings having been conducted on this bill. I should like to ask the Senator what course was pursued in the committee in handling this measure?

Mr. KENYON. I am glad to inform the Senator, because I have had such difficulty in ever getting a quorum of the committee. I do not speak of it in criticism, but I think one of the most discouraging things about the American Congress, especially the Senate, is the fact that it is almost impossible to get quorums of committees. It has been almost impossible for the Committee on Education and Labor to get a quorum. I will say to the Senator that we had hearings on this bill and they have been printed. I think the Senator was in the West at the time.

Mr. PHIPPS. They must have been very short indeed. I was absent a very few days.

Mr. KENYON. There never has been a meeting of the committee without notice being sent to all the members, and I think the Senator from Colorado has been as diligent in attending the sessions of the committee as any of the members. Hearings were had, and the hearings are printed, and they were very interesting hearings.

Mr. PHIPPS. It just so happens that I have not had my attention called to the hearings, or to the action of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. I think at the time we voted on the bill the Senator was absent. I will state that this bill has been endorsed by the officers of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, by leading economists and professors, and by the American Federation of Labor, which is a very remarkable situation.

Mr. PHIPPS. Was any report ever submitted with the bill?

Mr. KENYON. No.

Mr. PHIPPS. No report was made?

Mr. KENYON. No report was made.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to ask his construction of subdivision (c), on page 3:

The Secretary of Commerce shall utilize the available statistics collected or compiled by any department, bureau, office, or agency of the Federal Government or of a State, or by an industrial, banking, labor, or other association, and he is authorized to obtain such additional facts and statistics as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

What is the Senator's construction of the language requiring the Secretary of Commerce to utilize statistics collected and compiled not only by any governmental agency but by any private agency?

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that the Secretary will get all the facts he can. The Bureau of Labor Statistics now, in gathering facts, have been compelled to go into reports of all kinds, private and others, the reports of the Bureau of Economic Research, and so forth; and that provision simply means that the Secretary is to utilize every available means of getting at the truth as to the labor situation.

The Senator will remember that in the conferences that took place the statement was made that there were over 5,000,000 men out of employment in this country. That was denied; it was disputed. A gentleman connected with the Government, who has made a great study of this matter, told me a couple of weeks ago that there were 7,000,000. There is absolutely no way, apparently, of getting authentic statistics now. This would enable the Secretary of Commerce to utilize every available fact he could get bearing on the question.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that should be mandatory?

Mr. KENYON. No; I do not think so.

Mr. LENROOT. Would the Senator object to the word "may" instead of "shall"?

Mr. KENYON. Not at all. I do not think it should be mandatory. I think it is for him to get all the information he can. I will be very glad to accept an amendment making that change.

In the report of the President's conference on unemployment, pages 96 and 97, this was stated:

When public works are done in greatest volume during periods of active industry the same men and material are being competed for by both public and private employers. The inevitable result is to raise the height of the crest of the wave of cyclical business inflation and to cause a greater crash when the heightened wave breaks, as it always does.

In a growing country like the United States the aggregate volume of public works of cities, counties, States, and of the Federal Government is so great that if a larger proportion were executed in years of depression than in years of active industry a powerful stabilizing influence would be exerted.

The leadership of the Federal Government in expanding its public works during periods of depression and contracting execution in periods of active industry requires no great change from existing procedure. Already the executing agency enjoys great latitude as to the period in which the period of intensive execution to synchronize with major periods of industrial depression.

Certain works of the Federal Government, such as reclamation, flood prevention, river and harbor work, roads, and public buildings, are peculiarly suited for consideration as large undertakings covering a long period and capable of elasticity of execution to synchronize with cycles of business depression.

A committee of the conference was empowered to make specific recommendations for utilizing a percentage of the ordinary necessary public works of the Federal, State, and city governments as a reserve against future periods of unemployment and industrial depression. This bill embodies the first steps recommended. It makes no provision for the present industrial depression and carries no appropriation. It seeks to adopt as a Federal policy the expansion and contraction of Federal public works to accord with the periods of fall or rise in private industry and employment.

In embarking upon a policy of long-time planning of public works and framing a program that will lighten public-work construction in years of prosperous private industry and concentrate it in depression years is the issue this bill brings up.

The measure of relief concentrating public work can bring is not large, but there is a great incentive to it as to States, counties, and municipalities.

I want to cite the interesting economic fact that in the whole history of the Government up to 1903 the periods of depression came practically every 10 years; they were almost unailing. Since 1903 the periods of depression have come every five or eight years, but it is perfectly certain that there will be the lean years as well as the fat years.

In 1914 we had a serious depression. We had unemployment. The wages in 1913 of mining, manufacturing, railway, express, and miscellaneous hired labor were $16,180,000,000. In the depression year of 1914 the wages paid for the same lines of industry were $15,077,000,000, or a reduction of a little over a billion. If we had had a measure of this kind on the statute books, with that depression approaching, if 22 per cent of the public-work construction of the preceding five years could have been held back, it would have put in an extra $183,000,000 of wages, or one-sixth of the total wage reduction. If it continued for 10 years, it would be a third instead of a sixth, so that the load of the major depression would be lifted at least one-sixth by some policy of this kind carefully worked out.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, the Senator apparently attributes to the executive branch of the Government, without regard to party, an economic and administrative perspicacity which I have never been able to find in them.

Mr. KENYON. Not equal to the congressional perspicacity.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I do not want to pass compliments with the Senator. Who, in the administration of any government, clearly foresaw the time of the onset of the present depression? There were a few academic economists, I think, who forecast it. In the world of business, certainly, men of the highest authority, of presumed intelligence and information, believed a year ago last September that a few weeks, or a few months, at most, would see us on the upward curve in the resumption of industry.

I raise that point because the argument of the Senator presumes that public works, needed or believed to be needed by communities and the Congress, would be held back upon the judgment of executive experts for long periods, until, in the judgment of those same experts, we could go ahead.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, they could not be over long periods. There is a good deal in what the Senator says, but, as I said a few moments ago, the economic history of the country shows that up to 1903 the cyclical periods have come regularly about every 10 years. Since 1903 we have had them every five or eight years.

Mr. McCORMICK. Of course, there is no one who can be prophet enough to know just when they are coming.

Mr. KENYON. The object of the second section is to enable the Secretary of Commerce to collect all the information he can get and to issue bulletins, so that business will not be taken unawares, but will know just what is coming on.

It is said that will bring on scares; but the warnings are given now by unreliable sources, and the result might be much better if it were done by some governmental agency simply telling the truth about the conditions.

Mr. McCORMICK. I will not hold that the other sources are reliable, but I do hold that we can not presume that the Department of Commerce could reliably assume a responsibility purposed to be vested in it by paragraph (a) of section 2. Let me say at this time that I subscribe as cordially as does the Senator to the principle of this bill, but under sections 2 and 3 it purposes to vest a discretion in the Executive and to impose upon the Executive a responsibility which might work to the inestimable injury of industry and labor in this country.

Mr. KENYON. It might; and, of course, if the Executive wanted to injure business or industry or anything else he could do it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I do not presume he would want to, because that would injure him. I only hold that if he were called upon, or if the Secretary of Commerce were called upon, to act under sections 2 and 3, through mere misjudgment the Secretary of Commerce or the President by Executive order or Executive pronouncement might work havoc in industry and inestimable injury to labor.

Mr. KENYON. They could now, could they not?

Mr. McCORMICK. Yes; but this makes the action mandatory.

Mr. KENYON. No, not mandatory. It is entirely up to the President.

Mr. McCORMICK. If they could not, what virtue is there in it?

Mr. KENYON. We are making nothing mandatory. The Senator made a pretty good speech here yesterday on "Trust the President."

Mr. McCORMICK. I think not.

Mr. KENYON. The President of the United States, when these matters are brought before him by the heads of executive departments, will not make some fool order about them, I imagine.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think the Senator would not hold, if he had followed my speech, that it was upon the subject of "Trust the President." In view of the President's recent appointment to the bench, my confidence in him is enhanced.

Mr. KENYON. I am sure it would be; but we assume that the Secretary of Commerce has certain information that trouble is coming, maybe a year away, maybe two years away. All this does is to enable the President to postpone or retard the prosecution of part of the public work and concentrate it at another time.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think paragraph (a) is the most dangerous provision.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator if there would not be danger of precipitating the very thing he wishes to avoid if they were mistaken? In my judgment, no matter how honest they were, if they actually began desisting from the prosecution of certain public works, the whole public not being advised as to just the reasons which caused them to take that precaution, it might magnify the thing and precipitate the very condition the Senator is hoping to mitigate by this legislation.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, if the Secretary of Commerce should issue a bulletin that there is going to be a panic on the 1st day of September, 1923, it would help to precipitate it. I assume men are not going to do things of that kind. This simply provides for a recitation of the business conditions. The Senator knows that within the last few years, during war times, we appropriated for certain things the Government was to do which were not carried out at once because the cost of construction was so tremendous. I do not think it made any very great hubbub in the country or that anybody has been afraid that trouble was going to follow from it.

Mr. SMITH. The public was thoroughly advised of the reasons why the work was not carried on, that there were extravagances which had been practiced, and that there was a lack of urgency for it; but suppose in the ordinary course of events the time approached when there was disturbance in business more or less, and suppose there were evidences here and there which might not be of sufficient magnitude, or whose causes might not be so far-reaching as to ultimately develop into a business panic, and suppose while those symptoms were manifest, and business was attempting to adjust itself, the Government began to stop work in certain places, began to retrench, to get ready for trouble, in order to avoid the very conditions which they feared were about to arise; the public would be advised, the newspapers throughout the country would begin to publish that the Government had quit work at such and such a place and that at another place it was retrenching, and the psychology of it would be that the public would magnify the cause.

So I am asking the Senator if that of itself would not create an impression in the minds of the public that if the Government, with all its facilities for gathering knowledge and for getting information as to conditions, was beginning to reef and prepare they should do the same, and if it would not precipitate the very thing the Senator is attempting to avoid?

Mr. KENYON. Of course I see the force in the Senator's suggestion, and I have thought a good deal about it. If it was unwisely handled it would result in some such situation, that is true. Any question that may come up to the Government, if it is not wisely handled, makes trouble, and if it is wisely handled it may be beneficial.

Mr. SMITH. The question of the wisdom of handling these things finds its sanction in whether or not the Government would take this action before or after the symptoms were so pronounced that everybody knew it was intended.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator, for instance, think the Government could hold back in this way? Suppose we had a number of public buildings to be constructed and the Government were to hold back one year 20 per cent and the next year 20 per cent, in order to have this reservoir for labor. Does the Senator think the mere holding back of the doing of that work would be injurious to the business condition of the country?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know. I was just taking the purpose of the bill as I read it, which is to retrench in the face of what might be a serious condition that might develop. For that reason, unless it was incorporated in the bill that full notice should be given to the public as to what were the conditions, it might lead to an unsatisfactory condition.

Mr. KENYON. That is what the Secretary of Commerce does now. He issues a monthly bulletin that goes out and the people know what is going on. We have now the survey of current business which is issued every month by the Department of Commerce. That would, under a section of the bill, contain more than a mere survey, but this has been going to the country, so we have one in a general way and when the people come in contact with this they know what are the general business conditions of the country.

Mr. SMITH. Merely giving this survey would not help very much. The Senator and I have had experience where prices have gone down and there was more or less business depression, but it was a healthy one, it was from perfectly natural causes, and as soon as those were over the country rebounded easily.

The thing I fear would be that a mere publishing of a bulletin by the Government, stating the business conditions, would not necessarily mean in the minds of the public that any real tangible disaster was imminent, but if, coupled with the bulletin, the Government begins to retrench and take its forces away from work, people will say, "it is of sufficient seriousness and of sufficient importance for the Government to begin to conserve its labor forces and its money, and therefore we had better retrench," and it would create a psychology that could not be controlled. That is the only point I was attempting to make.

There is quite a difference between issuing just a formal statement as to the business conditions of the country, and coupling with that formal statement a further statement in which it is shown that the Government is beginning to retrench. The public, not being thoroughly advised, as the Government is, as to why the Government is doing those things, might start a panic, just like an avalanche, without rhyme or reason, like the panic of 1907, and the whole world would be shaken to its foundations without any adequate cause save the psychology precipitated by just a slight unfortunate condition.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator is borrowing quite a good deal of trouble. The panics which we have had in the past have occurred without anything of this kind being invoked, but I know there is some force in what the Senator said. I think where the bulletins are issued showing the exact facts and the country knows the facts it is better. There is nothing to be gained by keeping the facts from the country. The country makes up its mind from the facts. We can not have too much truthful information before the country as to conditions.

If, coupled with that, the Government commences the policy of conserving and retarding public work in order to assist when the crash comes—it may not be a crash, but when the depression comes—it would be helpful. The Senator makes the argument that that would help along the crash or the depression. That is to be thought about.

Mr. SMITH. The point I was making was that it would help precipitate perhaps a crisis that might otherwise be tided over, because there is nothing so sensitive as business and commerce, especially where there is liquid capital invested for quick turnover. If the Government gives out these bulletins and there are weak spots emphasized, showing such and such conditions are prevailing that are not as promising as they might be, and coupled with that is the overt act in that the Government begins to retrench here and there, there is danger. The public would attach infinitely more importance to the overt act than they would to the mere statement, and others who were getting along and did not see the danger and were not feeling it might be affected. The very effort of the overt act on the part of the Government beginning to retrench might cause everybody else to stop who were in a position to want to take care of their property, and thus precipitate a tightness and a crisis that might otherwise be avoided.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, we have the reports, showing the facts, coming out monthly. That would not be a shock to the business world. Even now there is nothing to prevent every kind of frenzied statement being given out about business and industrial conditions. Would it not be better to have something that is really authentic, something the people can understand and believe in, than to have the danger arising from unauthorized and inaccurate frenzied statements?

Mr. SMITH. As the Senator is very well aware, in these business depressions the mere fact that certain Government operations have gone on at full speed has had a reassuring effect upon the public rather than a deterring effect.

Mr. KENYON. That is getting exactly at the point which is the purpose of the bill. When that feeling comes the Government starts and accelerates the municipalities, the cities, and the counties to go ahead with their work. The mere part of the Government would be small, because it has only about 1 per cent of the entire labor of the country engaged in its work, so it accomplishes the very thing the Senator is afraid of. His idea is that it will create that condition before we get down to business.

Mr. SMITH. My idea is that if the Government begins to retrench in order to get a full head of steam when the crash comes, it may precipitate the crash which we are then trying to avoid.

Mr. KENYON. It will be used before the crash comes, and the department will not wait for the crash to come. It would be used to avoid the crash.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My understanding of the provision is that when the President and the head of the department, the Secretary of Commerce, apprehend that business may be slowing up, they do not start to intrench, but they start to increase expenditures and employ more men. When business is expanding they slow up on the governmental activities.

Mr. KENYON. That is the purpose of the bill exactly.

Mr. SMITH. Then I have misunderstood the purpose of the bill. According to the statement of the Senator from Connecticut, the idea is that during a flood time the Government will not go ahead.

Mr. KENYON. It will hold back then, of course.

Mr. SMITH. And when it begins to see a time of stress coming, it will then go ahead with the full employment of labor.

Mr. KENYON. That is what I have been trying to say for a good while, but the Senator from Connecticut has stated it in very few words. When we have a maximum of private employment, then the Government will hold back. When it commences to go down, then the Government will concentrate on its work.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In other words, if business through the country is slack and it is desired to help out labor that has been employed in private business, if the Government can then step in and employ a lot of the unemployed labor and perhaps get the advantage of cheaper prices of construction, it tends to keep labor better employed. When business is good, instead of rushing into the labor market and competing with employers of labor at rising prices for labor upon construction, it defers or slows down Government construction, and private industry is relieved of Government competition, and the Government projects generally can wait a little while for the surely recurring period of industrial depression.

Mr. KENYON. That is the exact philosophy of the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My only objection is this—and I refer to it now only because I do not expect to be on the floor longer. I realize how embarrassing it must be to the Senator, who is endeavoring to make a consecutive statement upon the general features of the bill, to be interrupted with special questions as to particular portions of the bill, but I am obliged to leave the Senate very shortly.

Mr. KENYON. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Section 3 reads:

That the head of each executive department is authorized, upon the advice of the President, to postpone the date of the commencement or retard the prosecution of such portions of the public works and projects within his jurisdiction as may be necessary, in order to prepare for and to prevent a further rise in the cyclical wave of industrial expansion and resulting business strain and overextension.

It seems to me that the power given to the head of a department, even upon the advice of the President, to postpone the date of the commencement of a work that Congress has ordered to be commenced within a particular time, or before a particular date, is a pretty large one.

Mr. KENYON. I hope the Senator will read lines 19, 20, 21, and 22 and see if they do not cover the point.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. The lines which the Senator suggests I read are:

Where a time limit has been specifically provided within which any such work or project, or any part thereof, is to be commenced or completed, this section shall not be construed to extend or remove such limit.

Mr. KENYON. That was intended to cover the very objection the Senator is raising, that no power should be granted to set aside what the Congress has done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the words "such limit" refer to the date of the commencement, it would cover it; but where a time limit has been specifically provided within which any such work or project is to be commenced or completed, it may not apply. However, if the Senator is satisfied that wherever Congress has authorized or directed a thing to be done before a particular date the provision I have read does not apply to it, I have no objection.

Mr. KENYON. That was the purpose of it. If it does not cover that, I want it to do so.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. I also dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I am obliged to leave the Chamber. I appreciate the Senator's remarks about my diligence in attendance upon the meetings of the committee. I think I can say that I have never missed a called meeting unless it was interfered with by another committee hearing or meeting. However, I was unavoidably absent at the time the bill was considered by the committee, and my attention has not been called to the hearings, which I understand are printed.

I wish to direct the Senator's attention to the language of section 1 of the bill, and I think in order to understand it the entire section would have to be read:

That the head of each executive department is authorized to prepare and to periodically revise the necessary plans for all public works and projects within his jurisdiction concerning which a report has been requested by Congress or a committee thereof under the provisions of existing law, and to make the surveys and to prepare the engineering plans necessary for proposed public works and projects, in order that the work may be commenced immediately and properly prosecuted when an appropriation becomes available therefor.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that engineering plans necessary for such works will involve the expenditure of perhaps 10 per cent of the entire amount for the undertaking, and therefore I inquire where authority is conferred for the expenditure of that money? Can we in a bill such as this confer blanket authority for all time to expend for the preparation of plans in the engineering necessary in public works?

Mr. KENYON. They can only carry out that provision to the extent of the appropriation which they may now have, and I am informed that they can commence the work without additional appropriation.

Mr. PHIPPS. I am afraid that would not be the interpretation of the section, as I read it.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, I think so, because there is absolutely no appropriation, so they could not spend it.

Mr. PHIPPS. If we connect up the entire thing it would read:

To make the surveys and to prepare the engineering plans necessary for proposed works and projects * * * when an appropriation becomes available therefor.

Where is the appropriation for the surveys and engineering plans? How can the departments do what is contemplated until an appropriation has been provided?

Mr. KENYON. They can not unless it is possible to do it out of appropriations which they already have.

Mr. PHIPPS. That would be my understanding under the general law, but I do not think this is quite in accordance with the general law.

Mr. KENYON. It is the idea that this measure shall not at this time carry any appropriation. Eventually there will have to be some appropriation to carry it out, but not now. It is merely intended that the department shall do what they can with the funds they have on hand. They assure me that they can do a large part of what is contemplated by the bill without any more funds.

Mr. PHIPPS. If they have been properly called upon by the Congress or by a committee thereof to report on a project that would necessarily involve the making of some preparatory plans, and when it comes to working plans and surveys they involve very heavy expense which can not be taken care of out of the ordinary appropriations allowed the various bureaus for their maintenance.

Mr. KENYON. They can not go ahead under this bill in excess of the funds they have. If they can not do the work, then they will have to come to Congress and ask for an appropriation.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BURSUM. I simply desire to make a suggestion to which I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado. Would not the effect of this proposition be that the department would be requested by Congress to supply certain information and to report, and in the event there was not a sufficient amount of funds on hand, the natural thing would be for Congress to appropriate for the specific purpose, and it might be made an emergency matter?

Mr. PHIPPS. It would be the duty of the department to report back to Congress that it could not furnish the information unless provided with the necessary appropriation.

Mr. BURSUM. That would be the natural consequence. That is the limitation, as I understand, imposed by this bill. It is aimed only to cover such matters as Congress may designate.

Mr. KENYON. No; I wish to be perfectly fair about that; I do not desire any misunderstanding to arise. The Senator will observe, beginning in line 8, that each department is authorized to make surveys and to prepare plans.

Mr. BURSUM. Exactly; but limited to such information as has been called for by Congress.

Mr. PHIPPS. I do not think it is limited to that under the language of the section, but, on the contrary, it is broad and comprehensive enough to cover any kind of public work that the head of a department may think necessary or advisable.

Mr. KENYON. Where he has the funds on hand to provide for it.

Mr. BURSUM. Section 1 provides:

That the head of each executive department is authorized to prepare and to periodically revise the necessary plans for all public works and projects within his jurisdiction concerning which a report has been requested by Congress or a committee thereof under the provisions of existing law.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; but then the section goes on to mention other things which the departments may do.

Mr. BURSUM. But they must be done upon the request of Congress.

Mr. KENYON. It is not the intention, I will say to the Senator, to have the making of surveys and engineering plans limited to those things which Congress may request, but it is for the department head to go ahead and plan some public work.

Mr. BURSUM. Even if that be true, if they are short of money, the natural thing would be to call upon Congress for an appropriation. I do not see that the objection is serious at all.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think it is, either. Mr. President, I will be glad to discuss this bill, but I think there is really no use doing so at this time, for there are only five or six Senators present.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KENYON. I am going to yield the floor, for there seems to be no particular interest in the pending measure.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in my opinion, the pending bill must either not be taken seriously or be taken extremely seriously, for I think it puts upon the Government certain obligations and certain duties which it is absolutely beyond the power of the Government or of man to intelligently discharge.

Mr. President, there is a book to which I occasionally refer, not so often perhaps as I should, but in the opening book of the Book of Books I find the story of Pharaoh's dreams. Pharaoh was a gentleman of prominence in those days, which was at least before the present administration. He had a dream, and the dream ran after this fashion:

And, behold, there came up out of the river seven well-favored kine, and fat-fleshed; and they fed in a meadow.

And, behold, seven other kine came up after them out of the river, ill favored and lean-fleshed, and stood by the other kine upon the bank of the river.

And the ill-favored and lean-fleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favored and fat kine. So Pharaoh awoke.

Pharaoh also had another dream, but we will omit that. He sought an interpretation of his dreams. A young man named Joseph was called upon to interpret them. Joseph had established a reputation for the correct interpretation of dreams, and Joseph said:

The seven good kine are seven years, and the seven good ears are seven years; the dream is one.

And the seven thin and ill-favored kine, that came up after them, are seven years; and the seven empty ears, blasted with the east wind, shall be seven years of famine.

This is the thing which I have spoken unto Pharaoh: What God is about to do, he sheweth unto Pharaoh.

So that these recurring periods of plenty and of famine have been going on for some time. There seems to have been devised no successful method of arresting their progress, and I very much doubt if one can be provided even by the Congress of the United States.

I notice that section 3 of the bill provides:

That the head of each executive department is authorized, upon the advice of the President, to postpone the date of the commencement or retard the prosecution of such portions of the public works and projects within his jurisdiction as may be necessary, in order to prepare for and to prevent a further rise in the cyclical wave of industrial expansion.

I am not entirely clear as to just what this reference to cyclical waves means, but I suppose I know. Mr. President, who is going to guarantee the correctness of any man's prognostication as to what is going to occur in the business world? The wisest business heads have failed to do it; they all know, just as everybody in every walk of life knows, that we have recurring periods of prosperity and depression. I think that this bill puts the Government really into competition with Mother Shipton, Hicks, the weather man, and other prognosticators of greater or less degrees of success and conspicuousness. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the bill puts the Government almost in the bucket-shop business.

Suppose the Secretary of Commerce, under the authorization of section 2, should predict a period of depression; that would be pretty good advice to the man who wants to utilize it for the purpose of buying futures. I repeat my opening statement, that it seems to me that the bill must either not be taken seriously or that it must be taken very seriously. That feature of it alone is one which, in my judgment, renders the enactment of this bill of at least very doubtful expediency.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Biblical selection rendered by the elder from Indiana is interesting, but it will be remembered, too, that Joseph set up a reserve fund of grain against the seven years of famine, just as we are trying to do something here in setting up a reserve unemployment fund.

Yes, Mr. President, the bill should be taken seriously or not at all. It is designed to do something to meet a most distressing situation. If it is a dream it is a dream of some of the best economists of the United States and of the world, who, perhaps, have given as much study to it as has the Senator from Indiana.

The Canadian Government is going much further than the United States would go under a bill of this kind. They are going ahead with systems of public work to provide against unemployment. The unemployment situation in this country may not trouble some gentlemen; they may sneer and deride any attempt, however small and however humble, to help solve the unemployment situation. This is the first attempt which has been made. If the Senator from Indiana has anything better, let us have it. It is very easy to deride and sneer at any attempt of this character.

Mr. NEW and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KENYON. Let me yield, first, to the Senator from Indiana, and then I will yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa speaks of my sneering at the bill. I am not sneering at the bill at all.

Mr. KENYON. To call it a "bucket-shop bill" comes pretty near sneering at it.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will permit me, I think that he is prone to take any man's opposition to a measure in which he is interested as personal to himself or as a sneer upon what he is undertaking.

Mr. KENYON. Not at all.

Mr. NEW. That is not intended at all. The criticisms I make of this bill are seriously made and well-intentioned. They are not intended as sneers or anything of the kind.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator think that calling it a "bucket-shop bill" is pretty nearly a sneer at the bill? I am not in the habit of trying to help bucket-shop bills, and I have no objection to anybody finding any fault he can with the bill. I have not any particular pride in the bill. It grew out of the unemployment conference here, and Mr. Hoover and other men connected with that conference felt that this proposition should be carried out into law. Other nations have done the same thing. It has not been a dream with them, as the Senator suggests.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if the Senator will further indulge me for one moment, I do think that that very criticism is a sound one. I do not believe for a minute that a Secretary of Commerce would willingly or purposely make predictions with the idea of having them turned to that kind of account at all, but I do believe that he might be honestly mistaken. I do believe that his judgment might be honestly wrong, his forecast a mistaken one, and that information might be fed to him by designing people that would be calculated and intended to cause him to make predictions that were founded upon misinformation rather than upon solid fact, and that in that way they might be turned to very unfavorable account, and be open to the very objection that I have just urged.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in the first place, where is there any power for the Secretary of Commerce to make predictions or prognostications? Under section 3 he merely publishes the reports; and reports of a similar nature are being published now. Has the Senator from Indiana seen those—the Current Surveys of Business, published every month?

Mr. NEW. Yes; I have.

Mr. KENYON. What prediction is there about those of panics, or what panics have those brought on?

Mr. NEW. I think the bill must be taken as a whole, and the authority to have these predictions made is given in section 3, for instance, if not in section 2. That is the very purpose of it—to have advance predictions made as to what is probably going to occur in the business world.

Mr. KENYON. The purpose of it is to give the facts and then let the consequences follow; and that is being done now in a way that would not be as substantial or merit the standing that the reports would merit under this bill, because there is no particular law to cover it.

I spoke of Canada. France has followed this idea, and has not thought it was a dream.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask, for information, as to when either Canada or France adopted a plan like this? What was the date of it?

Mr. KENYON. Canada has gone even further than this, but I have not the date.

I will say to the Senator that in 1902 and in 1907 an inquiry was made in France by the minister of public works into the effect of depressions upon railways, and it was reported as feasible for the railways to distribute their orders over a full period of the industrial cycle so as to increase the volume in a year of depression.

In 1908 a commission set up by the President of France reported favorably upon plans for allocating public contracts so as to compensate in part for the lack of private contracts in bad times.

In Great Britain before the war a sum was appropriated by Parliament to be expended upon roads during future periods of unemployment only.

During the post-war period Great Britain is pushing an extensive program of public works, including great arterial roads about the outskirts of London. Great Britain does not find it such a dream to try to provide some method of public works to help the unemployed.

The Belgian Government set up what is called the national crisis fund for the execution of public works during periods of unemployment only.

Czechoslovakia, a new country, in 1919 adopted legislation compelling communes and industries to undertake public works, the State paying two-thirds of the wages of those employed. They have not yet discovered the philosophy of the Senator from Indiana, that it was all a dream.

Switzerland has a traditional policy of subsidizing local public works in order to cover the additional expense resulting from the employment of untrained workers.

Some of these measures would be undesirable in the United States.

Mr. President, just a few weeks ago the President of the United States wrote a letter on this subject. It might be well for the Senator from Indiana to read that letter. I ask to have it placed in the RECORD. Also, I should like to have printed in the RECORD portions of the President's address of welcome to the conference on unemployment, and Secretary Hoover's address at the opening of the conference on unemployment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have these matters read?

Mr. KENYON. No; I think not. I ask to have them published as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, they will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have read the letter from the President, which the Senator says refers to this bill.

Mr. KENYON. No; it does not refer to this bill. It refers to the general subject, but not to this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. If it has any application to this bill, I should like to have it read.

Mr. KENYON. It has application to the question of doing public work.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 26, 1922.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The response of employing interests throughout the country, to the appeal for special effort to afford employment to the greatest possible extent during the winter, has produced highly gratifying results. Thanks to this fine cooperation, the situation has been much less difficult during the winter thus far than it might otherwise have been.

The most difficult period of the winter, however, is still before us, and I am therefore writing you to bespeak the utmost cooperation that your department may be able to afford in extending further employment.

States and cities, as well as private companies and individuals, have taken more comprehensive and effective measures than probably have ever been taken before in such a situation. The natural self-reliance of the American citizen has been supplemented in these times by neighborly help, by part-time work, by odd jobs; employers have, to a marked degree, exerted themselves to find work for employees, and have anticipated repair and construction operations, which otherwise might have been taken up later.

City and State authorities have generally organized to provide work and prevent or alleviate distress due to lack of employment. In substantially every city where the need has appeared the mayor has appointed emergency committees to lead the community's action. Municipal bonds have been sold to an unprecedented degree, to provide for construction as early as possible of needed municipal work. In this way much winter work has been provided.

Of course, I do not need to urge upon you the vital importance of having the Federal Government also do everything possible, in a sound way, to ameliorate the situation. My purpose in writing you now is to ask you to have a thorough examination made forthwith of all repair and construction plans in your department, to determine what necessary work, which otherwise would not have been undertaken until later in the year, might be advanced so as to provide employment during the months immediately ahead of us, and to suggest that so far as is possible and practicable such work should be undertaken at once.

The response of the general public to appeals for the widest possible employment has been so generous and effective that I think we should be the more concerned to have the agencies of the Federal Government do their very utmost share in this humane effort.

Very sincerely,

WARREN G. HARDING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to have the addresses to which he has referred printed in the RECORD?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have them printed in the RECORD, but they need not be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From President Harding's address of welcome to the Conference on Unemployment.]

If out of your councils there comes a remedy which all America helpfully may apply to-day, it may be helpfully employed some time again when similar conditions are encountered. * * * Fundamentally sound, financially strong, industrially unimpaired, commercially consistent, and politically unafraid, there ought to be work for everybody in the United States who chooses to work.

There is no economic failure so terrible in its import as that of a country possessing a surplus of every necessity of life in which numbers, willing and anxious to work, are deprived of these necessities. It simply can not be if our moral and economic system is to survive. It is the duty of this conference to find definite and organized remedy for this emergency, and I hope also that you may be able to outline for public consideration such plans as will in the long view tend to mitigate its recurrence.

It seems to me we can on this occasion well give consideration to and expression of the measures that would tend to prevent the acute reactions of economic tides in the future.

It is my belief that we shall be able to lay out a program by which in great measure these things can be accomplished.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall have to leave the Chamber in a moment to attend a committee meeting, and I want to ask the Senator a question about some of the language in his bill.

In line 5, page 2, after the word "jurisdiction," does not the Senator think that the words "concerning which a report has been requested by Congress or a committee thereof under the provisions of existing law" should be stricken out? Why confine the revision of the plans simply to those projects concerning which a report has been requested by Congress?

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will read that carefully, I think he will find that it does not do what he fears, because, if the Senator will follow on, the words on line 7 "and to make the surveys and to prepare the engineering plans necessary for proposed public works" are not limited to those things for which Congress has requested a report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Secretary is not limited in making surveys and making plans, but he is limited in his authority to revise the necessary plans for all public works and projects within his jurisdiction to those concerning which a report has been requested by Congress. I think those words should be stricken out. Let him have authority to revise all projects under his jurisdiction, and to make surveys and prepare engineering plans. I am making that suggestion in the interest of the bill, because I am in favor of the Senator's bill.

Mr. KENYON. I want to consider that a little.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish the Senator would consider that language. It seems to me that it does nothing except to limit the activities of the Secretary in directions in which I think it is desirable that he should go.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator would strike out the phrase "concerning which a report has been requested by Congress or a committee thereof"?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; strike that out and let it read, then, in this way:

That the head of each executive department is authorized to prepare and to periodically revise the necessary plans for all public works and projects within his jurisdiction, and to make the surveys and to prepare the engineering plans necessary for proposed public works and projects, in order that the work may be commenced immediately and properly prosecuted when an appropriation becomes available therefor.

Mr. KENYON. I really see no objection to that, if the Senator will make that motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If I can do so now, I will move to strike out, after the word "jurisdiction" in line 5, the words "concerning which a report has been requested by Congress or a committee thereof under the provisions of existing law." I move to strike out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, lines 5, 6, and 7, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Concerning which a report has been requested by Congress or a committee thereof under the provisions of existing law.

Mr. KENYON. I think that is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator about one other matter in line 14. Does the Senator think that we really ought to have these reports published monthly? Does he not think that quarterly publication would be sufficient?

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that they are publishing the reports monthly now. I hold in my hand the one for December. They are quite valuable to the business world.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are publishing this supplement to the Current Survey of Business?

Mr. KENYON. No; not the supplement. They are publishing the Current Survey of Business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, I see—as a supplement to the Current Survey of Business.

Mr. KENYON. Yes. It would simply, perhaps, enlarge it a little. It serves a very useful purpose in the business world and to business men.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wondered, if we did so much printing, and the department gets going along this line, if it would not be just as advantageous to make it quarterly and save that much. Of course it is not a very large amount.

Mr. KENYON. The quarterly reports might be three times the size of the monthly reports.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That might be true.

Mr. KENYON. I will think about that, though.

Mr. JONES of Washington. All right.

Mr. KENYON. I want to put in the RECORD, in reply to some of the things which have been stated as to the prophecy proposition, the statement that the bill does not carry any provision for any prophecies at all. It sets forth business conditions which the business world is anxious to have, just as the present Survey of Current Business does.

I could insert in the RECORD, which I think may be some reply to that, a letter from a manufacturer in Massachusetts, who might not desire to have his name used, but the letter is here for anybody's perusal.

Of course the number of men employed on Federal public work is small compared with those employed in all the public works in the United States, and that is why this bill, as I said in my opening, is not going to accomplish wonders. It is simply going to assist in stimulating.

In 1914 there were about 293,000 men employed in all public works, of which only 73,000 were employed in Federal public works. In 1914 all public works employed 1.09 per cent of the labor of the country. I have given before the amounts paid in wages during those times, the point being that good will come, and the comparison should be made between the concentrated public-work employment and the fluctuations in the private employment, because there are a lot of industries which take as many men at all times of the year.

It takes as many men to bring in a poor crop as to bring in a good crop in agriculture, so that agriculture might not be affected. So with street railways, gas and telephone companies, and other public utilities; they carry the same force of men, generally, in bad times as in good times.

We are not looking so much to the direct effect of putting men into this public-work employment in times of depression as to the stimulation upon general industry. When you put men to work who are idle, it makes more business for the garment workers, the cement workers, and the builders, unskilled labor everywhere. You can not have depression in part of industry and prosperity in other parts, and what depresses a few industries depresses all.

You can not compare the depression of 1921 with any of the other depressions I have spoken of, except the one which followed the Civil War. Then for a time there was a depression in which there were as high as 33 per cent off the pay roll of those who had been on the pay roll, and it averaged 20 per cent during the first 12 months of the depression. The concentration of public work could not have stopped that. It can not stop the present situation, but it will be a basis for relief of future depressions.

In this letter to the heads of the Federal departments, which has been read, the President has asked them to expedite the execution of all public work under their control for which appropriations are available. He did not think it was a dream. That is exactly what would happen if this bill were made a law, where the plans had been made, and they could go ahead with the work. We are in a situation right now where the President of the United States wants to do these things, and there are no plans, and there is no way of carrying it out.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. I assume there are public works for which plans have been authorized and for which appropriations have been made.

Mr. KENYON. There are for public buildings, away back in the war times.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is nothing whatever to prevent the President, if he sees fit, as the Senator pointed out he did in the case he mentioned, from directing the use of any available appropriations for prosecuting those public works under the present law?

Mr. KENYON. I am not certain.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand the object would be to have public works carried on during the periods of depression, and I think that is a good policy; but I am a little confused about what change in the situation this proposed legislation would make. It carries no appropriation, and it is not intended to authorize public works which have not been authorized under some other law.

The situation is illustrated by the present status of the reclamation work. There are a number of reclamation projects which have been authorized by law for which plans have been completed. The unemployment conference made some investigation into the number and status of those authorized reclamation projects and found that about $16,200,000 should be expended upon them. There is no legislation necessary to carry on that work in this period of depression except to get the money with which to do it.

Mr. KENYON. That work is ready to go ahead.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The work is ready to go ahead. Why pass this bill or any other bill to carry out the policy of going ahead with that work in this period of depression if you get the money to do it with?

Mr. KENYON. That work was the result of a specific act, was it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The authorization was carried in a number of different acts.

Mr. KENYON. If there had been no act authorizing that work, they might have gotten ready to do the work if this bill had been a law, when it was apparent that there was a period of depression approaching.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is ready to go ahead.

Mr. KENYON. It is in that specific case.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Take the building of roads, for instance, I was just about to comment on the status of public-road work, in so far as the Federal Government is connected with it, as it relates to the policy advocated by the Senator from Iowa, of increasing and expediting work in periods of depression and slowing down in periods of unusual prosperity.

There was argued upon the floor of the Senate just the contrary of the policy advocated by the Senator from Iowa, I may say, by the Senator from Massachusetts, against the appropriation for Federal aid to roads, because a great number of men were out of employment; that it was a poor time to appropriate money for public work. That was the argument of some Senators. I took the same view taken by the Senator from Iowa and argued on the other side that the fact that they were out of employment was the very reason why we ought to provide means for their employment, and we appropriated $90,000,000 for that purpose, and they are proceeding with that work. What change in the situation would be made by the passage of the bill of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KENYON. Of course, we are in a period of depression now, so that you can not very clearly draw the lesson from it. This is not going to help this present period of depression. Suppose that were years ahead, taking the road proposition, and the President and the heads of bureaus concluded that it was better to hold up some of that work; suppose things were not looking good and they decided they would hold up 20 per cent this year and 20 per cent the next year. That is where this bill would come in. They could hold it off and use the 40 per cent to ward off the depression two or three years ahead. They have no legal authority to do that now. They do hold up these appropriations, there is no doubt about that, but this is the logical way of doing it.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to ask the Senator from Washington a question.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under section 3 this bill would give the right to suspend work of the kind the Senator from Washington mentioned, and not only that but it seems to me that under this section the head of a department might suspend work in the Senator's State and carry it on in my State, or, vice versa, suspend it in my State and carry it on in the Senator's State.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As I understand, the Senator does not contend that after the Congress has authorized the execution of public work and appropriated money for it, we should pass a law authorizing the head of some bureau, acting through the head of the department, to stop that work and wait indefinitely for some imaginary period of depression which might come some time in the future, take the authority away from Congress and give it to the executive department. Is that the idea of the Senator?

Mr. FLETCHER. They could stop not only the whole thing but stop any part of it. They might carry on some parts of it but stop any portion of it. The language is, "all or any portion of the work." That seems to me to be the danger in section 3.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then we would not have any public works at all unless the heads of the departments were willing that we should have them. In other words, it would give a veto power to the head of every department, so far as public work authorized by Congress was concerned.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not want to say that, I am sure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Provided you authorize them to suspend it in their discretion.

Mr. KENYON. Under the advice of the President. The President can veto what Congress does now; but if the Senator will take the closing lines, lines 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, he will see that where Congress has said that a matter shall be commenced or concluded within a particular time it can not be changed. The bureau heads only do this under the advice of the President of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I assume the President would not be able to give his personal attention to all these different projects, and if the executive branch of the Government be vested with the discretion of stopping public work on the order of the President, the President would be guided to a very large extent by the recommendations of the heads of the different departments.

Mr. KENYON. I do not see how that argument is sound, because the President of the United States can veto now an act of the Congress.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, if the Senator bases the policy of vesting discretionary power in the President on the ground that he has the veto power, it would apply to all legislation. On that theory we could do away with Congress altogether.

Mr. KENYON. I am simply answering the Senator's argument. The discretion is put in the hands of the President. It is not put in the hands of bureau chiefs. I would not advocate any proposition of giving a bureau chief power to set aside what Congress may do. It must be with the advice of the President. They are authorized but only authorized upon the advice of the President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is another provision in the first section of the bill which gives the head of each executive department, without the advice of the President, authority to make surveys of public works. I do not quite understand that. The language is "to make the surveys and prepare the engineering plans necessary for proposed public works."

Mr. KENYON. I am going to make a statement which covers that. I have been trying to make it for some time. It epitomizes the general purpose of the bill, which does not seem to be very well understood.

Section 1 calls upon various public-works agencies of the Federal Government to be prepared in advance with engineering plans for proposed undertakings, so that when an appropriation is made in time of a depression the work can go forward immediately, rather than wait months and years until plans have been prepared and approved. At present there is no incentive for Federal departments to do so, because they have no reason to suppose that Congress desires it. Eventually I believe that this section will lead to taking a longer view of governmental construction. Instead of thinking only in terms of one year our departments will look forward over a period of a decade and plot its needs. Vast areas are certain to be reclaimed through irrigation and drainage. The territory of the United States will eventually be increased not by wars of conquest but by the pick and shovel, the dam and ditch. These great projects usually linger in Congress, because there is no immediate impetus to action. This bill would assist not only in having plans ready for such projects but in giving the final impetus at a time when general industry and employment are in need of stabilization. Many governmental projects contain intricate problems which will require years to solve. For instance, the Boulder Canyon Dam, Ariz., will develop more power than Niagara Falls. Before it can be built agreements must be had from several States not to divert the headwaters, and complex engineering problems must be determined.

Again, post offices and Federal buildings are needed in hundreds of towns. The Federal Government rents many cramped and inadequate quarters. These buildings will be built; the only question is when. This bill proposes that plans be made ready in advance, and the bulk of them executed when the local workers need employment in bad times.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The question I am about to propound may have been asked in my absence, as I have been temporarily from the Chamber. By what standard would the head of the department reach the conclusion that the necessary depression had arrived?

Mr. KENYON. I think he would have to be advised by the head of the department. Under the survey of current business that is to be published and is now being published and will be published under the bill, the Secretary of Commerce would be the one, I assume, to determine that question.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Would there be any way of revising his opinion or correcting it if we thought he made a mistake about the necessity for the extra work?

Mr. KENYON. Of course Congress could give him any instructions or advice it pleased.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But in the meanwhile—

Mr. KENYON. He would simply be preparing plans.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. He could commit the Government in a legal way to an indefinite amount.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, no; not at all. He would simply have the plans drawn. He can not do a thing until there is an appropriation and act of Congress, but when the appropriation comes then he is ready to go ahead.

In the city of Washington the Government rents a considerable part of its office space, scattered inconveniently in many buildings. The main buildings of the Department of Justice and the Department of Commerce are rented. Parts of the same bureau are distributed among several buildings. Aside from the waste in paying rent at a far higher rate than the cost of borrowing the money to build, the division of a department into fragmentary groups delays public business in a way that no private corporation would permit. A 10-year city plan for Washington would be of use not only in satisfying departmental needs but also in providing for the growth and beautification of the city. Some of the more important work may well be earmarked for execution during the next depression. This policy would be economical, for a larger percentage of a 10-year program would be done at the lower prices that prevail during depressions and a smaller percentage executed when costs are increased in competition with private business during boom times. Some governmental plan of this kind would decrease the likelihood of unemployment.

Mr. President, I have explained the bill not perhaps as fully as I might. I realize there is very little interest taken in it. I yield the floor for the present.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, and as such agreed that the chairman of the committee might report the bill, but at the same time I expressed some doubt as to the wisdom of such legislation at this time, indicating that I might oppose the bill.

Because of my sympathy for the unemployed, wherever they may be, I am reluctant to oppose any measure that would promise relief, but I can not reconcile my mind to the idea that this is safe and wise legislation. I can not agree with the underlying principles of the bill. There is involved in it more or less of paternalism, but that is not my sole objection.

The bill proceeds, I think, upon a wrong theory, namely, that periods of prosperity and periods of depression come in regular cycles—cycles which may be forecast by the student of business, industrial, or economic conditions. I do not believe that is true. I think we can trace some of the greatest periods of depression, the most marked and those in which there was the most of unemployment, to something aside from recurring or cyclical influences or conditions. It has been said that a thing exists as long as the condition exists, whether it be a moment or whether it be a cycle. That, Mr. President, illustrates the impossibility of foretelling these variations in business or industrial conditions that will enable us by any system to prepare against them.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has well said that the amount involved so far as the Government is concerned, the expenditure that will be made by the Government in any projects or improvements carried on by the Government, is comparatively small, is a mere bagatelle to the aggregate of public improvements—State, county, and municipal—throughout the country. I agree with him in that. That is true. So far as the Government alone is concerned, comparatively little relief would be afforded the unemployed by the withholding of its building or construction program until a period of depression has arrived or is about to arrive.

Mr. President, the vice of the bill does not consist, however, in that alone. By section 2 of the bill it is provided:

That the Secretary of Commerce shall prepare and publish monthly reports as a supplement to the Current Survey of Business of the Bureau of the Census, or otherwise, concerning the trend of business conditions, the approach of periods of business strain and overextension, or of periods of business depression, in order that the President, the heads of the executive departments, the Congress, the governors of the respective States, the mayors of cities, and persons engaged in private industrial enterprises may properly prepare for and plan against such periods.

Mr. President, one objectionable feature of section 2, as it appeals to me, is one that has already been mentioned by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] in the colloquy between himself and the Senator from Iowa a while ago. It may be true that publications, bulletins, and so forth, are being sent out from time to time through the Department of Commerce as to the condition of business. They may be regarded as more or less authoritative. They may determine individuals or corporations to some extent in the character or conduct of their business.

But, Mr. President, if the bill becomes a law, then any statement made by the Secretary of Commerce foreshadowing a depressed condition of affairs, foreshadowing unemployment as the result of that depression, will, I am sure, tend to precipitate the very condition that we would have most wished to avoid, and perhaps would have escaped had not wrong advices come from an apparently authoritative source. We know how sensitive business and financial interests are to any question about any approaching crisis or period of depression.

But for the report, sometimes false, sometimes erroneous, it might have been tided over and a feeling of optimism come rather than the feeling of depression from an apparently slight change in the condition of this or that particular great industry or great financial institution.

The report of the Secretary of Commerce, however, based on misinformation or a failure to understand the real conditions instead of tiding over, instead of giving a feeling and a spirit of optimism that would carry men through, would have the effect of perhaps closing the doors of great business houses or financial concerns.

Mr. President, that is not all of section 2 to which I find objection. As was stated a little while ago, the amount of the Government's business is comparatively small. The great volume of it will be in the several States, counties, and municipalities. Now, what does the bill invite? The bill will invite the importunities, not of the unemployed alone but of the industries, the great industries of the country, engaged in manufacturing, engaged in furnishing supplies, and so forth. It will encourage them to encourage the governors of States, the county commissioners of counties, the mayors and city councils of municipalities, to engage in public works when there is no need or when, on account of present conditions, they should not engage in such work but should postpone them for a period of prosperity and when, too, the resulting taxation would not bear so heavily upon the taxpayers of the community.

So, Mr. President, that is what I fear under the bill, and I am taking the bill seriously and in connection, too, I would have the Senator from Iowa understand, with my great sympathy for unemployment, wherever it may be. The demand will come in any time of depression as surely as we pass the bill, and for the purposes of the demand a period of depression will be forecast when there is really no substantial danger of it, but for the purposes of the demand for the Government, a State, a county, or a municipality entering upon a building or construction program, a period of depression to come sooner or later will be freely predicted upon them.

Mr. President, he may be never so wise a man and never so familiar with business conditions generally throughout the country, yet the Secretary of Commerce nor the head of any other department can take in the whole field and see at any given time what will really affect seriously the situation throughout the country. He may imagine because there is a decline in the prospects of a particular industry or a decline in the price of railroad stocks or in the stock of some industrial organization, that calamity is almost upon us, and advise accordingly, according to the provisions of section 2 of the bill send out his bulletins, and thus precipitate disaster when otherwise none would have existed.

I am willing, Mr. President, to go as far as anyone in trusting the President of the United States; I say that without reference to who may at any time occupy the presidential office; but section 3 of the pending bill confides more power to the President than I wish to see confided to the Chief Executive. What does it do? It provides:

SEC. 3. That the head of each executive department is authorized, upon the advice of the President, to postpone the date of the commencement or retard the prosecution of such portions of the public works and projects within his jurisdiction as may be necessary, in order to prepare for and to prevent a further rise in the cyclical wave of industrial expansion and resulting business strain and overextension and, within the appropriations therefor, to enter upon a maximum program of public works and projects as a preparation for and in order to counteract an impending period of industrial depression and unemployment.

Mr. President, it is true that upon the advice of the Secretary of Commerce this action may be taken; it is true that it may be taken upon the advice of the head of some other department; but it, in effect, makes a prophet of the President of the United States in foretelling or predicting when there is to be a period of depression or when the period of depression is to end and when a period of general prosperity is to begin. I do not think that the President will particularly welcome such a great responsibility and the duties involved in connection therewith. He will have before his mind—I do not see how he can help but have—the fear that he may make a mistake, and by that mistake and by the advice thus given, instead of energizing he will paralyze the industries of the country.

I said a while ago, Mr. President, that it is not so much the unemployed, I think, as it is the industries themselves, the great corporations which are asking for this bill in order, not so much that they may find employment for their men in Government projects or in other public works in periods of depression, but rather that they may keep themselves going concerns and make money and pay dividends to their stockholders. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has already revealed enough to indicate that the great industries more than the unemployed themselves are working for this bill.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think that is so. The American Federation of Labor has indorsed this bill, or the principle of the bill. It is true that the officers of the United States Chamber of Commerce have also indorsed it, and many of the leading business men of the country have indorsed it, but it also has the indorsement of labor just as much, and my chief concern with it was from the labor end.

Mr. STERLING. Yes. I will say, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Iowa is right. The Federation of Labor, pro forma anyway, has indorsed the bill, but during the limited time when I was able to be present at the committee hearings—and I was there at every hearing which I could possibly attend, though sometimes I had to divide my time between another important committee and that committee, those committees holding their meetings at the same hour—the men who were there giving their testimony appeared to me to be the representatives of big business rather than of the unemployed.

Mr. KENYON. Is the reason why the Senator from South Dakota is opposed to the bill because it is a big-business measure?

Mr. STERLING. Not altogether, but I do not want undue consideration to be given the question of the unemployed. I gave my reason for believing that big business is behind the bill; I stated that big business wants to keep on going in periods of depression, and the representatives of big business are asking the Government to adopt this course, not alone for what they may get out of the Government by reason of their business but what they may get, as intimated in the very bill itself, from the several States in their public improvements and from the counties in their improvements and from the cities in theirs.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to let the statement of the Senator from South Dakota, that big business is behind this bill, go unchallenged. I do not know that there would be anything wrong about it, perhaps, if big business was in favor of the bill, but the bill has been proposed because of labor's side of the matter. It has been championed more by Mr. Otto Mallory, one of the labor leaders and thinkers of the country, than by anyone else. Because some business men may indorse the bill, because the United States Chamber of Commerce may have been for it, arouses at least some suspicion and might shake my faith in the bill a little; but, so far as I am concerned, the whole movement has been promoted because of the interest of labor and in order to help relieve the unemployment situation.

Of course, the Senator from South Dakota has the right to make the statement which he has made; but he knows, I think, that, so far as I am concerned, my activities in the matter have been along the line of trying to help a little on the unemployment proposition. I do, however, challenge the Senator's statement that big business is behind the measure.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have not said that big business alone was behind this measure. I have said that big business was supporting the measure, as I believe; but I have not said that big business exclusively was supporting it. I have said that the Federation of Labor, at least pro forma, had advocated the measure, and I am not saying now that from labor organizations has not come an expression in favor of the enactment of this measure; but I hope the Senator will not get the idea that it is labor alone or the unemployed alone who are advocating it. I have said that big business and big industries favor it, and I have stated what I believe to be the motive for their favoring it. It is in order that in a period of depression they may suffer no financial loss or the least possible loss.

I have nothing more to say except this: Allusion has been made by the Senator from Iowa to France and Switzerland and Belgium. I have not had time to go into this matter or to study the systems or conditions in other countries; but the situation in those comparatively small and compact countries, and even in France, must be different from what it is in our own country. France, if I remember correctly, owns to a great extent the French railroads. It would be comparatively easy under such conditions for the Government to regulate to some extent the extension, the repair, and the improvement of railways or other public works owned by the Government. It would be a different proposition altogether in this great country where the railroads are all privately owned.

Mr. President, one other thought occurs to me right here. Reference has been made to Government public buildings scattered throughout the country, such as post offices, and so forth. I think in the past we have been making more appropriations than were really needed for Government buildings. We have appropriated for post-office buildings in little towns of 1,500 or 2,000 inhabitants, where it would be cheaper for the Government to rent a building than to erect and maintain a distinctive post-office building. Now, what would be the effect of this bill? Nearly every community of 1,500 or 2,000 inhabitants would say, "We need a post-office building; a period of depression is upon us and to erect a building will employ so many men in this community." So demands for work of that kind and for appropriations that otherwise we would not think of making will be made upon us, and, in sympathy, we may be induced to vote for the appropriations.

As I said at the outstart there is a spirit of paternalism in the bill—and I think it quite pervades the bill—which I do not like. The various communities, cities, towns, counties, and States which will expend most of the money on their public works ought themselves to have the right to determine their needs and to determine their ability, financial and otherwise, to enter upon building programs at such times and under such conditions as they see fit, without being importuned to-day to erect a building, provide waterworks or sewerage facilities, as the case may be, and to-morrow, because a period of prosperity is on, to postpone them for that indefinite time when a period of depression may come.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have such a high regard for the author of this bill that I regret very much to have to differ with him, but certainly it seems to me that the bill is absolutely uncalled for and is unsound. The great trouble now is that the public is looking too much to the Government at Washington to get help. What the country needs is for the people to go to work, and not to depend upon making a living out of the Government.

The bill is paternalistic; it is wrong in principle; and I deem it entirely out of place. We should construct buildings only when it is necessary to do so, and every community should be the judge of that necessity. To my mind, instead of giving employment to people, the bill would tend to create unemployment, for individuals would not inaugurate enterprises, perhaps, for fear that the Government would jump in and compete with them in labor and materials. It is a matter which I do not think is a proper subject for legislation, and I trust no such legislation will be put upon the statute books. What the people of this country need now is to stop looking to Washington and to be allowed to work out their own material interests in their own way. It matters not to me whether labor favors this bill, or whether big interests favor it, or anybody else; but I deem the proposition involved in the bill not governmental in its nature; it is only advisory. It has no force in it. It will encourage complaining, and I hope no such bill will pass.

POLITICAL CAMPAIGN ISSUES.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on yesterday the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] made a speech that doubtless will be termed, at least by his friends, the Republican textbook in the coming campaign. I heard that speech. It was very edifying, and I have no doubt it presented in the strongest possible way the achievements of the present administration. I have no doubt that the distinguished Senator burned the midnight oil and racked his brain that he might remember and place in that speech all that might possibly reflect credit upon this administration. I have no doubt that he consulted with his friends over there, and that his friends at the other end of the Avenue censored it, subtracted certain parts from it, or added certain things to it. I have no doubt that a council of war, so to speak, was held on that speech, so that nothing would be left out of it. It no doubt was the strongest possible presentation that could be made of the accomplishments of the present administration.

I would not now notice the speech if it were not for the fact that it came from such a high source in the Republican Party. The distinguished senior Senator from Illinois is the chairman of the Senate Republican campaign committee, and that speech evidently was prepared and was intended for distribution throughout the country. It was unfortunate that another distinguished leader of the Republican Party spoke on yesterday, because they apparently have gotten their wires crossed as to certain so-called achievements of the administration; and then, too, if this other leader of the Republican Party had not spoken last night in Boston no doubt the newspapers would have carried and given more space to the speech of the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois on yesterday.

I am sorry the Senator from Illinois is not now in the Chamber. I wish he were here. I am sorry the distinguished leader of the Republicans in the Senate [Mr. Lodge] is not here, because there is some conflict of statement in those speeches.

The Washington Post of this morning prints the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] at Boston in large type on the front page. The heading is:

No Congress in peace time achieved more for the Nation than present, says LODGE.

Under that, in large type, appears the following:

Appropriations of $5,337,000,000 asked by departments cut to $1,428,000,000, he points out.

So, in this campaign document, carefully prepared, heralded throughout the country as one of the two parts of the coming Republican textbook, this leader says that the appropriations of $5,337,000,000 asked by the departments were cut to $1,428,000,000; so that is the great achievement of this administration.

I hope that the statements of the distinguished leader of the Republicans in this Chamber touching other matters are more accurate than that statement. I can not imagine how a man so well versed and so learned and so experienced in legislative matters, and who occupies such a high place in the councils of his party, could possibly make that statement in a keynote political speech; and I am sure that no one within the sound of my voice or who knows anything at all about the expenditures of the Government will agree with that statement, that appropriations of $5,337,000,000 were asked for the departments and they were cut to $1,428,000,000—a saving of $4,000,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for an explanation of this inaccurate statement.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas did not rise to make any explanation. The Senator rose just to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he knew whether or not that was the exact statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts? I judge that what the Senator from Massachusetts meant to say was that the estimates had been reduced by that amount.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the best explanation or excuse that can be offered for this inaccurate statement in the speech of the leader of the Republican Party. I read this from the Associated Press. No doubt this speech was prepared and was distributed to the representatives of the press before it was made; so I will quote from his speech to see whether the heading there is incorrect. That is the part of the speech that caught the fancy of the Washington Post. Certainly none doubts the friendliness of the Post to the administration. That is the part of the speech that caught the fancy of every Republican paper in this country. That is the part of the speech that will be read more by the people throughout the country than any other, namely, that the great achievement of this administration is to cut the appropriations from $5,337,000,000 requested by the departments down to $1,428,000,000. Why, if you had accomplished that you would have achieved a great deal; but the statement made in explanation and excuse for this speech by the Senator from Kansas—one of the leaders on the other side, one of the best politicians in the world, who is always watching out for his party, who smooths out the wrinkles over there, who is ever on guard to correct any mistakes made by his coworkers and coleaders—that explanation on the part of the distinguished Senator from Kansas, a member of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, vice leader on the other side, and chairman of the Committee on Rules, will not go. The harm is done when such a statement from such a high source is published.

Here is what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] said:

Since the present Congress has been in they have reduced appropriations asked for the departments of $5,337,000,000 to $1,428,000,000. This was the work of the present "do nothing" Congress.

That is about the only accurate statement that the Senator from Massachusetts made in that speech at Boston.

This was the work of the present "do nothing" Congress—

He says.

Mr. President, the facts about the matter are that there was some reduction in the fiscal year 1920 over the fiscal year 1919. There was a reduction for the fiscal year 1921 over 1920, and so on down the line; and you will observe that even though the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] yesterday counted as one of the great achievements of his party and the administration alleged large reductions for the fiscal year 1919, the estimates of the departments, then controlled by the Democratic administration, were made at a time when the war was in full blast. No one had any idea that the close of the war was in sight. They made their estimates at the beginning of the year 1918. They came to Congress, and on those estimates the Appropriations Committee worked; and then, when the war closed so suddenly and unexpectedly, such a saving was effected to the taxpayers of the country that then the big reduction from the estimates was shown in the appropriation bills.

So I submit to every fair-minded person whether it is an achievement, whether the leaders of the Republican Party have the right to claim it as an accomplishment of the present administration, simply because, through the magnificent way in which the Democratic administration—cooperated with, I might say, and helped by men in this Chamber and at the other end of the Capitol, and Republicans everywhere—brought the war to such a sudden close that it saved billions of dollars in the appropriations from the estimates.

In those estimates, running into the billions, it was estimated how much these millions of men who were to be maintained in France and Belgium would have cost for the coming year. The estimates of the Shipping Board, the estimates for aircraft, for artillery, for munitions, for the Navy, and for everything, were based upon the assumption that the war probably would run throughout the following year; and so, when it suddenly collapsed and these men were brought back home, through the efficient administration of the Government at that time and through the economies that were worked by the departments at that time these enormous sums, running into the billions of dollars, were saved to the taxpayers of the country; and yet the American people are to be buncoed, hoodwinked, and deceived by Republican spokesmen claiming that as an achievement of the present administration. Sirs, if it had not been for the magnificent messages of ex-President Wilson, and the terms he laid down upon which peace should come—messages that disheartened, discouraged, disorganized, and broke the morale of the opposing armies—these large appropriations estimated for would have been necessary and billions in addition.

Sirs, the Senator from Massachusetts, who made this remarkable speech, a keynote speech for his own campaign in Massachusetts, to be followed and copied by other Republican spellbinders, said that the appropriation of $5,337,000,000 asked in the estimates were cut to $1,428,000,000. The facts are that the estimates for 1922 were $5,337,000,000, and that we appropriated over $4,000,000,000, not $1,428,000,000. He is just two and one-half billion dollars off, that is all. That does not amount to much, especially in this day of Republican political hypocrisy and deception.

The distinguished Senator from Illinois in making his speech yesterday did say there was a cut of just a billion dollars. He is nearer right than his leader.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi, as I understand him, quoted the Senator from Massachusetts as having stated in his recent speech delivered in Massachusetts that the appropriations asked for by the departments for the fiscal year 1922 of something over $5,000,000,000 had been reduced by the present Congress to about $1,400,000,000. As I now recall it, the estimate of the Treasury Department presented to the Committee on Finance for the fiscal year 1922 was something over $4,000,000,000, and the committee was asked to provide money to pay these estimates, based as they were, upon the appropriations made by Congress, and Congress did so provide by the passage of a revenue bill, which it was estimated, together with customs revenues, would raise for the fiscal year 1922 the full amount of the estimates and leave a surplus in the Treasury of some fifty-odd millions of dollars.

The Senator from Massachusetts now says, as I understand the Senator from Mississippi, that these appropriations have been reduced by the present Congress to $1,400,000,000. If the Senator from Massachusetts is correct in this statement, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that there should be a repeal of a large part of the taxes imposed in the present revenue bill, because otherwise we will be collecting money out of the people not needed to support the Government. I wish further to suggest, if the Senator from Massachusetts is correct, and we do not repeal a part of these taxes, we will have a surplus in the Treasury more than sufficient to pay the bonus, and the Republican Party would be relieved of imposing additional taxes for raising money for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator. Of course, the mention of the bonus at this time creates a panic on the other side of the aisle. These offices were created to help to win the war, and these expenditures were made for various purposes, which we are gradually liquidating, and, of course, going through a readjustment period following the war, the estimates, as well as the appropriation, should naturally be reduced. We have not reached the time of "normalcy" yet. Just wait; the country will get its dose and understand its meaning before this administration gets through.

For the present year the estimate of the Budget Bureau is $3,801,000,000. There has been reported out of the House Committee on Appropriations already bills carrying $2,908,000,000, and all the bills have not been reported yet. To date the bills reported from the House Appropriations Committee have been reduced from the estimates of the Budget by only $64,000,000, and there has not been an appropriation bill which has passed the House and come to the Senate which has not been increased by the Senate, first by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and generally by the Senate through amendments on the floor.

So there is a reduction of $64,000,000 from the amount estimated by the Budget in the bills which passed the House, and when they shall have passed the Senate and finally become laws they will carry much larger amounts than the estimates of the Budget.

Another proposition which the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] claimed as an achievement of the administration was the Budget system. The Budget system would be a wonderful thing if we had a Congress which would more earnestly practice economy and knew how to run this Government so that they could keep expenditures within the estimates of the Budget; but the trouble is with the lop-sided way you run things the Budget makes its estimates and the Congress increases the amounts.

Already during this Congress we have passed more deficiency appropriation bills than ever before in any other Congress. We have appropriated already in this Congress practically $350,000,000 as deficiencies in three deficiency appropriation bills, and yet it is claimed that this Government is being run along economical lines. When you bring in the general appropriation bills within the Budget you make great claim to the country about practicing economy; then you pass some deficiency appropriation bills and undo all the work you had theretofore done.

If the Congress would stop passing deficiency bills, they might get along much better; but they do not do it. There is no cohesion on the other side of the aisle. You never know where you are going. You are just slipping and sliding, and sliding backward more than you are going forward. Halting and hesitating, and hesitating about as much as you halt. The country is thoroughly disgusted with your action, and yet your political leaders lay claims in their keynote speeches to your alleged wonderful achievements.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, does the Senator remember that during the last session in which his party was in power in the House and Senate they passed five deficiency appropriation bills?

Mr. HARRISON. They did not amount to one-fourth as much as these three deficiency appropriation bills that you have already passed in this Congress.

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, yes; they did.

Mr. HARRISON. I recall that before the war there had never been a deficiency bill carrying over $35,000,000.

The Budget Bureau estimated recently in one deficiency for $190,000,000, and the House appropriation bill cut it down to $105,000,000. It came over to the Senate and, of course, you extravagant Senators increased the amount over the House appropriation.

Those are the things which the Republican leaders now are claiming in their speeches as achievements of the Republican Party.

I imagine that up in Boston last night the distinguished Senator had a splendid crowd. If I read the papers correctly, a lot of persons up there have nothing now to do but go out and listen to political speeches. The textile plants are closed down, industries have ceased to operate, wages are being daily cut, and thousands of unemployed thrown upon the tender mercies of their communities. The last count I saw showed that forty or fifty thousand men were thrown out in one day and the wages of others were reduced. So I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts had a lot of unemployed last night listening to him speak.

This morning I received a letter from away out in Utah. I wish the Senator from Utah were here, because the man who wrote this letter is a wise fellow. I am not unmindful that there is every kind of propaganda being sent out to make the people believe normalcy has come about and that we have some kind of prosperity. I do not know how much money has been spent, and I do not know from what source it comes, but there is a well-ordered propaganda now throughout the country to delude the people and create a false impression as to present conditions. They have erected prosperity signs, somewhat like the "wobble and wobble" signs used during the campaign. They have converted that "wobble and wobble" sign of President Harding and Candidate Coolidge into signs bearing the slogan "Prosperity is here," or "Prosperity around the corner," trying to make the people believe it.

This good fellow wrote me this letter from Salt Lake City, and he says he is a Republican. He states in the letter:

Dozens of billboards in Salt Lake City have been placarded with numerous posters telling us that prosperity is just 'round the corner.

Senators have seen them.

And some wag possessed with considerable humor composed a short poem.

This is the poem:

THE BILLBOARD ON THE STREET.

Mark Hanna gave the dinner pail
That made us feel so fine;
Theodore used the big stick
To keep us all in line;
But Harding, in his great wisdom,
Has outdone all such feats,
He's given us prosperity
On billboards on our streets.

A quick return to "normalcy"
The thing he's striving at,
And if we'll tighten up our belts,
Some time he'll make us fat,
Instead of the old dinner pail,
Full of good things to eat,
He'll serve us with prosperity
On billboards on the street.

For many years I served you
As puppet and as tool,
But this last stunt has wised me up,
No more a silly fool.
I may be a poor workman,
My clothes are far from neat,
But you can't fool me with prosperity
On a billboard on the street.

I dedicate that poem to the present administration as the one great achievement the distinguished Senators who spoke yesterday failed to recount.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I believe the Senator said this man was a Republican?

Mr. HARRISON. He says so.

Mr. CARAWAY. Was he bragging or confessing when he said that?

Mr. HARRISON. He was commiserating. They do not brag any more. If the distinguished Senator who spoke yesterday had gone to places up in the State of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], where so many men have been thrown out of employment, or had gone to any of the industrial centers throughout the country, or had visited Kansas or Iowa, where the farmers are now receiving around 25 cents a bushel for corn, and a small price for wheat, and nothing scarcely for live stock, and made a speech bragging about that 7,000,000 majority they received at the last election, he would not have lasted as long as a celluloid cat in the fiery regions of Hades.

We do not hear much of that enormous majority now. We heard them for a while bragging about it, but no more. De-luded Republicans want to forget it, and innocent, independent progressives abhor the thought. And Democrats—well, those who strayed, they are sick and melancholy.

For the distinguished Senator from Illinois to throw his slurs at the Democratic standard bearer in that campaign is unbecoming and showed him to be a poor sport. Gov. Cox made a great fight, a game fight. No crusader ever engaged in a more noble and higher cause, and no campaign in the history of this Government was ever waged in a cleaner and manlier way, with less apologies or excuses over the results. Yes; the verdict was against us, but there never was a verdict returned by a patriotic people filled with more fraud than the one rendered in November, 1920, and the only persons who have a right to say that there was a verdict in that campaign against the League of Nations are those men who were consistent from the beginning to the end against any League of Nations.

Of course Senators like the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] were in an atmosphere which led them to believe that all the votes for the Republican ticket were against any League of Nations; but how can Senators like the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] or the leader of the Republicans in this Chamber have the audacity to go before the people now and say the verdict was along that line? The President of the United States in his message the other day harped on that, too.

The world has been hungering for a better relationship for centuries since it obtained its larger consciousness. The conception of the League of Nations was a response to a manifest world hunger.

So said the President of the United States. He was for it. He led the people to believe that he was for it. He voted at least twice for the League of Nations with reservations. The American people had a right to believe, on the record which he made in the Senate, that he was still for a League of Nations, in one form or another.

The President went further—

Whatever its fate, whether it achieves the great things hoped for or comes to supersede or to failure, the American unwillingness to be a part of it has been expressed.

"The American unwillingness to become a part of it has been expressed." Distinguished Senators who now sit before me will not forget that because of their speeches against the League of Nations idea, certain elements within the Republican Party thought you were doing injury to your party, that you were driving votes of the proleaguers within the Republican Party away from Harding and Coolidge, and for a while there was a cessation of activities on the part of you orators—you who had been speaking with eloquence and force and enthusiasm against the league.

Those activities were not renewed until candidate Harding went to Des Moines and made the speech which surprised the whole country. But he got away from it the next day, and then it was that he came forth with his statement which I wish to read at this time so the RECORD will show the true facts, to show that the hypocrisy of the administration now is in keeping with the deceit which was practiced in the campaign. There has not been a single promise made by the administration as a preconvention pledge that has been kept. I admire consistency. If the campaign had been fought out on the question of a league or no league, and your standard bearers and party had taken that position, then well and good to live up to it. But it is unbecoming in men, in high places though they may be, to win public office on certain promises and as soon as they get in to break them.

Let me restate my position as explicitly as my power of words permits. . . . I am in favor of a world association—call it what you will, the name is of slight consequence—that will discourage or tend to prevent war and that will encourage or tend to encourage a better understanding among the nations of the earth. The old order of things is done with, not only in America but throughout the world, and the United States, always quick with sympathy, always just and usually led by common sense, must play its part in this new order.

And thereupon an ex-President of the Republican Party, Mr. Taft, who had been one of the great advocates and champions of the league of nations idea, gave out a statement on August 9 in which he said:

I wish to have as many Republican Senators as possible stand by President Harding in the policy to which I believe the circumstances will lead him of obtaining such an amendment of the present league as will retain the great benefits which the covenant without article 10 will confer on the world.

Then the leaders of the Republican Party who had stood for a league of nations, but who were about to get away from Harding and Coolidge and the Republican Party in that campaign because of the activities against the league of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and other Senators, came out in a written appeal to the proleague Republicans throughout the country to stand by the Republican ticket and to vote for Harding for President, that the best way to get into the League of Nations was through the election of Harding. It was signed by distinguished men of your party, men who now assist in controlling the destiny of the country. Who were they?

Hughes. He had stood for the league. He was aroused because of the activities of the Senator from California and the Senator from Idaho.

Hoover. He is now Secretary of Commerce. He was indignant, and after Candidate Harding made that speech saying he was for an association, call it what you will, league, association, or what not, Mr. Hoover traveled all the way to California and addressed some college out there, in which address he appealed to the proleague Republicans and independents to vote for the Republican ticket, saying that it would hasten our entrance into the League of Nations. Let me refresh your memory as to the signed statement of those 31 distinguished leaders within the Republican Party. They said:

The undersigned—

That is Taft, that is Root, that is Hoover, that is Hughes, and 27 others who now apparently are against any League of Nations whatsoever. Oh, I say to the Senator from California, and his colleague from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], you certainly brought the leaders of the Republican Party into line. They did not believe you at first, but their wobbling and wiggling, their vacillating and halting policy and deportment has brought them to your way of thinking. That is all right. I have no fault to find with them, but I dislike to see men high in the councils of the party or the affections of the people, leaders in the country, who will win the votes of the people by promising one thing before the election and doing another thing after the election. It is as reprehensible as denying a personal obligation to which you had affixed your signature.

The undersigned—

Said this remarkable document—

The undersigned, who desire that the United States shall do her full part in association with the other civilized nations to prevent war, have earnestly considered how we may contribute most effectively to that end by our votes in the coming election.

The question between the candidates is not whether our country shall join in such an association. It is whether we shall join under an agreement containing the exact provisions negotiated by President Wilson at Paris or under an agreement which omits or modifies some of those provisions that are very objectionable to great numbers of the American people.

Mr. Harding said in his speech of August 28:

"There are distinctly two types of international relationship. One is an offensive and defensive alliance of great powers. . . . The other type is a society of free nations or an association of free nations or a league of free nations, animated by considerations of right and justice instead of might and self-interest, and not merely proclaimed an agency in pursuit of peace but so organized and participated in as to make the actual attainment of peace a reasonable possibility. Such an association I favor with all my heart, and I would make no fine distinctions as to whom credit is due. One need not care what it is called. Let it be an association, a society, or a league, or what not. Our concern is solely with the substance, not the form thereof."

Mr. Harding has since repeatedly reaffirmed the declarations of this speech in the most positive terms.

The question accordingly is not between a league and no league, but is whether certain provisions in the proposed league agreement shall be accepted unchanged or shall be changed.

The contest is not about the principle of a league of nations, but it is about the method of most effectively applying that principle to preserve peace.

If the proposed changes in the Paris agreement were capacious or without substantial ground, one might question the sincerity of their advocates. This, however, is not the case.

We have reached the conclusion that the true course to bring America into an effective league to preserve peace is not by insisting with Mr. Cox upon the acceptance of such a provision as article 10, thus prolonging the unfortunate situation created by Mr. Wilson's insistence upon that article, but by frankly calling upon the other nations to agree to changes in the proposed agreement which will obviate this vital objection and other objections less the subject of dispute. The Republican Party is bound by every consideration of good faith to pursue such a course until the declared object is attained.

For this course we can look only to the Republican Party and its candidate; the Democratic Party and Mr. Cox are bound not to follow it.

The conditions of Europe make it essential that the stabilizing effect of the treaty already made between the European powers shall not be lost by them and that the necessary changes be made by changing the terms of the treaty rather than by beginning entirely anew.

That course Mr. Harding is willing to follow, for he said in his speech of August 28:

"I would take and combine all that is good and excise all that is bad from both organizations (the court and the league). This statement is broad enough to include the suggestion that, if the league which has heretofore riveted our considerations and apprehensions has been so entwined and interwoven into the peace of Europe that its good must be preserved in order to stabilize the peace of that continent, then it can be amended or revised so that we may still have a remnant of the world's aspirations in 1913 build into the world's highest conception of helpful cooperation in the ultimate realization."

We therefore believe that we can most effectively advance the cause of international cooperation to promote peace by supporting Mr. Harding for election to the Presidency.

Thus it was that the election was won, and yet the distinguished President of the United States in his message to the Senate the other day said that—

The American unwillingness to be a part of it has been expressed.

How does he know, except that he should follow what he promised the people in his campaign? Oh, they were so afraid in the disarmament conference that they would step into the track of the League of Nations. They shied away from it just as a wild mule shies along the road. They needed a blind bridle throughout the conference. That has been the attitude of the administration from the beginning up to this good hour. That is what is damning the administration. It is because you have no settled policy, you have no program to follow. You are doing absolutely nothing. The President of the United States is so afraid, and you know it, that he might wean from him and his party some of the men within the Republican Party that he is always trying to compromise on something. If I had promised the American people that I would stand for some plan, whether an association or a league, I would go through with it. I would not be frightened because I might bring down upon my head the reproach of certain eloquent, forceful, militant, and aggressive Senators.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] yesterday talked about the disarmament conference as an achievement of the administration. He laid great stress upon it. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] did the same thing. I suppose every orator who goes out to speak for the party in the coming campaign will claim that as one of the great achievements of the party. Ah, Mr. President, there was one admission in the President's message to the Senate the other day that is very true. "Modest"—that was the term of affection applied to him yesterday by the Senator from Illinois. The Senator said President Harding was modest in his claims about the disarmament conference and the part he had played in it.

Do you recall a few weeks ago when Hughes's name was being heralded far and wide, when praise was being extended to him by men in every political party, when he was receiving the plaudits of mankind throughout the world for the courageous speech he had made at the opening of the disarmament conference? There then seemed to develop a little feeling of jealousy among certain leaders in the disarmament conference and at the other end of the Avenue. Then one morning there emanated from the White House a statement, carried everywhere by the Associated Press, that the proposal which was made by Secretary Hughes at the opening of the disarmament conference was not at all the proposal of Secretary Hughes, but was conceived by President Harding while he—and I presume our friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] accompanying him on that trip—glided peacefully and serenely down the beautiful waters of the Potomac. Just as the Mayflower glided into some pleasant nook, the President was writing away, and he wrote this proposal with his own hand and pencil. That was the propaganda, that was the modest part that he played in this disarmament conference. So in his speech the other day he said this:

Here—

He was then talking about the Senate—

Here was a beginning on your advice, no matter when conceived, and the program was enlarged only because assurances of tranquillity were deemed the appropriate concomitants of the great experiment in arms limitation.

So I am glad and delighted that the President, in his modest way, has told the country that "here in the Senate the movement for a limitation of armament was begun." It is well that he did so; and yet the Republican leader in his speech last night to the unemployed in Boston, as well as the Senator from Illinois on this floor, claims it as the great achievement of the administration.

Oh, will Senators forget how the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], following the introduction of his resolution for a Conference on Limitation of Armament, fought here for days and for weeks and for months to have it brought out of committee and pressed through the Senate? Will they forget how every Democratic member of the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate voted to report his resolution favorably, as well as a like resolution of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and how every Republican Senator in the Naval Affairs Committee voted against reporting the resolution?

The same thing happened in the House of Representatives. Word had come down the line to the majority members of the Naval Affairs Committee in that body not to report out the resolution. Such a resolution was not passed until the President sent word to the acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], and to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], to allow the resolution to trickle through.

The disarmament conference was due to the sentiment which had been crystallized in this country through the magnificent fight which was waged by the distinguished Senator from Idaho, aided and abetted at every step by a solid minority of Democratic Senators. The idea was not original with the Senator from Idaho, neither was it original with the Senator from Montana. The first concrete proposition looking toward disarmament was found in article 8 of the League of Nations covenant, placed there by the man whom the Senator from Massachusetts has criticized and maligned. However, the country is gradually waking up; it is beginning to learn the real facts. Generally when the Senator from Massachusetts gets right it is when he has reversed his former position and adopted the policy that was advocated by ex-President Wilson.

I shall not minimize the results of the disarmament conference. God knows I wish it had accomplished more than it did; but the disarmament conference in many respects brought much benefit to America; I speak primarily of the naval holiday program. I hope that will be effective, and that it will mean a great saving to the taxpayers of the country. However, Mr. President, I would suggest the thought that, not from the time the disarmament conference met to the time it closed has it failed to receive the united, whole-hearted cooperation of the Democrats both in the other House and in the Senate. There has never been a voice of criticism from this side raised against it. We have wished it well; we have tried to cooperate with Senators on the other side.

How different was the situation when the American delegation was at Paris trying to settle the great problems following the World War and to write a treaty of peace! Why, sirs, there was organized in this body a movement even to dispatch couriers with speeches made here against what that conference was about to do. Round robins were prepared, Senators' signatures were procured, ultimatums were issued in the effort to destroy the influence of the American delegation at Paris. How did the minority in this body and in the other House act while the great disarmament conference was in session here in Washington?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. In connection with the reference of the Senator concerning the embarrassment caused by leaders of the majority party in the Senate during the deliberations at the Paris peace conference, I desire to say, if the Senator will allow me, that I happened to be in Paris for several weeks during that conference, and the newspapers daily quoted Republican Senators and others in prominent position in that party in criticism of the action of the American delegation to such an extent that I did not believe it; I thought it was propaganda and gave an interview to the Paris papers stating that it was not true. Not until I returned to the United States did I believe, or would I believe, that men in responsible positions had gone so far in embarrassing the President of the United States who was trying to formulate a treaty by which peace would be brought about between this country and the German Empire. I had hoped that such bitter partisanship was a thing of the past.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, Mr. President. Throughout the conference at Paris the American delegation were hampered; they were embarrassed in every imaginable way. Senators in the majority in this Chamber defeated the treaty. Whether it will ever be an issue in America again I do not know; but I do know that the Republican majority has found themselves constantly in a very bad predicament since the 4th day of March, when they went into office, because they did not ratify the treaty when it was submitted. I know also that even though we were promised by President Harding some kind of an association or an arrangement—call it league or what not—to preserve the peace of the world, we have been waiting for almost 15 months and the plan is not yet born. The Disarmament Conference was the outgrowth of the League of Nations covenant included in the treaty of Versailles. So this administration can not claim it as an achievement.

We have heard a great deal said about foreign entanglements, and yet the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], who has harped more against foreign entanglements than anyone here, yesterday rose and advocated the four-power pact. The administration have been observing what has been going on across the water; they are afraid even to participate in conferences over there. They sent George Harvey over to Cannes, but the administration has not decided as yet whether or not we are going to be represented at the Genoa conference. How long it takes the head of this administration to fix upon a policy! How long it takes him to decide just what he is going to do!

The same tardiness, the same indecision, that has marked the President's course in other matters is attending it now in connection with the so-called soldiers' bonus; but he has sympathy from the majority party in Congress on that; they do not know what to do either; the Republican Party have promised so many different things about the bonus that they do not know exactly "where they are at."

Let us hope, Mr. President, that this isolated policy, this do-nothing program of the administration, will spur itself up, so that we may begin to take our part and our responsibility in world affairs. Let it be hoped that a decision will very soon be reached that a delegation from this Government shall go to Genoa, there to help solve the great economic problems that are pressing upon the world; and if we should send a delegation there, let us hope that it will be composed of men of high caliber and not of some fellows of whom the country never heard. Let it be a delegation such as represented the American Government at the Disarmament Conference recently held in Washington.

The people are tired of observing. I never admired a spy in my life; I never trusted one at all, and history has revealed that spies are a very bad lot of fellows; yet this administration insists on sending to conferences abroad not participants to act but observers to spy on the proceedings and let us know what they are doing.

Mr. President, in the speeches delivered yesterday by the two distinguished leaders of the Republican Party when they said that Congress has passed more beneficial legislation during this Congress than during any other 20 years in the history of the Government they failed to specify what legislation was passed or what they were talking about; and so I submit that the country is not fooled at all.

It was well and good that the Senator from Massachusetts should have apologized in his speech last night for the revenue bill, because, if the majority leaders have been quoted correctly, very soon they will bring in a supplemental revenue bill. Why did not the two Senators on yesterday, in preparing this campaign textbook, tell about the failure to pass the tariff bill that you said was going to help the industries of the country?

Three years we have waited for the passage of that legislation, and still the bill sleeps in the Finance Committee of the Senate. No one knows when it will pass. No one knows what kind of a bill it will be when it comes out. There is dissension over there, a lack of policy, a dearth of program. So I am wondering, when these distinguished spokesmen of the party tell about the "achievements of the administration," why they do not specify the legislation they have in mind.

You can not fool the American people. They know that you are frittering away time here, that you are not able or competent to meet the great problems that are confronting this Congress; and yet the distinguished leader on the other side on last night at Boston said in his speech that—

The Democrats, by every artifice of delay and time wasting, have done their best to make this Congress a "do-nothing body."

Cite one instance when the Democratic minority in this body have failed to cooperate with you in any effort to expedite the passage of wholesome legislation here. Of course you do not stay in the Chamber, while this side is always crowded with its Members, and we have to help you do it; but we have never delayed you. We have never frittered away time. We have tried to help you solve these problems; and I do not know what you would have done if some of the suggestions that have come from this side had not been accepted by the other side. If you would listen to us more and follow our suggestions more often, you would get along better. The only piece of legislation that can be claimed by this Congress as one of a constructive nature is the amendment to the War Finance Corporation act, and yet that was passed not because of this administration, but in spite of the opposition of this administration.

Why, your leaders opposed it at first. Senator NORRIS in his first endeavor to arouse your interest was only rebuked by you, and in the end two Democratic Senators and one Republican composed the subcommittee that wrote the bill that passed. And if we had not fought here, day in and day out, to force it upon you, you never would have passed that piece of legislation. So I hope it never again will be said that the Democrats are trying to delay anything.

The same policy, so far as the minority is concerned, will govern its action touching legislation resulting from the Disarmament Conference. It will be discussed fully, and before it passes we will know everything that happened behind the closed doors of the Disarmament Conference; but we want to expedite the matter. We want the country to know where it is "at." We are going to assist you to write your record so that in the next campaign the very first chance the folks get at you we are sure they will condemn you.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to defend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]. He is perfectly able to take care of himself; nor is it my purpose to defend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. For the sake of accuracy, however, I want to state for the Record what the records of the Appropriations Committee and of Congress show in regard to appropriations and in regard to deficiencies.

I have just sent out for the statement of the Senator from Mississippi in regard to the deficiency appropriations. It has not been sent in yet; but my recollection is that the Senator said that only a few thousand dollars had been appropriated for deficiencies during the time the Democrats were in power.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I said that the largest deficiency bill I recalled that the Democrats had passed before the war was $35,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me call the Senator's attention to two or three.

In 1915 the deficiency bill was $27,000,000.

In 1916 it was $12,000,000.

Before that the deficiencies were smaller, and they kept growing during the war.

The last year before the war the deficiencies amounted to $68,000,000.

In 1918 they jumped to $8,000,000,000.

In 1919 they amounted to $4,000,000,000, giving the round numbers.

Then in 1920 they dropped to $1,141,000,000.

In 1921 they dropped to $486,000,000.

I just want the Record to show these figures, so that the Senator may know that he has been giving figures here without any regard to what the facts show.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think there is any difference between the Senator and myself. I stated that the deficiency appropriations were larger than ever before since the Republicans came in, and that before the war the Democrats, so far as I recall, had never in any one bill appropriated over $35,000,000 for deficiencies. The Senator has given certain figures. According to his figures, the most that was carried in any one bill was $16,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Sixty-eight million dollars.

Mr. HARRISON. Sixty-eight million dollars was the total, as I understand the Senator. I said in any one bill there was not over $35,000,000. The Senator says it was $68,000,000 at one Congress. That was in all of the bills. Three hundred and fifty million dollars has already been appropriated by this Congress in deficiencies.

Mr. CURTIS. Every deficiency appropriation that has been passed by this Congress and the last came about as the result of the management of the offices by the Democratic administration. Not one of them is traceable to this administration yet. This administration has been in control for only a year.

Mr. HARRISON. You have about ruined things in that time.

Mr. CURTIS. The country, under the policy adopted by the Republican Party, will be in better condition than it ever has been before.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us hope so.

Mr. CURTIS. To-day the shut-down mills, the idle workmen, can charge it all to the Democratic Party. The Simmons-Underwood tariff bill has done more to close the mills in this country than anything else that has happened in many, many years, and if it had not been for the war—

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Underwood-Simmons bill wrought these great injuries, and the Senator's party have had control of both Houses of Congress for three years, why in the name of common sense have they not done something to remedy the situation?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Mississippi knows well that until the 4th of last March a Democratic President was in office and that he would have vetoed any tariff bill sent to him. He also knows that the emergency tariff bill that was passed by the Republican Congress to help out the then emergency situation was vetoed by President Wilson. All this talk about "two years" is nonsense, and the Senator from Mississippi knows it.

Now, let us see what is the reduction in appropriations below the estimates.

For 1922 the records show that there was appropriated $1,484,217,465 below the estimates. I judge that that is what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said; and when the Senator from Mississippi gets the corrected remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts he probably will find out that what was printed in the paper was not accurate.

As I say, I did not get up to reply to the political harangue of the Senator from Mississippi. The records will speak for themselves; and I submit that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the Senators on the other side of the aisle have taken up much more time in useless and unnecessary discussion than has been taken up on this side of the aisle.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, my good friend the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] speaks about "political harangues" coming from this side. This is supposed to be a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people. We determine by political discussions who shall occupy seats in this body—that is, we used to do that. We have had a sample, recently, of a precedent that money shall decide who shall sit in this body, when seats shall be bartered to the highest bidder; but by political discussions we educate the people of the country as to what the situation is with regard to the Government, and the policies that should control the Government, and the policies that do control the Government.

I am not astonished that Senators on the other side should undertake to suppress political discussions in this body. They must be weary of having their attention called to the miserable conduct of Congress under the leadership of the Republican Party. If my party had conducted the Government as it has been conducted for the last 10 months under Republican rule, I should not want to hear the opposition discuss the political issues.

Mr. President, it is plain now that this campaign is to be conducted by the other side along camouflaging lines. Smoke screens are to be thrown up, deceptive situations are to be created, in order to deceive the American people as to what is really going on here at the Nation's Capital.

Republican leaders will go out and make a speech to the effect that an estimate was made of so many billions, and they cut that down and saved a billion or two billions. It is very easy to whisper into the ear of a Republican officeholder a suggestion that it will not do any harm for him to make a large estimate, so that when they get ready to appropriate they will cut down some of that estimate, which never was intended in fact to be enacted into law, and go to the country with a flourish of trumpets and say, "Behold, we have saved a billion dollars! That is what the Republican Party has accomplished in 12 months' time!"

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. Let me ask the Senator if the estimates to which allusion has been made were not the estimates transmitted to Congress by Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury under the last administration?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not so understand it. I have not seen that estimate. I did not hear the part of the speech of the Senator from Mississippi in which he referred to that; but I am speaking about what is going on now under Republican leadership and control. Estimates for expenses in war times were much larger, of course, than they should be in peace times.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to suggest, we have now the Budget submitted by the President, and the estimates are no longer transmitted by the Secretaries.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has pointed out that by an economic administration of the affairs of this Government over $400,000,000 could be saved other than that which you have provided for in appropriation even under the Budget system.

But I was starting out to say that it is plain to my mind, and it is plain to everyone, that the Republican Party intends to conduct the next campaign along camouflaging lines. They want to go and say: "We have done this and we have done that. Sound your trumpets; unfurl your campaign banners; on with the march. Behold the printed stories about what we say we have done." The substance of the thing will not be there. What has it done? It has done nothing. The only bill of any consequence that Congress has passed which has benefited any considerable number of people was the bill reviving the War Finance Corporation, the passage of which was brought about purely and wholly by a combination of southern Democrats and western Republicans. I suggested to a western Senator that if the western Republican Senators would join with the Democratic Senators from the South we could pass the bill reviving the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, in that connection let me remind the Senator that months ago I offered a resolution in the Senate, and had it referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, requesting the President of the United States to remove Gov. W. P. G. Harding from the Federal Reserve Board, and the Republican Committee on Banking and Currency refuses to take any action one way or the other.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is a sample of what is going on here. Here a Senator from a great sovereign State of this Union comes and levels charges against the head of the Reserve Board, who has been thoroughly discredited long since, the man in charge of the money supply and the credit of a hundred million people, and a committee of the Senate, which is controlled by the Republican Party, refuses even to consider a resolution to take from the leadership of that board a man whose conduct has shown him to be the subservient tool of Wall Street.

The Republicans will not get very far with this camouflaging business. We may not have the newspapers, but we will go out amongst the people and storm every stronghold in the Republic before the fall election. The people shall know the truth.

The Federal Reserve Board here in Washington with its large publicity fund gets busy whenever a Senator rises and assails its deflation policy, and it carries on a propaganda to counteract the influence of what he says when he was fighting to save his Nation from the dangers which threaten it.

The people are entitled to know these things. The press is largely in the hands of the big moneyed interests. It is a pitiable condition we have to face. Seven million people are out of employment, and the Republican Party comes in with the camouflaging statement, "We have reduced the number to 6,000,000, we have reduced it to 5,000,000." Where are they who tramp the streets of this great Republic of the West, crying out for work that they may live?

They say they have reduced the number; that they now have employment. Where are they employed? Around the corner, it is said. When you go around the corner, they are not there. They take a poor, unfortunate man who has been out of employment for weeks and weeks and give him a day's work this week and a day's work next week and say they are now giving him employment. They have done nothing of the kind. Those men are still out of employment. Six or seven millions of people who want work can not find employment.

Many factories are standing still. Labor is unemployed. Agriculture is prone upon the ground, under the blighting touch of the Republican administration. Yet they stand up here in the face of the dreadful conditions that are upon the country and boast of what they say they are doing for the American people.

Mr. President, no bill of any consequence to the masses of the people can get through this body unless it is O. K'd by Wall Street. That is the situation, and we might just as well tell the truth about it. No bill which affects the control of the money supply of this country, when the South and the West are prostrate, can get through this Chamber without the O. K. of Wall Street.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will suspend while the Senate receives a message from the President of the United States.

[A message from the President of the United States was transmitted to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.]

Mr. HEFLIN. These messages are refreshing. It is very pleasing to receive them, but we want some proof now that something is going to be done for the benefit of the American people. We can not get a fair settlement for the soldiers who carried the flag to victory; we can not get any help for agriculture, which is the corner stone of all other industries; we can not get any money in circulation for the business needs of the land—and still we love to hear from the President. We love to have these messages. If this message had come on yesterday, I would have known it was a valentine.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that no bill could pass unless O. K'd by Wall Street.

Mr. HEFLIN. I mean any bill in the interest of the masses.

Mr. BURSUM. I also understood the Senator to say that the War Finance Corporation bill was a good bill. I desire to ask the Senator if that bill was O. K'd by Wall Street?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all.

Mr. BURSUM. Then there are some exceptions.

Mr. HEFLIN. There are exceptions; because the Democrats and the western Republicans got together and forced the passage of that bill. I am talking about the Republican part of the Senate. It is impossible for a bill which affects the people of this country to pass the Republican Congress, the Republican part of it, which is not O. K'd by the big moneyed interests of this country whose headquarters are located in Wall Street.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I gladly yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator has called attention to the passage of the War Finance Corporation bill. I know the Senator from Alabama will remember that the leader of the majority [Mr. LODGE] moved to adjourn early in the summer, and if that motion had not been defeated by those who did not agree with him, there would have been none of this legislation which the Senator from New Mexico and others are bragging about.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is absolutely true; and we would have adjourned had it not been for the Democratic votes cast in this body, as the RECORD will show. So that Congress would have gone, the Senate would have adjourned, but for the little handful of Democrats who, Spartan like, fought the time-serving leaders of the other side to the death, and who are going to continue to do that, and who are going to drive them out of the House this fall.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, do Democrats cast more than one vote each in this body?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; they do not.

Mr. BURSUM. There are only 36 Democratic Senators. Do they cast more than 36 votes?

Mr. HEFLIN. Our tribe will be increased this fall.

Mr. BURSUM. There are 96 votes in the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. BURSUM. Is 36 a majority of 96?

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator fails to tell the Senate and the country that there are always 25 or 30 Republican Senators absent. There are 25 or 30 Senators on the other side always away. They are not here now. They are drawing their salaries, but they are attending to their private business at home. Some of them are down in Florida now, fanning themselves as they stroll upon the snow-white sands on the Florida beach.

Mr. BURSUM. Perhaps there are a few of them here. The roll calls and the record votes will not bear out the statement of the Senator, however. In relation to the War Finance Corporation bill, which the Senator so heartily approved, in which I agree with him, permit me to call the attention of the Senator—

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. BURSUM. To the fact that it was upon this rostrum that President Harding appeared and requested the passage of the War Finance Corporation bill, and shortly thereafter the bill was passed and became a law. Was that brought about by the influence of the Democratic Party?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield to the Senator to make a speech. I do not blame him for wanting to say something when this awful indictment is read against the bosses of his party, but I assert again that the War Finance Corporation would never have been revived but for a coalition between the southern Democrats and western Republicans.

Mr. CARAWAY. Not including the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HEFLIN. And I do not believe the Senator from New Mexico was a party to that arrangement.

I said a little while ago that there were always 25 or 30 Republican Senators absent. I challenge the Senator to take the roll calls for two weeks back and show me over 50 or 51 Senators answering to their names, and there are 96 Members of this body.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator from Alabama that more than once when an important bill was on its passage here Senators who were absent from the other side had to be telegraphed for, and a request was made from the other side to this for us to vote as soon as possible so that they could get away again.

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly, Mr. President. This jack-o'-my-lantern business that is being carried on down here is going to be carried to the people.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator is not really complaining because the Senators on the other side are absent. I think it is in the aid of good Government for them to go to Florida.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not fall out with my friend about that.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, that would be all right if, after we release them and they go away, they stay away.

Mr. HEFLIN. We are going to fix it so that some of them can stay away after the next fall election.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am delighted to yield, because the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the only paper we can talk for which goes amongst the people and in which they can read what we say.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think of any real, constructive, beneficial piece of legislation, beneficial to the people of this country, except such as the revival of the War Finance Corporation and the Senate amendments to the present revenue act regarding surtaxes? This legislation was passed by cooperation between the Democrats and that element in the Republican Party which we characterize either as progressive or constituting what is known as the agricultural bloc.

I will ask the Senator, further, if this particular piece of legislation, which he says is doing so much good in the country now—the War Finance Corporation act—a piece of legislation which has helped toward saving the agricultural industry in this country from ruin and absolute bankruptcy, could possibly have been passed but for the votes of the Democratic Party, supplemented by the insurgent vote of the Republican Party?

Mr. HEFLIN. It would not have been possible, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. I believe the Senator has referred to the fact that we have had no legislation in the interest of the farmer, although we had been in session five or six months, although the friends of the farmers in this body were pressing for legislation, and we were about to adjourn and go home for a solid month, with the statement that when we got back the time would be barely sufficient to pass the revenue and the tariff bills which it was proposed to pass during the extraordinary session, and in that situation, if the real friends of the people of this country on both sides of the Chamber, on this side and on the other side alike, had not combined and fought against and defeated that proposition of adjournment for one month, would we have passed the legislation establishing the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. HEFLIN. I agree with the Senator entirely that we would not.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator knows, if he will pardon me, that the leader on the other side of the Chamber had arranged for an adjournment, the stage was set, and it was supposed that the plan was going through without any serious opposition; but right at the time when it was proposed to adjourn, Senators upon this side of the Chamber led in a fight to hold Congress in session until something had been done for agriculture, and they were joined by a sufficient number on the other side of the Chamber, who felt the same deep interest in the farmer that we felt, to keep Congress here. As the result of that action, we have this beneficial legislation.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM], who so valiantly defended his party, has evidently packed his bag and gone also.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; and I think we will thin them out considerably this fall. Senators who go home and stay at home while the Senate is in session, unless detained by sickness, ought to be permitted to stay there permanently. They ought not to be bothered by having to come back here. I remember the other day when you had up the proposition to take away from the American Congress the right to handle the indebtedness of foreign countries owing this Government about $11,000,000,000, principal and interest, and the Senate was trying to determine what it would do about collecting that debt, and a great many of us were insisting that we proceed to collect some of it until we could at least be just to the soldiers who saved the Nation, we saw the Republican Party, under the whip and spur of their leadership, bring in a measure to take it away from the people's Congress and turn it over to five commissioners to be named by the President, to take the whole thing over and postpone the interest down through the future years and postpone the payment of that foreign indebtedness in order that Wall Street might collect the $5,000,000,000 due from these same countries. I saw you bring in those same Senators. They came in and seated themselves for a while and, when their names were called, voted to take this matter out of the hands of Congress and turn it over to a commission, just as Wall Street wanted it done.

And now they are gone again. Of course, you can get them here whenever a measure comes in that affects the big interests. They come and they vote as the big bosses suggest, and then they return to their native habitat. That is what we see going on here. If a measure comes up like putting a farmer on the Federal Reserve Board, you bring them in. All of the forces are marshaled then.

They caused you to strike the word "farmer" from the amendment, with the promise from the President that he would put a farmer upon the board; and yet you permitted it to state in the law that two bankers should be on the board. Why this discrimination against the farmers of America? Why not write it in the law that one shall be a farmer? Is the farmer to be an outcast, and stand like an outpost of winter, shunned and scorned by the Republican administration? This man with the hoe, upon whose back is the burden of the world; this man who produces that which feeds and clothes the world—why is he not entitled by the administration to have his name written into the law, so that he could sit in judgment upon the matter of controlling the money supply and credits of the country when it is up for consideration?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia. Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I beg to remind the Senator from Alabama that the man who will probably have more influence than any other in the extension of this enormous foreign debt is holding his office in violation of a law passed by the very first Congress that ever assembled. Mr. Secretary Mellon, who will act on that commission, is holding his office in violation of law, and could on any day that we saw fit be impeached, and could on any day that anybody swore out a warrant against him be arrested and sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I did not know that. The Secretary of the Treasury is a very, very wealthy man. I am not falling out with any man for having wealth. I like to see a man acquire a fair share of this world's goods. I like to see him enterprising and industrious, but I do not like to see the governmental machinery of my country operated to the advantage of the few and to the hurt and injury of the many.

I have seen the farmers of my country go out and work harder than ever to make the biggest crop they ever produced and then sell it for less than they got for a crop half its size. That is not encouraging industry and enterprise in the citizen. That is putting a penalty upon industry and enterprise. Yet, if a man serves special interests and gains favor with the Republican Party, the Government is used to turn money into his coffers, and the many are fleeced in order that the few may flourish.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I think the Senator from Alabama was present when I referred to the law of 1789 as it appears now in section 243 of the Revised Statutes, which declares in substance that no man shall be Secretary of the Treasury of the United States or Comptroller of the Currency who is engaged in any commerce or business. Upon that very clause President Grant withdrew the name of A. T. Stewart, whom he had appointed to the office of Secretary of the Treasury without knowing that this law was in existence. Mr. Mellon is disqualified to hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury, and he violates this penal law every day that he does hold it.

Mr. HEFLIN. We are slowly but surely disclosing the situation. I think before the fall elections come we will be able to reach the people with a good many things that they never would know from reading the big, camouflaged headlines of subsidized newspapers.

The power of the purse is a wonderful power in politics, and it has been recognized by the Republican Party recently. You have openly invited its poisonous participation in politics. It makes barter of the ballot, and yet the Republican Senate just a few days ago indorsed the sale of a seat in this body. What more do the corrupt money interests want than to have you confirm the sale of seats that they buy? They want to control this body permanently. What do they care about who controls the House if they have a majority in this body that will do their bidding? They have a majority here to-day that will do it. You have 169 majority in the House and 24 majority in the Senate, and yet the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], or some other Senator on the other side of the aisle, stands up and talks about the Democrats killing time. If we did not call attention to what is going on here, we would be unfaithful, we would not be worthy to occupy seats in this body.

Why should I keep silent when I see forces put into operation that mean the ruin of my country? Why should I keep quiet when I see policies pursued that bring distress and disaster to business amongst the common masses? Why should I remain silent and let this machinery work on and on when I know that it means ruin to legitimate business in my country? It is my duty to talk about it. I am as much of a soldier in this body as the soldier on the firing line in France. There were great issues at stake there. There are great issues at stake here.

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and it is the duty of those who have taken the oath at the altar place of this Chamber to be faithful and to point out the evils that exist, and to make suggestions as to remedies. It is our duty to do it, and as long as I am able to talk I am going to battle upon this floor for the principles of right and justice and do my duty as

I see it. I am trying to do something of value for the people whose Government this is. I do not propose to recognize the right of Wall Street to dictate the policies of Congress. I do not propose to say that Wall Street is right when she wants the Government of a hundred million people to postpone the payment of $11,000,000,000 due to it while Wall Street collects a private debt of $5,000,000,000. I do not propose to sanction the policy that denies to the soldiers who wore the uniform to save my country's life in the hour of its peril a fair and just settlement at the hands of the Government they love.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The law to which I have referred is one of the oldest on the statute books, one of the first ever passed by the American Congress. It was indeed the First Congress under President Washington that enacted the law. Whenever that bill is found, approved by the President, it will bear the name of President George Washington. Here is a Secretary of the Treasury who is violating the law every day of his life, thereby incurring the penalty of a fine or imprisonment, and of being forever afterwards incapacitated to hold office.

I would like to have the Senator from Alabama express himself as to what the people will think as to the way our Government is being run, when a criminal, unconvicted but disobeying the penal law, openly and notoriously committing a crime, is left in charge of the national funds and the refunding of a foreign debt of $11,000,000,000?

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, Mr. President, it deserves to be condemned by Congress. You have men in the Federal Reserve Board most thoroughly discredited. As I have said here repeatedly and say again, they have lost the confidence of the honest business men of the whole country, and now for a Secretary of the Treasury to be appointed on this high commission when he violates the law as plainly as has been pointed out by the Senator from Georgia is, of course, wrong. It is time that we should speak out, and Senators on the other side of the Chamber must be patient while we call attention to these things. The people may not, I repeat, get to read in the newspapers what is going on here, but those who peruse the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will see that somebody was on guard and somebody was pointing out these evils at the time they took place.

This camouflage business that I spoke of reminds me of the story of the wall that had a large crack in it. It was a big wall 20 feet high. The people who had to pass along by it constantly said, "That wall ought to be fixed; it is going to fall down on somebody." The mayor of the little town went down there and pasted some paper over the crack. The paper had beautiful pictures on it, and when anyone looked for the crack in the wall he could not see anything but the pictures on the paper. The crack in the wall had not been fixed, but the mayor's clever tactics simply hid it from view. The painful wounds and ugly scars that your ruinous policies have inflicted upon the once robust body of American business are still there, and inspired newspaper fiction will neither hide them or heal them. We are calling attention to your efforts to deceive the American people. We are warning the people to be on the lookout for campaign fiction.

Mr. CARAWAY. And prosperity is just around the corner.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; prosperity is just around the corner, as my friend from Arkansas suggests.

And when you get around the corner you do not find it. You call up the local banker and ask, "Are you being supplied with funds sufficient to serve the needs of business in your locality?" and he says, "No, sir; but do not tell the Federal Reserve Board that I said that. If you do they will make it hard for me." You ask the merchant, "Are you being taken care of? Is your business prosperous?" He says, "No; I am practically broke and I am doing nothing." Well, then, how about the farmer? "How are you getting along, you to whom we looked for food for our Nation and the allied nations during the great World War? Where is the farm that you cultivated when Wilson was President and the Democrats were in power?" And he answers, "It is gone." "Where are the stock which you had around the premises when all was well with you and a happy family in the dear little home?" "Gone," he says, "we have moved away; the stock have been sold or sacrificed; the farm has gone to make a payment on a debt incurred when my debt-paying power and purchasing power was equal to the price of the things I had to buy." "Where are you who wore the uniform of the country?" And the ex-soldiers, thousands of them say, "I have not anything to do; I am out of employment and hungry." "Where are the millions of the happy and well-paid wage earners of the country when the Democrats were in power and there were no idle men and women?" The sad answer comes, "We are out of employment; we are not permitted to earn a living for ourselves and families."

Then I ask Senators, Who is it that is having prosperity? Where is it? Let us get down to brass tacks. Who is it under your party's régime that is enjoying prosperity?

Mr. CARAWAY. Will Hays, who has gone into the movies. Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the bankers of Wall Street are flourishing. They get all the money they want; they never lack for a dollar; they can get every day in the year every dollar they want for speculative purposes; they can acquire all the credit they need for any project. But the South can not get it; the West can not get it. Still Senators on the other side of the Chamber are talking about prosperity. Where is it, pray tell me?

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a little poem which has just been handed to me by my good friend from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], which is entitled "We wanted a change." Mr. President, if the millions of men and women who went up to the ballot box shouting "Hurrah for Harding!" and "Hurrah for normalcy!" could withdraw those little ballots, the Republicans would have to run them all down with a search warrant and take them by force in order to ever get them back again. You never could again marshal them for the present régime.

They wanted a change. They were deceived by this camouflage stuff that you carried on, discrediting the greatest administration since the Government was established. I except none. There never was a time in the history of this Republic when labor was so fully employed, when industry was running so regularly, when the mass of the people had so much money in their pockets, and when prosperity was so general. Why, the average man and woman had a little bank account under the Democratic administration.

Nobody has a bank account now of any consequence except the big bankers of Wall Street. They have accumulated the money supply of the country; they have drawn it in; and they let it out, little by little, as they wish to do through the Federal Reserve Board's policy. That is what is going on. Let me remind you again that an old farmer out in Kansas the other day, when he was asked how he liked this Republican crowd, said, "To thunder with your Republican normalcy; I want to get back to Democratic prosperity."

Oh, Mr. President, you know there are people in this country who believe that the mass of the people constitute legitimate prey for their greed and avarice, just as a hawk views chickens and thinks that he has got a right to swoop down and pluck them and pick them and eat them whenever he chooses. These heartless and arrogant interests feel that they have a right to have the use of the Government for that purpose. They get in with the controlling power; they say "Institute this policy," and down they swoop upon the people and take their substance. That is what is being done under the reign of the Republican Party to-day.

But let me read the poem:

WE WANTED A CHANGE.

We were getting a dollar six bits for our corn,
We could sell every hide from the hoof to the horn—
We wanted a change and we got it.

Now we're getting a quarter for corn. It's so cheap
That we burn it for fuel, our toes warm to keep.
We can't sell the hides so we bury them deep—
But we wanted a change and we got it.

The skilled workman pulled down eight bucks a day,
Now he's darned glad to work for any old pay—
But he wanted a change and he got it.

There was work and a plenty for every man's son,
And warm food and shelter when that work was done;
Now millions are idle, heretofore there was none—
But we wanted a change and we got it.

Mr. Wilson spent quite a long time "over there"
For peace he was fighting, but what did we care—
We wanted a change and we got it.

Now all that we read is of golf and vacations,
Gay week ends at summer resorts and plantations;
Not what we expect from the head of a Nation—
But we wanted a change and we got it.

We were prosperous and happy, well fed, and gay,
Now millions of children go hungry each day—
We wanted a change and we got it.

Meanwhile we hear this: "It was certain to come—
Reaction from war time," and war three years done.
If we wanted a lemon we sure did pick one—
But we wanted a change and we got it.

(Omaha World-Herald.)

When the Democrats were in power we, the people, were writing poems about happy homes, about the laboring man and the strength of his mighty arm; we were describing happiness upon the farm and telling how, when the cows came home in the evening, the calves would bleat a deep-mouthed welcome; and how we used to see the rich yellow butter upon the table and round, fine biscuit and ham sliced and swimming in red gravy and chickens galore, and all of the good things to eat. That was under the rule of the Democratic Party, but now we are writing about empty pails and unemployment and people in distress and panics and bankruptcies. They "wanted a change, and they got it." Mr. President, I have talked to hundreds and all of them that I have seen say they are ready and anxious now for a change. I heard of a prognosticator of politics who told me that a gentleman out in Ohio who occasionally polled the passengers on trains polled the passengers in a car in the fall of 1920 in which there were 25 people, 19 of whom were Republicans and the other 6 Democrats. He asked them at that time whom they favored for President, and all of them said they were going to vote for Harding. In the same territory two weeks ago there were 25 or 30 on the train, two-thirds of them being Republicans and about one-third Democrats, and he asked, "If you all had it to do over again, how many of you would vote for Harding now?" And not one hand went up. The situation has so completely changed in 11 months' time. The Republican Party has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. You may have your yachts and your week-end vacations, but the American people want a change, and they are going to have it this fall.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am wondering if President Harding will beat Mr. Taft out of a position which he occupies. It was said that more people voted to make Mr. Taft an ex-President than any other man ever commanded, but I am almost sure that Mr. Harding is fixing to beat him out of that position.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as I have remarked here once before, somebody has said that Mr. Taft went in by a million majority and went out by unanimous consent. The present President is going to run him a mighty close race.

The President is a good grand-stand player and a gracious smiler; but the time has come for action; the American people are demanding a delivery of the goods, and they have got a right to make that demand. Whose Government is this anyhow? Does it belong to the pompous purse-proud millionaires of Wall Street or does it belong to the American people who when its life is imperiled rush to its rescue and pour out their blood in order to save it and perpetuate it? Now it is the duty of Senators to fight here in the homeland for these people in time of peace, and to see that their rights are safeguarded.

I wish to say to you, Senators, that when the money supply and credits of this country are so manipulated that they will not serve the needs of the laboring man and will not serve the needs of the farmer and will not meet the needs of the merchant and the local bankers something is radically wrong. What is money? It is the lifeblood of business, and when a few selfish and sordid people control it they control the life-giving force of the business life of the Republic. That is what is going on to-day. Yet the President sits there smiling constantly, bowing graciously, while the Federal Reserve Board right under his nose, not a hundred yards from where he sits, strikes down the legitimate business of the country.

The President can remove that board. He should remove it. If Gov. Harding had done as much for the Democratic ticket as he did for the Republican ticket, does anybody doubt that his resignation would have been asked for? Since President Harding has not taken action along those lines, what does it mean? It means that he indorses the deflation policy of that board; it means that the board has done what it was ordered to do. I charge to-day that the deflation policy that has brought ruin to the country was invited and started by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] when he had passed through the Republican Senate on the 17th day of May his resolution calling on the board to know what they were doing about deflation, and so forth.

As I told you last Thursday, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] saw it. He arose and told you that it meant deflation. He said it was an invitation for deflation; and Gov. Harding was enthusiastic in his reply. He wrote back to the Senate that he would employ every power at his command to carry out the suggestions contained in the deflation resolution.

What did that mean? That meant that the deflation policy was on. Who was in control? The Republicans were in control of the House and the Senate. Who introduced the resolution? A Republican Senator. Who is Gov. Harding? He supported the Republican ticket in the fall election, and he is holding his place and retaining his power under a Republican President, and the work of destruction goes on; and the President of the United States and the Republican Congress can not escape responsibility for the ruin that was wrought under that inexcusable and indefensible deflation policy.

Mr. President, I did not intend to speak more than 5 or 10 minutes. I want to remind the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURNETT], the Senate, and the country that when we did revive the War Finance Corporation, as I said here in a lengthy speech last Thursday, we had section 2 in that joint resolution, and section 2 provided that the Federal Reserve Board was directed to see to it that financial aid was extended to the farmers of the country at as reasonable a rate of interest as possible in keeping with sound banking.

Mr. President, what did that mean? That was calling upon the forces in control of the currency and credits of the country to go to the aid of American farmers in dire distress. That was inviting Congress to tell the board to go and do the thing that would carry relief to the great agricultural army of the South and West. What happened to it? You refused to pass it. Wall Street did not want it. The Federal Reserve Board did not want it. A Republican Congress killed it. We got through the War Finance Corporation revival part of the resolution, but a Republican Congress killed the part which commanded that money should go to the farmers and aid them in holding their farm products off the market until the price will yield a living profit.

Who caused that resolution to be killed? I made the statement in the outset that no bill that affected the interests of the money changers could go through this Congress without the sanction of Wall Street. Who can deny it? The part of the resolution that you killed went to the very root of the evil. That suggested a remedy, to go to the rescue of farmers in distress, and a Republican Congress said, "No; we will not instruct the board to do that," and they killed that part of the joint resolution.

How are you going to escape responsibility for that? That is a plain proposition. The joint resolution said in substance, "Congress directs the Federal Reserve Board to go to the aid of the farmers with credits and currency at the lowest rate of interest possible in keeping with sound banking," and you killed that part of it. You struck it out.

How are you going to defend your position and claim that you are not responsible for that failure to lend a helping hand to millions of farmers in distress? I say again that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMACK], a Republican, offered the resolution that started deflation, and then in the fall time, when we tried to get you to pass a resolution to instruct your Federal Reserve Board to aid the farmer, you killed that part of the resolution.

What do you suppose the farmers of the West will do when they realize this fall that we presented to you a resolution calling on the Federal Reserve Board to go to their rescue and to see that credits and currency were extended to them, and you would not permit it to pass? Do you think they will vote as they voted in 1920? No, sir! Because they have seen and suffered enough since you have been in power. You have had control of the House and Senate for three years, and what have you done? You have marked time. You used to criticize us for indulging in "watchful waiting," and you have been waiting with your eyes shut. You have just been lumbering along in the dark obeying your master's voice.

Look out yonder on the South and see those people coming out of the little lanes, and see their vehicles trailing each other as they come down the public highways. You say: "What means all this?" They say: "We are coming out of the farming communities of the county." "Where are they going?" "They are going down to the cotton factories to put to work in the mills those boys and girls that ought to be in school. When the father could make a living on his farm, they were in school. They were happy out there; but those little homes are broken up now." They are going to the factories and the presence of an oversupply of labor will reduce the wages of those already there.

That is what is going on under your party's control. Nothing except the work of the gambler grafter seems to flourish under your reign. Show me one legitimate business that is flourishing under the reign of the Republican Party—one; just one! I pause for a reply from any Republican upon this floor. Name me one legitimate industry in all the confines of the country that is in a prosperous condition to-day. I get no answer. There is not one. The gambling Monte Carlo of Wall Street is flourishing. Call money revels in rank luxuriance. All the places that feed upon the substance of honest toil and legitimate business are doing well; but legitimate business dies under the withering touch of the Republican Party in power.

Mr. President, what is the Republic for? Are we going to sustain this country and make it the glorious thing that the fathers intended that it should be—a Government established for the welfare of the citizen? That is the whole end and aim of constitutional government. What are we doing to-day? The citizen has his mood injuriously affected, his morale broken, his property swept away, his means of livelihood taken from him, and you are creating an army of bolsheviks and anarchists. You are sowing the seeds of hate in men who offered their lives for their country.

Senators, the time has come to talk plainly about this thing, because he who sees danger and has not the courage to point it out in this Chamber is himself a cringing coward.

Oh, Mr. President, I would that conditions were different. I would rejoice to see conditions improved; and no Senator in this body can charge that I ever voted against a measure here that sought the common weal. And while I believe that my party holds the right solution for all the questions that pertain to the government of man—partisan Democrat that I am—I have voted for and advocated in this body measures offered by some Republicans from the West because I thought they were good measures and would do good. I place at all times the welfare of my country above partisan success. Why should not all of us do so? Life is short at best, and we go this way but once. It is a question of the measure of service that we give while we are in this Chamber. This place was intended to be a place of faithful service to the American people.

It was intended to be filled with men who would always look to the welfare of the country, who would enact laws that would bless and benefit the mass of the people, and who would not legislate for a favored few, to the hurt and injury of the many.

I congratulate the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] upon the able and splendid speech that he made. He arraigned the Republican Party and pointed out its shortcomings and showed wherein it had undertaken to deceive the people. That is legitimate. If we fall short of our duty we are failing in the work that we were sent here to do, because, Mr. President, no Senator ever ought to reach the time in this body when his own comfort is of more concern to him than the welfare of his country. He never ought to reach the time when he is afraid to challenge the forces of injustice and wrong.

He ought never to reach the time when he seeks to move against the lines of least resistance. He ought to be ready at all times to fight, if need be, any unrighteous cause which puts up its head in this body. We ought to point the way to a better day, when the masses of the people in the main will enjoy the fruits of the prosperity to which this country is entitled 24 hours in every day and 52 weeks in every year of its history.

In this country, with its mighty resources, there is no excuse for anybody being out of employment. There is no excuse for any farm being deserted. There is no excuse for shutting down the industries of our land, and a country as rich and resourceful as ours is should not hoard the Nation's lifeblood, the money and credits of the country, but it should see to it that these life-giving forces should circulate and restore prosperity in every nook and corner of the country.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, when the refunding bill was on its passage through the Senate I called the attention of those who had charge of that measure to the law of 1789, which declares that no man engaged in business or commerce shall be eligible to hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury.

I called their attention to the fact that this was a penal law, and any man who violated the law was subject to prosecution, and upon conviction should be punished by a fine, by imprisonment, and by incapacity thereafter to hold office.

I instanced the case of President Grant, who, not being a lawyer, was not aware of the statute of 1789, and who appointed A. T. Stewart, the merchant prince of New York, to be Secretary of the Treasury. In Mr. Blaine's Twenty Years of Congress, volume 2, page 425, we find this statement:

Alexander T. Stewart, the well-known merchant of New York, was named for Secretary of the Treasury; and Adolph E. Borie, of Philadelphia, long known in that city as a man of probity and wealth, was named for Secretary of the Navy. No new nomination was made for Secretary of War, and the hope with many was that Gen. Schofield might be continued in a place whose duties he had so faithfully and so successfully discharged.

The President was very anxious to have Mr. Stewart in his Cabinet, and was therefore surprised and chagrined to find, after he had been nominated, that under the law he was not eligible to the office of Secretary of the Treasury. In the act establishing the Treasury Department, passed at the first session of the First Congress under the Federal Government, it was provided that no person could be appointed Secretary, Assistant Secretary, comptroller, auditor, Treasurer, or register who was "directly or indirectly concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce." It was further provided that any person violating this act should be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and upon conviction fined $3,000, removed from office, and forever thereafter rendered incapable of holding any position under the Government of the United States. Gen. Grant frankly informed the Senate that he had ascertained Mr. Stewart's disability after the nomination and suggested that "in view of these provisions of law and the fact that Mr. Stewart has been unanimously confirmed by the Senate he be exempted, by joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress, from the operation of the law."

The Senate had actually confirmed Mr. Stewart, and President Grant requested the Senate to change that law so that Mr. Stewart could qualify and take the office. What followed? I read again from Mr. Blaine:

As soon as the President's message was read, Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, asked "unanimous consent to introduce a bill repealing so much of the act of September 2, 1789, as prohibits the Secretary of the Treasury from being concerned in carrying on the business of trade or commerce, and providing instead that in no case shall he act on any matter, claim, or account in which he is personally interested." Mr. Sumner objected to the introduction of the bill, suggesting that it ought to be "most profoundly considered before it is acted upon by the Senate." These proceedings were on Saturday, March 6. On Monday Mr. Sherman did not call up the bill, it having been ascertained in private conferences that the Senate was unwilling to pass it. On Tuesday Gen. Grant withdrew the request, Mr. Stewart resigned, and Hon. George S. Boutwell was nominated and confirmed as Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, the proofs were put in the record during the debate on the refunding bill, that Mr. Mellon is engaged most extensively in trade and commerce, being one of the most colossal business men on this continent or abroad; just as ineligible to hold the office of Secretary of the Treasury as would be J. P. Morgan, or as is John D. Rockefeller, or as is a member of the firm of Sears, Roebuck & Co., if you please.

In my hand I hold the act, in the Revised Statutes, which was passed at the first session of the First Congress. It is numbered in the book as section 243, and it provides just as Mr. Blaine quotes in his book, and I therefore will not read it again; but in order that the country may have no doubt about it, I ask unanimous consent that the statute may appear as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

SEC. 243. No person appointed to the office of Secretary of the Treasury, or First Comptroller, or First Auditor, or Treasurer, or Register, shall, directly or indirectly, be concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce, or be owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel, or purchase by himself, or another in trust for him, any public lands or other public property, or be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public securities of any State or of the United States, or take or apply to his own use any emolument or gain for negotiating or transacting any business in the Treasury Department, other than what shall be allowed by law; and every person who offends against any of the prohibitions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor and forfeit to the United States the penalty of $3,000, and shall, upon conviction, be removed from office and forever thereafter be incapable of holding any office under the United States; and if any other person than a public prosecutor shall give information of any such offense, upon which a prosecution and conviction shall be had, one-half the aforesaid penalty of $3,000, when recovered, shall be for the use of the person giving such information.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. It is a serious thing, it seems to me, when any officer of the Government, but especially the Secretary of the Treasury, charged at this time with the handling of the greatest sum of money that ever was put into the hands of one man to handle, is violating the law every day of his life, is, according to the record, an impudent criminal, whom anybody could have arrested on swearing out a warrant, and who would have to stand and confess his guilt, if his business connections be what they appear to have been at the time that proof was put in the record.

We ourselves are sworn officers. The Constitution leaves us no discretion. As honorable men we are bound to do what we can to have the law properly administered.

Admitting that neither Mr. Mellon nor President Harding knew of this law at the time the nomination was made; admitting that the attention of the Senate was not called to it at the time of the confirmation, the President knows it now, Mr. Mellon knows it now, and there is not a lawyer here who can say one word in defense of either the President or the Secretary. If so, I want him to rise and say it.

How can any man defend it? We are to go before the people in a few months to render an account of our stewardship. What will the people think of us if we have continued from day to day to let this man exercise the highest financial power in the world when he is openly, audaciously, unscrupulously violating a law that has on it the sanction of George Washington's name?

Is any man in this country above the law? Is the Chief Executive above the law? What is the law of impeachment for?

On the night of the debate on the refunding bill I asked the Republican Senators to consider this matter, especially in connection with giving Mr. Mellon discretionary powers over the refunding of $11,000,000,000 of indebtedness due to us by European countries. No Senator said a word. They did not consider it. They will consider it when they go before the people for reelection.

Republican Members of the other House will have to answer for it. The people will say, "Is that the law?" The people will say, "Are you violating it?" The people will say, "How dare you do that and put yourselves above the law? How dare you ask us to obey the law when you will not do it? How dare you prosecute men for trivial offenses, petty larcenies, lesser crimes, when this law is being violated every day by a member of the Cabinet?"

If Gen. Grant receded before that law and respected it, why should not President Harding show an equal respect for the statutes of his country? If Mr. Stewart had to resign, why should not Mr. Mellon resign?

Senators, this will be a millstone around your Republican necks in the future. You have been put on notice. The country knows you have been put on notice. What are you going to do about it? You had better do something about it.

I do not believe the American people will stand for an open and insolent violation of the law by a member of the Cabinet. I believe the storm of public indignation which can reach Mr. Mellon will reach those who should have reached Mr. Mellon and put him on notice. That man should resign. If he does not willingly resign, the President should demand his resignation and thus set the people an example of respect for the law.

RETIREMENT OF DISABLED ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that as soon as the unfinished business now before the Senate has been disposed of I intend to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1565) making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 16, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, Thou art ever present, truest Friend. Day unto day Thy providence uttereth speech. Thou dost throw open the doors of every morning and breathe Thy life and spread Thy light. O do Thou accept the gratitude of all our hearts. May the constancy of such divine care make urgent appeal to our moral obligation, strengthen our affections, and deepen our sympathies. Direct us how to employ all those standards of duty that inspire strength and courage and determine wise and intelligent government. Help any who may be against the sharp edges of care and affliction and at last may we have refuge in the folds of Thy arms. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is quite clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-three Members are present. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to suspend further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The doors will be opened.

The doors were opened.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 7077. An act to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3076. An act to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. HALE and Mr. PITTMAN members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Navy Department (headquarters, United States Marine Corps).

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 3076. An act to create a bureau of civil aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll of committees.

Mr. FOCHT (when the Committee on the District of Columbia was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2265, to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the bill S. 2265.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. This being a measure of unfinished business on District of Columbia day which has already had some consideration, is it in order that the same measure can be taken up under the Calendar Wednesday rule?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware that that question has ever been raised. The Chair is ready to hear any argument against it.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I raise the question as a point of order. Mr. Speaker, the rule provides that alternate Mondays—I think the second and fourth Mondays—shall be set aside for the consideration of business from the Committee on the District of Columbia. This measure has been up and considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and general debate for some little time has been had on it. It is therefore, I assume, the unfinished business on District day, and it would be in order upon another District day to proceed with its consideration.

Now, if it is in that condition upon District day, I can not quite see how that same committee can, when it should be reached upon Calendar Wednesday, take up the same measure under a different rule of the House, although I am aware that there is no limitation or restriction in the Calendar Wednesday rule.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. If the Speaker holds that this bill is in order, would we begin where we left off, or start in with the beginning of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if this is in order I suppose we would begin under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

Mr. SEARS. At the beginning of the bill, and if we fail to finish it to-day, when the next District day comes we would start where we left off?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know. I suppose that would be the case.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. On the last District day this bill was debated under general debate by the proponents of the measure for nearly their whole hour. Now, if it were taken up under the Calendar Wednesday rule the proponents of the bill would have another additional hour.

Mr. WALSH. They were not restricted to an hour on Monday under the District rule.

Mr. BLANTON. It would work to the advantage of the proponents of the bill and give them an hour's more time than those against the bill would have.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, does not the Calendar Wednesday rule provide, "on a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar, excepting bills which are privileged under the rule"? The question before the House would be whether a District bill would have a preference to-day under the rule.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, Mr. Speaker, they do have a certain privilege under the rule, setting aside alternate Mondays for District business, and that committee can start a measure on the first Monday of the session on which its business is in order and can keep that measure up the entire session on alternate Mondays until it is completed, resting, of course, upon the recognition by the Speaker and the action of the chairman of the committee. The days were set aside, I assume, in order to give this committee certain preference or precedence, so that the business relating to the District should be assured consideration and action. Now, if they can do that, it seems to me we are giving them an additional privilege if we permit a single measure to have this chance upon District day and also be permitted to call it up under another rule with different limitations as to debate, particularly when there are other measures from the same committee awaiting consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, take this case. We have a Unanimous Consent Calendar. A bill may be under consideration on unanimous-consent day and not finished, and that has occurred in the history of the House. Would anyone suggest that because a bill is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar it could not be considered on Calendar Wednesday? Would anyone suggest that because the consideration of a bill had been commenced on unanimous-consent day the committee would lose its right to call it up on Calendar Wednesday? I think not. The Committee on the District of Columbia does not report privileged bills. It has no greater privilege than the Committee on Claims or the Committee on War Claims or over any other bill on the Private Calendar. The rules set apart a day for the consideration of bills reported from the District of Columbia Committee, and the rules also set apart a day for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. But setting apart that day does not constitute bills which go on the calendar privileged bills. Privileged bills under the uniform and invariable practice of the House are those bills which are either a high privilege of the House or bills by virtue of the rules reported on the floor of the House. That carries with it the right to call up a bill at any time. Under the uniform practice of the House where the District Committee is authorized to call up a bill on a day set apart for it, the bill is not privileged. The only restriction in the Calendar Wednesday rule against the calling up of a bill is that privileged bills shall not be called up.

Now, we commenced the consideration of this bill on District day. I do not think if we go into Committee of the Whole on the bill that the bill will have to be read again the first time. The rule in reference to debate is a mere limitation on Calendar Wednesday, and of course that would apply.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. WALSH. The consideration of this measure having been begun on the day set apart for a certain committee, and having been under consideration, does not that thereby give the bill a certain privilege which other measures from the same committee do not have?

Mr. MANN. No; the committee would not be required to call up that bill on the next District day, even if it has not been disposed of. The committee exercises the right to call up such bills as it pleases. It is not required to call up unfinished business, and no Member of the House can bring it up except by direction of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. That also applies to privileged bills; the chairman of the committee is not obliged to bring it up.

Mr. MANN. Certainly not.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in the consideration of the rules of the House we should bear in mind that Calendar Wednesday was set aside for a particular purpose. We have a day set aside for unanimous consent, another day for the consideration of District of Columbia legislation, and another day for consideration of pension legislation. We have, under the rules, certain days for these committees to call up their bills, and practically all other legislation must await the call of its committee on Calendar Wednesday. It seems to me manifestly unjust and not within the spirit of the rules of the House to allow committees that have a right of way with their legislation to come in and usurp Calendar Wednesday, which is set aside for all legislation not privileged and not favored by special days under the rules. I submit that the other committees have a right to be heard on Calendar Wednesday and that privileged and favored committees should not come in and usurp this day when they have certain days set aside for their own legislation.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I think the Speaker in undertaking to decide the point of order should take into consideration the fact that when the House drafted the Calendar Wednesday rule it did it with full knowledge of the fact that a special day had been set aside for the District of Columbia for a great many years before; that the provision with relation to privileged bills refers, of course, to privileged bills reported from the floor. A District of Columbia bill would not be considered a generally privileged bill. It is privileged for that day. Why? Because the committee has the privilege of consideration that day, but not any particular bill is privileged.

Now, when they drew the Calendar Wednesday rule, the House did not see fit to say that any committee except those that had special days set aside; it said any committee. The District of Columbia Committee has the right on this call on Calendar Wednesday to call up any bill. If the committee desired to call up a bill, it makes no difference at what stage the consideration of a bill is; the question is whether this committee will call it up. If it calls up the bill, it means that we start with the consideration of the bill at the point at which we stopped when it was under consideration before.

There is a clear distinction between the rules for bringing it up and the rules for its consideration. If he calls up the bill, he calls it up in its present status; and to say that because forsooth on District day a certain bill was considered and reached a certain stage, the District of Columbia Committee is thereby robbed of its rights on Calendar Wednesday and is compelled to call up some other bill, would tend to delay legislation. Is it not in the interest of orderly legislation in the House that the District of Columbia Committee should do what it did to-day, call up that bill the consideration of which is more nearly completed? I see no view under which the Speaker ought to add by interpretation to the Calendar Wednesday rule and say that any committee may call up a bill except some committee that has a special day. I think the Speaker would not be justified in holding that. Personally I wish the Committee on the District of Columbia had waived its rights to-day, but it is clearly within its rights to claim this Calendar Wednesday, and no distinction having been made against it, it stands on the same footing with every other committee, and it may exercise its rights, and it is for it to determine which bill it will call up.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Assuming that last Monday there had been one hour's debate upon this measure, controlled by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, would the gentleman say that on Calendar Wednesday there should be only one hour's debate, controlled by those opposed to the measure?

Mr. WINGO. I should not think so necessarily.

Mr. WALSH. In what situation would the bill be?

Mr. WINGO. As a general proposition I think when the bill is called up it is called up in the status that existed at the time the House ceased consideration of it. That is the general proposition. In other words, the chairman of the committee does not call up the bill necessarily as a new matter. He calls up the bill for further consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose that under the five-minute rule section 12 of the bill had been reached on last Monday. Would we start in with section 13 under the five-minute debate to-day?

Mr. WINGO. I should think so. That would be my judgment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was just about to suggest in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the facts in this case are that no limitation has as yet been fixed upon debate on this bill. There was no limit fixed when it was under consideration on District day.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that.

Mr. MANN. The Calendar Wednesday rule does not give the right of general debate. It only limits it.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; it is only a limitation, not a right, so different chairmen have decided.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, the whole matter seems clear enough. If the argument offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] should prevail, then the Committee on the District of Columbia never would have Calendar Wednesday as an opportunity for the consideration of legislation. The gentleman reasons from the standpoint of sentiment rather than from the rule as laid down. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has set forth very clearly that this question of privilege for the District of Columbia Committee pertains to the day and not to the legislation. There is nowhere a denial of the right of the Committee on the District of Columbia to respond to the call of the committees. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to clause 8 of Rule XXIV, on page 396, which says:

The second and fourth Mondays in each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

That is interpreted to mean not a privilege as to legislation but as to that day. Well, that day has gone, and has been exhausted, and its rights so far as privilege is concerned are gone.

Now, on page 393, under clause 7 of Rule XXIV:

On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar excepting bills which are privileged under the rules.

Then what bills are privileged under the rules? We turn to page 309 and under clause 56 of Rule XI relating to committees we find an enumeration of the committees that have privilege, and the Committee on the District of Columbia is not one of them. Therefore I can only emphasize the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the question is one of substance rather than a limitation of the day.

The SPEAKER. So far as the Chair knows, this is a novel question, which has not been decided before either by the Speaker or by the House. It brings up for interpretation that clause of the rule which says that any bill may be called up on Calendar Wednesday excepting bills which are privileged under the rules. To hold that the Committee on the District of Columbia can not bring up a bill would be to hold that the bills of the District of Columbia are privileged. The Chair thinks what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] has just said is true, that it would mean that all bills reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia are prohibited from consideration on Calendar Wednesday, which would mean that the District of Columbia Committee might just as well not be called on Calendar Wednesday. There is, of course, force to the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] that Calendar Wednesday was meant for bills which were not privileged and therefore had no other opportunity, and that in that light District of Columbia bills having a certain day might be considered in that sense as privileged. But the words "privileged bills" have in habitual a certain meaning. They mean bills which are reported from the floor, and it seems to the Chair that he ought not to put an unusual interpretation on the words "privileged bills" by trying to imagine that the House, when the rule was adopted, meant to include something which is not ordinarily included in the words "bills that are privileged under the rules." And while this particular bill has already been considered in the Committee of the Whole and thereby has acquired a certain status there, the Chair does not think that has made of it a privileged bill. Therefore the Chair thinks that the bills of the Committee on the District of Columbia, not being of that class which are generally considered privileged bills, can be called up on Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 2265) to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration, and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. McARTHUR] will please take the chair.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of S. 2265, to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with Mr. McARTHUR in the chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of consideration is raised by the gentleman from Tennessee. The question is, Will the House now consider the bill?

The question being taken, on a division, there were—ayes 89, noes 46.

Accordingly, the committee determined to consider the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There have been but 51 minutes of debate upon this bill, and no one has been recognized yet in opposition to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, as most of the hour's time has been used by the proponents of the bill, as a member of the committee I ask for recognition against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is entitled to recognition as a member of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, had some one been recognized in opposition to the bill before?

The CHAIRMAN. No one has.

Mr. WINGO. The chairman of the committee has simply yielded time to different gentlemen? Is that the status?

Mr. BLANTON. That is the status.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania consumed 51 minutes.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. He gets an hour's time to-day.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that it might be better to have that question settled now. As I understand the gentleman from Illinois, he takes the position that the 51 minutes used the other day will not be charged up against the hour to-day.

Mr. MANN. That time does not count.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I insist on the bill being read.

Mr. MANN. But the bill has been read.

Mr. BLANTON. Then we have had 51 minutes of general debate in favor of it, too.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly plain. There was no limitation of time on general debate on Monday, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania could have used his hour and the gentleman from Texas could have used his hour, and other Members could have used hours, ad libitum, if they had asked for recognition and wanted to use them. The limitation fixed by the House under the Calendar Wednesday rule is that there shall not be more than two hours of general debate on Calendar Wednesday, and that is just as though the House ordinarily, after it has used some time in general debate, which is frequently the case, then limited the time.

Mr. JONES of Texas. According to the gentleman's argument some other man might get an hour, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania could not get another hour.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure that he would be entitled to the hour.

Mr. BLANTON. On that question of order I want to state this: The rule on District day is a little more restrictive than indicated by the gentleman from Illinois. The rule is that the chairman in charge of the bill is entitled to be recognized for an hour.

Mr. MANN. That is the rule always.

Mr. BLANTON. After he has been recognized for an hour on District day the rule provides that any member of the committee who is opposed to the bill, and if there is no such, that any Member of the House who is opposed to the bill is entitled to recognition for one hour. Then the debate can go on alternating an hour for and an hour against; but there is no rule applicable on District of Columbia day or on Calendar Wednesday or any other day that the proponents of a measure through the chairman can use 51 minutes in general debate in behalf of the bill and that can not be counted against them in debate.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman had full opportunity to occupy a part of his time. There was no denial. The gentleman forfeited his chance.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will remember that I had risen on the floor, and that I was asking for recognition in opposition to the bill when the House adjourned.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman opposed to the bill now is entitled to recognition unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to use the balance of his nine minutes, and then some Member in favor of the bill is entitled to recognition for the balance of the time in general debate.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman's opinion on the statement he just made. The rule does not say that debate shall be limited on Calendar Wednesday. It says that it shall be limited to two hours on bills called up on Calendar Wednesday. If the committee has already exhausted 51 minutes, how can we have two hours and nine minutes more of debate? The rule specifically states that on bills called up debate shall be limited to two hours. It does not say whether the debate is on Wednesday or Monday.

Mr. MANN. That is too fine haired for me to appreciate.

Mr. BEGG. I do not see anything so fine haired about it. It is plain English.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of opinion that this bill, having been called up under the Calendar Wednesday rule, it should be considered under that rule just as though there had been no previous debate upon the measure. The Chair, therefore, recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] for one hour.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one hour in opposition to the bill, and the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is reserved.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, no other method of procedure than that thus witnessed could have been proper concerning a bill of this character, a bill of 37 pages of legal phrases and terms and clauses and definitions. The chairman has just presented it to this committee of the Whole House for passage without one single word of explanation from the chairman of the committee or any member of it. That is the status now, because the Chair has ruled that this bill is taken up as if it had never been considered before; that it is now being presented to this committee for the first time. If that is so, then we may presume that we have not had any debate upon it. When the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] was on the floor the other day he admitted that he was not a lawyer, that he knew nothing about law; he admitted that the chairman of the committee was a newspaper man, that he knew how to conduct a country newspaper, but he was not a lawyer, he knew nothing about law. Yet, without any explanation at all of the meaning of any of these terms and phrases and legal definitions, if you please, 37 pages of them, we are asked now to pass the bill. It is just such procedure and just such acts of Congress that makes it possible for this bulky measure I hold in my hand, House bill 12, with 1,262 pages of general laws, to be codified and passed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. The people are tired of so many laws being passed unnecessarily. There are lots of lawyers in the United States who are having their hair turned gray trying to find out what the law of the land is, because we are forever and eternally trying to change the laws, because some pet of ours brings to us a bill which some slick lawyer has prepared for some special corporation in order to get a little inside on the business of the country.

Why, the other day just after this bill had been considered a newspaper of Washington said that when the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, aided and abetted by the chairman, another gentleman from Pennsylvania, passed this measure into law there was a big insurance company of the State of Pennsylvania and another big insurance company of the State of New York ready to come in under provisions of this law and write business for the country. Who prepared this bill for you, brother EDMONDS? It is prepared by an attorney; no one other than an attorney of great ability could have prepared that bill. It shows on its face ability in the legal line. The gentleman could not have prepared it because the gentleman said that he was not a lawyer. The gentleman introduced it in the House. Who brought it to you for introduction?

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to have one.

Mr. EDMONDS. This bill was prepared by Prof. S. S. Huebner, of the University of Pennsylvania, not an attorney, but an insurance expert employed by the Shipping Board and not interested in any insurance company in the country. [Applause in the galleries.]

The CHAIRMAN. The occupants of the galleries will refrain from applause.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman go a little bit further and tell us—perhaps Prof. Huebner is in the gallery furnishing applause for his friend from Pennsylvania who has so ably defended the author?

Mr. EDMONDS. Prof. Huebner is in Philadelphia. As the gentleman asked me a question I will answer it. This bill was submitted to the underwriters and their attorneys. It was also submitted to the steamship owners, who desired a bill of this character. It was also submitted to the people who insure, and every one of them doing business wanted this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman mind going a little further and telling us what big insurance company is that in Pennsylvania to which the newspaper the other day referred that in connection with another insurance company of New York expected to come in here after the passage of this bill and write the business?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have no knowledge that any insurance company in the State of Pennsylvania will leave Pennsylvania and come to Washington. They are doing a marine business to-day. I also have an idea that there is none coming from New York. It is very evident the newspapers did not understand that there were reinsurance companies going to be formed to come to the District of Columbia under this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the gentleman's underwriters and companies in Pennsylvania may be thoroughly satisfied with it. I take it that they are or he would not be so anxious to pass it into law, but I know that the people and insurance companies doing business in the State of Texas, one district of which I have the honor to represent, do not want this law.

Mr. EDMONDS. Let me answer that.

Mr. BLANTON. And they write me they are hampered and hamstrung by too many laws already. I will yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. I agree with the gentleman that the companies in Texas are hamstrung by laws, but your companies in Texas do not do marine insurance.

Mr. LAZARO. If the gentleman will yield, would the gentleman kindly point to the committee the defects in the bill? That is what we are interested in.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to do that, but I take it for granted that the proponents of the measure, if they expect the Congress of the United States to add this additional law to the great code of 1,262 pages of general laws, 37 pages more, that they would come here on the floor of the House and explain every provision to our entire satisfaction and convince us that every provision here is a good provision in behalf of not merely the insurance companies, but in behalf of all the people of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Although it has been suggested by the chairman there was no debate upon this bill, as a matter of fact I want to ask the gentleman if when this bill was called up a few days ago the author of the bill [Mr. EDMONDS] did not explain its provisions at great length upon the floor of the House?

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of fact, this bill should have gone to the Judiciary Committee [laughter] if it had not gone to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, because it is full of legal terms and phrases. Whenever a bill full of law phrases comes here that is to affect the interests of all the people of the United States, not merely the District of Columbia, but the interests of the United States, it is not for this committee to control. The gentleman admitted on the floor the other day that, as in their report they say, they offered this bill to the 48 States of the Nation as a model insurance bill, hoping thereby that it will be followed in every State of this Union as a model insurance bill. Then they offered it as a bill of general interest to the whole people of this country. It changes the law with 37 pages of phrases, terms, and definitions. There ought to be a law committee to pass upon it, a committee familiar with the laws of the land.

A MEMBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I want to answer the gentleman from Alabama first. He wanted to know if we had not had debate upon it.

It was just as I said the other day; the chairman rose and made a little preliminary statement, and did not go so far as he generally does by merely stating that he presumes they do not want to debate the bill, and moves the previous question in the Committee of the Whole, as he does in many instances. But he made a little preliminary statement, not as a lawyer, not explaining the bill from the legal standpoint, and then he yielded 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], who, so far as claims are concerned, is very well informed, and I doubt if there is any man in this House better prepared to pass upon claims of all kinds than is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS]. He is an expert upon them; he has had charge of them; he has had much experience with them; he has learned much about them. But he did not explain any feature of this bill to my satisfaction.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I have also had three years' experience on this. I think I know something about it.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman should have told us something about it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I happen to be a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and I want to say that there is not a man on that committee, and not a man in this House, or a man in Washington who is better equipped to discuss matters relating to the merchant marine, and particularly about marine insurance, than the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], so that his ability here and his effectiveness here and his efficiency here is by no means confined to his ability to talk on claims.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am glad the gentleman has interspersed my speech with that ray of light.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. What period of time is covered by the 1,162 pages of law to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. BLANTON. That is general law. It contains only those laws that are left. That is, Congress away back yonder would pass one law, and a subsequent Congress would come in and repeal it as a bad law, and so on for years, and it is just what is left of all the laws that have been passed, after eliminating those that have been repealed.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Then this is not 1,162 pages of new law, as the country might be led to believe from the gentleman's statement?

Mr. BLANTON. It is 1,162 pages of general laws that apply to the people of the United States, passed by previous Congresses.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is the accumulation of over a century?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and there are about four or five times as many pages that have been repealed.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman state his objections to this bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to, if the gentleman will withhold.

Now, it was intimated that this measure was for the benefit of our merchant marine. It was to protect our merchant marine. It was to give us a chance to insure our merchant marine. That was intimated, but when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] was on the floor I had him to admit that, so far as our own insurance is concerned, with respect to the numerous ships which the Shipping Board now has control of, and ships which the Emergency Fleet Corporation has control of, we do not insure any of them, but carry our own insurance.

It is to the interest of the Government to carry our own insurance. We save the profits that the companies make on such a big line of insurance. But I also had him admit the other day that with respect to the ships that we sell to private corporations from time to time there had already been organized under the laws of this country Syndicate B, that writes every single dollar of liability that outsiders owe this Government for ships sold. That has all been provided for by Syndicate B.

But allow me to show you one provision here what it will permit these companies to write. It will permit them to write every kind of insurance that you can think of, except one. They left out one. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania know what one was left out? It covers every kind of insurance except one. Let me show you some of those kinds.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman has asked me if I knew. Does the gentleman mean life insurance? It does not include life insurance, and it does not include surety insurance.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me show you what it does include.

Mr. EDMONDS. I tell you what it does not include. It does not include life insurance and it does not include surety insurance.

Mr. BLANTON. I say, let me show you what it does include. It includes, first, marine insurance—all kinds of marine insurance; second, it includes insurance on property and use and occupancy against loss or damage by fire, lightning, tempest, earthquake, hail, frost, snow, explosions—other than explosion of steam boilers or flywheels—breakage or leakage of sprinklers or other apparatus erected for extinguishing fires, and on such apparatus against incidental injury; and against liability of the insured for such loss or damage; and on automobiles against loss or damage from collision or theft, and against liability of the owner or user for injury to person or property caused by his automobile. It also insures against the following:

Third. Against bodily injury or death by accident, and against disablement resulting from sickness, and every insurance appertaining thereto, including quarantine and identification.

Fourth. Against liability of the insured for the death or disability of another.

Fifth. Against loss of or damage to property resulting from causes other than fire, marine, inland navigation hazards, and against liability of the insured for such loss or damage, and on motor vehicles against fire, marine, and inland navigation hazards, and against personal injury or death, and liability of the insured therefor, from explosions of steam boilers and engines, pipes and machinery connected therewith, and breakage of flywheels or machinery, and to make and certify inspections thereof; and against loss of use and occupancy from any cause; against loss by burglary, theft, and forgery.

Sixth. Against loss or damage from failure of debtors to pay their obligations to the insured.

Seventh. Against loss from encumbrances on or defects in titles. Eighth. Against loss or damage by theft, injury, sickness, or death of animals, and to furnish veterinary services.

Ninth. Against any loss or liability arising from any other casualty or hazard not contrary to public policy, other than that appertaining to or connected with (1) life insurance (including the granting of endowments and annuities), and (2) fidelity and surety bonding.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just in one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to submit, in connection with all those various and sundry kinds of insurance and hazards that they permit under this law to be insured against, that it ought to be against the policy of this country for a company to be able to insure against so many kinds of loss.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Well, why is it against public policy?

Mr. BLANTON. They do not permit life insurance companies to come in under this law. Is it any more different from the kind of insurance provided for in these sections of nine different classes than the classes themselves are different from each other? No. Why do you not let surety and life companies come in under it? There is no reason for it.

It is against public policy. It is against the best interests of this country to permit them to engage in so many dissimilar kinds of business.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMONDS. We found that owing to the condition of the code in the District of Columbia it was absolutely necessary for us to prepare these definitions of insurance. At the present time there is no law prescribing these definitions. It was at the request of the District commissioner himself that we put these definitions in this bill. In England the big modern companies that are not 50 years back in their operation are allowed to carry any kind of insurance, providing they keep the necessary reserve for it. Those companies write life insurance. They write surety bonds; they write any kind of insurance; but we did not think it advisable to permit the companies here to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. The trouble is that there is no way of providing that they shall keep the proper reserve so that they can write every kind of insurance imaginable.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to yield all my time.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not want to make a speech, but this bill provides for a proper reserve.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that at the present time, without this law, we have good, strong insurance companies here doing business in the District of Columbia that can insure a man to-day in any or all of the lines of insurance mentioned in this bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. There are a number of different companies—

Mr. BLANTON. That are operating under the present law.

Mr. EDMONDS. Just wait a minute. Most of them are not insurance companies of the District of Columbia. They are admitted to do business here through agents under the District Code.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; just like the insurance companies of Hartford, Conn., are admitted to do business in the States of Texas and Pennsylvania. They have come here and established themselves. They know what the insurance laws are. They have conducted their business accordingly. Their policyholders understand what the law is.

Mr. EDMONDS. The insurance companies of Hartford, Conn., notwithstanding the fact that they do business in the District of Columbia, would be tickled to death to see this bill go through.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me ask you in that connection about their being tickled to death. Is it not a fact that this bill changes the tax rate on the insurance companies?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. To the interest of the insurance companies?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; to the interest of the policyholders and in reduction of premiums, because all the tax you put on insurance to-day is loaded onto the premium. This means that the premiums will be reduced to the insured and we will tax the net profits of the company, which is the proper way.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has done all I wanted him to do. He has admitted that the tax rate is changed and that certain companies will be tickled to death. Now, let me tell you something from experience. Whenever you find the tax rate is changed concerning the business of a corporation and you find that the corporations are all tickled to death over the prospect of the passage of the law, you had better watch out.

That is a general proposition that I am going to offer from the experience of life. The gentleman said that these companies are tickled to death over the prospect of the passage of this bill. Yet he argues that it is in the interest of the insured. I want him to name one insured person who is tickled to death over it.

Mr. EDMONDS. All right. This morning I got a letter signed by Mr. Winston Marple, secretary of the American Steamship Owners' Association, asking whether they can not come down here and help to get this bill through. Of course, the gentleman [Mr. BLANTON] may talk for his insurance companies. The insurance companies in Texas may not be tickled to death, but I think the rest of them would be, and the gentleman's experience does not go any further than that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, pending the explanation of the bill by the proponents of it, and pending their giving us good reasons why the law should be changed by 37 pages of legal particulars, I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, this bill purports to do four or five basic things with regard to marine insurance. I do not believe anyone in this House questions the necessity of the maintenance of a permanent merchant marine in this country. We can not successfully carry on foreign commerce, we can not carry on business except within our own borders unless we have the facilities to deliver the goods that we sell; and to trust to our competitors the delivery of the goods that we manufacture and of the goods that we need for our own use is not a wise policy. If you are running a retail store, you might just as well trust the delivery of your goods to your competitor and expect your business to be benefited thereby as to let the nations which are in competition with us do the carrying trade for this country. But that is not a matter of argument. That is admitted. Now, in order to develop our commerce, in order to carry it in our own ships we must supplement the merchant marine and this expanded commerce with the insurance on the ships and on the goods that are carried in the ships.

Marine insurance has very aptly been called the handmaiden of the merchant marine, because with the insurance goes a knowledge of the character of the goods, the value of the goods, their destination, to whom they are sold, and the price. That information is furnished with the application for the policy, and if you must procure that insurance from the countries of your competitors you necessarily furnish the countries of your competitors and the agents of those competitors with this information which enables them to beat you in competition. Therefore it is essential there should be built up with the merchant marine an American marine insurance facility.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. EVANS. It has been stated here that both the insured and the insurance companies are in favor of this bill, these persons being largely located along the seaboard. Why, if that is the case, has no State adopted the provisions of the bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Some of the States have adopted some of the salient provisions of the bill; but the insured are not confined to the seaboard, either the Atlantic or the Pacific. The insured are within the four corners of the country, farmers, merchants, western manufacturers that are insured when they go into the export trade by foreign insurance companies, who obtain information and disseminate it among their foreign competitors as to the markets and the prices.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand that the State authorities that deal with insurance matters have considered the bill and it meets generally with their approval.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is a fact.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I took pains after studying the bill to some extent to communicate with the insurance commissioner of the State of Virginia, and he replied that he was extremely favorable to the bill and hoped that it would be adopted.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In further elaboration of my reply to the gentleman from Nebraska let me say that the principles embodied in the bill have the approval of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States through its committee on insurance matters. That committee is made up of gentlemen who come from Chicago; Helena, Ark.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Hartford, Conn.; Baltimore, Md.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Shreveport, La.; Cleveland, Ohio; and Mansfield, Ohio. Those men are not representing the interests alone of the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Why is it necessary to confer the power of every form of insurance except life? It even includes disability insurance. What is the necessity for it?

Mr. LEHLBACH. This is the reason. A merchant shipping goods, either in his own ship or under charter, or shipping them through a freight contract with the ship operator, wants to insure them, and he has got to have insurance or he can not get credit. His paper is not discounted unless his venture is entirely covered by insurance. He has to go to one insurance company to get insurance on the hull. He has got to go to another company to insure his crew. He has got to go to another company to insure the goods against the perils of the sea, against nondelivery, theft, and pilferage. He has to go to another company to insure against such loss as may result from the sickness of the executive officers. He has to go to another company to insure against the hazards pertaining to the transit of the goods, either from the point of destination to the seaboard and from the seaboard to the point of the foreign destination. He has to go to some 25 or 30 different American companies in order to get an insurance that will cover his whole venture. Now, he could walk into an English company or a German company, and before the war to a Russian or Scandinavian company, and they would write one policy covering the whole risk, and there is where he went because that was where he was accommodated. He got one policy, his bill of lading, and went to the bank.

Now, he has to go to 25 or 30 different concerns if he wants to cover the whole venture by insurance in America. It is idiotic, and no other nation prohibits insurance companies doing sufficient business to cover a venture except this. This bill is necessary in order to meet the legitimate demands of exporters in marine insurance. The only reason for limiting the powers of American insurance companies was on the ground that it afforded the insured protection. Now, you can give the same protection by having the necessary reserves for each line of insurance and by keeping them separate and apply the safeguard on each separate line that you do now by having each company insure a particular line. There is no necessity of making it impossible for American insurers to obtain American marine insurance and insuring their venture in foreign markets. Now, that is one of the things eliminated in this bill.

Furthermore, another thing to be done in this bill is to facilitate the establishment in foreign countries of marine insurance companies in order that they may do business where the necessity for it arises. An American merchant purchases a cargo in Singapore or Yokohama and wants to insure it to this country, but he can not get American insurance, because the companies are restricted so that they can not maintain insurance companies in foreign countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I want to touch briefly on the four principal points in the bill: One is the permission to do a sufficient spread of business to meet the demands of the insurance companies by American customers. Second, permission to do business where American business arises throughout the world. Third, there are tax restrictions which should be removed, such, for instance, as taxing the gross premiums received, regardless of the losses. If a company collects $500,000 of insurance premiums and pays out $600,000 in losses, sustaining a net loss for the year of $100,000, it pays taxes on the $500,000 which it has collected. If a company collects the same $500,000 and sustains a loss of only $400,000, netting $100,000 of profit, that company does not pay one cent more tax than the company that sustains the loss of $100,000. What is the result? You are checking initiative, checking American companies from going into new lines, experimenting, taking the necessary losses in order to gain experience, and to be in a position to compete with foreign companies.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. The tax on net profits, however, is dangerous, because the State does not reserve the right to control the expenditures for salaries, and therefore it can not control the amount which should be reported as profit.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That question has been successfully met in the administration of the income tax law, where the profits of corporations are reviewed by the income-tax agents, and where it is intended to dissipate the profits by the payment of exorbitant salaries, regulations of the Treasury Department very soon clip the wings of that endeavor. The same thing can be done locally. It is the profits that are to be taxed, and consequently the entire assets of the company, the entire income of the company can be examined in order to see whether expenditures are in fact profits or not. The fourth thing attempted to be done by this bill is to permit reinsurance. Everyone who knows the first rudiments of insurance knows that the wider the spread, the more constancy there is between income and loss.

The more contracted the spread is, then the more one big unexpected loss may result in the pecuniary embarrassment of the underwriter. Where reinsurance is facilitated, where you have a number of companies joining in big and diversified risks, you have constancy and safety. These, as well as other things, are not primarily in the interest of the insurance company, but they are in the interest of those who want to do business with the insurance companies and that they are not at present permitted to do.

This bill is not intended to and will not give insurance companies of the District of Columbia a preference in competing locally with the local insurance companies from the States. That is neither the intention nor will it be the effect of the bill. The object is to create a condition here in the District of Columbia and to serve as a model to create conditions throughout the country generally to enable our capital successfully to compete in marine insurance with the rest of the world, in order that our merchants who have to insure their cargoes, our shipowners who have to insure their ships in which those cargoes are carried, will not have to lay down before the agents of our competitors the information that goes with the insurance.

Mr. FOCHT. In addition to facilitating the underwriting for those who wish to be insured, will the gentleman approximate the amount of cash, liquid cash, that would be retained in this country that now goes abroad for this purpose?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, hundreds of millions of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more in order to ask him a question. The gentleman spoke of German and English companies that could write all of these various classes of insurance, destroying competition in this country with our companies, and compelling lots of money to go abroad. Under this bill, excluding life insurance and surety insurance, is it not a fact that insurance companies that will do business under the bill will compete with every other insurance company in the United States doing a similar business?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Only under the same restrictions and the same laws locally that the local companies are compelled to work under. Fire insurance is a local insurance. You can not go into a town or city and place insurance against loss by fire without complying with the local regulations that govern insurance against fire, but fire at sea and these other forms of insurance are intended to and will be used only as incidental to marine insurance, making a complete underwriting contract in foreign commerce.

Mr. BLANTON. But you can go into an office in Galveston, Tex., and get all these different classes of insurance that will apply not locally.

Mr. LEHLBACH. You can not get any marine insurance in Galveston, Tex., at all for any substantial amount. If you want to insure a ship for $2,000,000 you can get probably $50,000 of insurance out of the $2,000,000 in Galveston.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman ever tried it?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I know what the conditions are. There has not been a company in the United States that has ever carried a larger line than $200,000 on hull insurance. Even without this law we formed a syndicate to carry $2,500,000, and it will benefit the companies in Texas.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have requested an opportunity to discuss this proposition for a limited period of time because my main purpose is to assert that as a Member of the minority upon the floor of the House and as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, that committee has given the question of adequate marine insurance careful consideration during a period of two or three years, in fact ever since my service in this House began. We have given very careful, mature, nonpartisan consideration to the principles involved in this bill. The evidence discloses that we are confronted by a fact that is discreditable either to our legislation or to our American business genius and initiative, and that fact is this: Annually there is going abroad to foreign competitors of American marine insurance companies millions, hundreds of millions of dollars in premiums that legitimately should remain in the United States. There must be a reason for that condition of affairs, unless we are willing to concede that the British and other foreign competitors outstrip us in their business genius and in their desire to do business on reasonable terms. In looking for the reason for this discreditable condition of affairs the committee came to the conclusion that it was because of limitations put on American concerns by existing laws, particularly on account of the large difference in the operation of laws in the different States.

It was caused especially by reason of the fact that the tax which was imposed is going against the premiums exacted of the American companies instead of against their net income based upon the premiums after deducting their overhead expenses. In my judgment, without having time to discuss the various features of this bill, it is fairly drawn in the interest of the American taxpayer. It has the approval of the Shipping Board. It has the approval of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, which has given it very careful consideration. It has the approval of all of the other insurance companies of the United States, and it is hoped and believed that by the passage of this bill this restriction upon American companies under the operation of present laws requiring them to work at great disadvantage to foreign competitors will be overcome and a tremendous volume of business and money which by taxation would go to the American Treasury will be held in America. I believe the bill is a conservative piece of legislation. I believe it was presented in a spirit of nonpartisanship and philosophic research and meets the conditions that confront us, and I trust that upon final consideration this bill will pass substantially as presented by the committee. [Applause.] I will yield back any time that may remain.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman from Texas use some time?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to speak out of order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask this because I do not intend to refer to the provisions of this bill, but I do want to occupy five minutes in an endeavor to keep the record straight as to the appropriations of this Congress and also to defend the administration of President Harding against a most serious indictment which was made against it by one in a most responsible position. The newspapers tell us this morning that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], addressing the Republican members of the Massachusetts Legislature, last evening declared that among the other achievements of the present Congress "appropriations asked for by the departments of $5,337,000,000 have been cut down to $1,428,000,000." Believing that the headline was erroneous I looked at the body of the story where I found this statement:

Since the present Congress has been in, the Senator continued, they have reduced the appropriations asked for by the departments from $5,337,000,000 to $1,428,000,000.

Now, I know that in politics and in other things if you give a dog a bad name everybody almost will kick him around, and some people have been trying to give the administration of the executive departments a bad name and others following have been lately kicking them around. Abe Martin said "Cy Simpkins bought a pair of shoes for $6 out of money saved over from the Wilson administration." Some other persons have said that while it took Wilson two years to raise an Army of 4,000,000 soldiers, the present administration has raised an army of unemployed of 5,000,000 in six months. These are partisan criticisms, but I could not believe the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, the leader of the Senate Republicans, would state that more than three years after the armistice that the executive departments of this Government under Republican control had asked the present Congress for $5,337,000,000.

Why the last fiscal year prior to the war, 1916, the appropriations only amounted to $1,114,000,000, and the Senate leader says that now President Harding, for his executive departments, is asking for more than $5,000,000,000 to run the Government of the United States. Why, if that was true we would have much to fear, but fortunately it is not true, and I hasten to let the people of the country know that it is not true. I was waiting here in the hope that some gentleman on the Republican side of the House would rise and defend the administration against this statement. No one has risen, therefore I rise to defend the administration against this indictment and hope in some way to carry this message to the Republican Members of the Massachusetts Legislature that the indictment by the Massachusetts Senator is at least an erroneous indictment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will ask the gentleman to give me five minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the truth is that the administration has asked of this Congress only $3,801,000,000. I hold in my hand the official estimates from the Budget Bureau footing up $3,801,000,000, so that the Massachusetts Senator has made a mistake of only one and a half billion dollars against the administration. One and one-half billion dollars is some mistake, and yet it is about as inaccurate as are most of the statements that were made by the Massachusetts Senator in his speech last evening.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask this question of the gentleman: Does he think that possibly the Senator made that statement with reservations? [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I hope so. But I want further to call the attention of the country to the fact that when the Senator from Massachusetts states that the estimates have been cut to $1,428,000,000 it is difficult for anyone to explain what he did mean, because we know that up to date only six bills have been reported to the House, the total of those bills amounting to $2,908,000,000, or just about $1,500,000,000 more than the Senator from Massachusetts said had been appropriated. Where in the world the Senator got his figures from I do not know, but the facts are that last year we appropriated $3,771,900,514.01, and this year this present Congress has had submitted to it estimates amounting to $3,801,113,659.53 and supplemental estimates amounting to $80,000,000, so that the estimates submitted amount to $100,000,000 more than the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

The Senator said that the Republican Party when it came into control in 1919 had proceeded to reduce the appropriations of the Wilson administration by $1,500,000,000. Of course it did. In 1918 we were still in war. If that was all we had done we could never defend the record of the Congress before the people. But, as a matter of fact, the Republican Congress reduced the appropriation a great deal more than that, and if they had not done it, if they had attempted to appropriate as much in time of peace as had been appropriated in 1918, when we were prosecuting the World War, there would have been no defense on earth to the charge that would justly have been made against the Congress.

The Senator said that the explanation of this reduction is that they have reduced the number of employees this year by 93,000, in that he is accurate. He got those figures from the report of the Civil Service Commission, and he is right. I am glad to know that reduction has been made. But if he had looked at the line just above, in the commission report, he would have noticed that we still have on the pay rolls of the Government 157,684 more persons than were on the pay rolls of the Government on June 30, 1916. It is good to reduce the number by 90,000 this year, but the people believe that in time of peace we should go back to prewar conditions, and Senator Lodge can not justify retaining on the pay roll 157,684 more persons than were on the pay roll in 1916, and he can not justify spending $3,806,113,659.53, the amount of estimates submitted by President Harding, as against $1,114,000,000, the amount appropriated in 1916, the last year prior to the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I asked for that two minutes solely to say this, that in addition to these estimates we have already appropriated in this Congress in deficiencies $155,833,766.64. The Committee on Appropriations to-day is considering estimates amounting to $180,000,000, making $335,833,766.64 deficiency appropriations you are going to make in this Congress; and the people who read of these tremendous savings want to know if you are telling the truth, and if so, then why are you talking every day about levying taxes or issuing bonds to pay the bonus to the soldiers when you claim that you are saving all the way from $136,000,000, as asserted by the President recently, to $3,900,000,000, as was claimed by the Massachusetts Senator last evening. The Republican leader of the Senate is claiming a saving of more than $3,000,000,000, and yet frightening the business people of this country with the issuance of bonds and the levying of new taxes in order to secure funds to pay a bonus to the soldiers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is recognized.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, before assigning time to another speaker on this bill I wish to say, somewhat in response to the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], that in making his estimate of the number of employees now remaining in excess above the number that were on the pay roll in 1916, if he will just revise his figures and make an estimate deducting the number now employed by the Veterans' Bureau and by the prohibition offices, who were not on the roll in 1916, he will not find much left of his 157,000.

I now yield, Mr. Chairman, five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I rise to support Senate bill No. 2265. As to my competency to speak on the subject, I will state for the information of the House that I have been a local fire insurance agent for 35 years. I am not now in the business, only in name.

Looking over this measure, it seems to me a very fair and equitable bill. The evolution of fire insurance in the last 25 years has been that of progress. I can remember when we started to write an ordinary fire-insurance policy; hardly was there a lightning clause attached to an insurance policy.

Later came the mortgagee clause, under which no act of the insured could invalidate a policy by keeping the mortgagee from getting his money. Then the 80 and 100 per cent coinsurance clauses made their appearance. Later these same fire insurance companies started to write automobile insurance, first as to fire, and then a combination policy covering fire, theft, burglary, and accidents. In the last few years there has been a tendency all along the line for the assured to ask for one policy covering various forms of insurance, marine as well as fire insurance. This bill allows that. It allows a company to incorporate in the District of Columbia and allows them to write several kinds of insurance. It allows the formation of reinsurance companies. These reinsurance companies at the present time, of which there are quite a number in the United States, are located in a few cities, notably, Hartford, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and San Francisco.

The reinsurance proposition has become so large in the United States that millions of dollars annually have been sent abroad and the insurance placed there and the money kept there. One of the objects of this bill is to have the business done in the United States and to keep the money here and give our shippers and insurers the benefit of all kinds of insurance coming in competition with European companies. The various provisions of the bill are such that the fire, marine, and different departments under the reinsurance proposition must be kept entirely separate. A certain amount of capital, say $100,000, is taken as a basis, and $50,000 and $25,000 added for the various different kinds of insurance that will be done. A great many gentlemen here may not understand what reinsurance is. I will give you a simple illustration. A customer comes in to an insurance agent's office and asks for a policy of $100,000 on a dwelling or a vessel. The agent writes the $100,000 in a single company. That home company scatters that risk among nine other companies, at $10,000 each, and instead of that one company having a gross line of $100,000 risk, it has a net line of only $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. APPLEBY. I would like two minutes more.

Mr. FOCHT. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. APPLEBY. Another good feature of this bill has been mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], who made a statement that the taxes levied on fire insurance companies at the present time are upon the gross premiums. This means that the customers have to pay the taxes. Under this bill it is proposed to levy the tax upon the net income of the company, and the company will pay the taxes.

In my judgment the provisions of this bill will allow a number of companies, if they wish to do so, to come to the city of Washington, invest new capital here, and be in a position to compete with the foreign companies—the District of Columbia will be benefited thereby, the American insurer will also be benefited thereby. In my judgment the bill is a fair measure. [Applause.]

Mr. FOCHT. Does the gentleman from Texas wish to use some of his time now?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to have the gentleman use his time down to the point where the time will be nearly equal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 19 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania 35 minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine I was present at the hearings held on this bill and listened to the reasons presented for its passage at various times for more than a year. I believe every member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, regardless of party, has at least at heart the desire to promote the prosperity of the American merchant marine. There may be many differences of opinion as to the best method of doing it. For instance, with reference to discriminating duties and subsidies our minority membership would differ entirely and completely from a great many of the majority, we being opposed to both discriminating duties and subsidies and not believing that those are proper or effective means for promoting the merchant marine. But there was one subject upon which we were absolutely agreed, and that was that as a business proposition one of the incumbrances or hindrances to the prosperity of the merchant marine was our lack of an efficient and economical system of marine insurance. We listened to the presentation of the case from the standpoint of the various parties interested, the insurers, the insurance companies, the exporters, and the importers. We find that one of the burdens borne by the American shipowner in competition with the foreign shipowner is the fact that insurance is so much more burdensome to the American than it is to his foreign competitor. The great Lloyd's Insurance Co. of England can insure anything from the fall of a pin to the happening of an earthquake that would engulf the greatest vessel on the ocean. Their capacity for insurance and reinsurance is absolutely unlimited. We found that foreign nations had adopted the wisest policy of establishing marine insurance along the lines of the greatest economy, and we found that in this country marine insurance was practically wiped out by petty restrictions and tax burdens. If a man wants to carry a cargo of cotton from Galveston to Europe he does not go and get his insurance in this country for that cargo. He pays the premium to Lloyd's or some other foreign company. The result of our investigations was that we dealt with this question of marine insurance without any partisanship at all and we sought to get information from every source to help us frame a wise law. In my judgment the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee ought to have had charge of this bill; but because these companies would have to be located in the city of Washington in order to give jurisdiction to Congress to authorize their chartering, it was deemed by the Speaker that the bill belonged to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Now, gentlemen, one of the big things that interfered with our marine insurance was local taxation on the insurance premiums, under which different States assess more or less burdensome rates upon the gross income from premiums.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman as I understood him stated that all the members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries were favorable to this bill.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. As far as I know, I think absolutely all of them.

Mr. MANN. That committee had given a good deal of attention and consideration to the general proposition.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. For weeks and months, and I might say for a year, we investigated it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I think that is entitled to a great deal of weight in this House because I do not think anybody else in the House knows much about insurance, marine or otherwise.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I do not profess to know much about marine insurance except what I learned in this investigation, but I do believe that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDELOM], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] are practically familiar with the workings of marine insurance, and these gentlemen have been with our committee all the time when this investigation took place.

Now, I want to say another thing. It may offend the local interests of some of our people by providing a bill which shall require a tax on marine insurance, to be paid on the net profits of the business and not on the gross receipts of the premiums. You know one of the strong things that promoted the Union of the States was the fact that in foreign commerce the different ports of the colonies or States, after they became free and their independence recognized, had several different systems of import duties; they imposed discriminating duties on foreign tonnage coming into this country. They could not impose a uniform duty. Boston had one duty, New York had another, and Philadelphia had another, and the importers found it for their interest to go where the lowest rate of duty was assessed. Consequently there was a cutthroat competition in the great seaports of the United States, and one of the great incentives to union was the placing of rates on import duties in the hands of the Federal Government to get a uniform system of taxation. It is equally necessary that we have a uniform system of marine insurance, because that is a tax, if our insurance companies are to compete and get any of the business in competition with the systems of the Old World.

The truth is hundreds of millions of dollars have gone out of this country to pay premiums on insurance in London and Hamburg and other foreign countries. We want our merchant marine to have just as fair and economical insurance in the United States as they can get outside of the United States. Then there is another reason. It is charged—I do not know how true it is—that the foreign companies discriminated against the American bottoms and gave better terms to foreign shipping or ships of their own country and therefore aided our competitors in competition between the American and the foreign merchant marine. How much truth there is in that I do not know, but our people believe that the assistance goes that way, that the discrimination does exist.

Gentlemen, it is a question of broad statesmanship and not of local, petty conflicting interests. Every port in the United States is interested in having a uniform system of marine insurance. Every industry in the United States, and particularly the industries of the South, which has the greatest export business in proportion to their earnings in any part of the country, is interested in the economic provisions for transportation across the seas.

As it is now they go to foreign insurance companies for the reason explained by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH]. If a man wants to ship a cargo from Galveston to New York, and he wants to insure his cargo against fire and against damage by icebergs, if he wants to get a full insurance to cover the cargo with all the risks inherent to transportation, he would have, as the gentleman from New Jersey said, to go to 25, 30, or 50 companies. He could not reinsure in Galveston because they are not authorized to reinsure. The result is he piles it all together and takes out an insurance in some of Lloyd's companies. Gentlemen, it is a question of business and not a question of local interest or politics. I believe every man wants the merchant marine to prosper, and we never will make it prosper unless we can furnish the cheapest unit of transportation, and we can never do it unless we get marine insurance on equally advantageous terms as foreign countries and foreign competitors. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, that very argument in favor of uniform insurance is the strongest argument against this bill. Every bit of the insurance that is authorized under this bill would have to be written here in Washington with companies organized under this bill. Our merchant marine is the sacred name that is being conjured with to use in passing this bill. So far as our own bottoms are concerned all of our ships, as I have already stated, this bill does not affect them at all except cargoes carried in them. If this bill is passed, not a single ship that is owned by this Government will be insured under this law, not one. No one will deny that, because the members of the District Committee know and the members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee ought to know that every single ship now owned by the United States Government in the control of the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation is not and will not be insured, as we are carrying our own insurance. I have already called attention to the fact, and the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] has admitted that with respect to all ships that we have sold, operated by other people, syndicate B now carries and will continue to carry insurance on them. It was organized for that purpose. If conditions were as have been stated, that we did not have an adequate way to insure our merchant marine, that this was the only method, then of course this would be a good bill, but I repeat this is not the case, but that the merchant marine is the conjuring name that is used to pass this measure. These two big insurance companies, one from Pennsylvania and one from New York, which the Washington newspapers, which usually find out the facts about things, have told us are to come here and do much of the business under this bill as soon as it becomes a law, will be able to do what kind of business?

They are going to insure under it, not the merchant marine, but let me call your attention to some of the things that they will be able to insure against. There is the failure of debtors to pay their obligations. For instance, a merchant in New York, or in Washington, or in Chicago has a whole lot of accounts outstanding. He is afraid that his debtors will not pay him. He sends to Washington here and these two big insurance companies issue him a policy. That is exactly what they can do under this bill. Section 6 provides that they may insure against the failure of debtors to pay their obligations.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, is not that done to-day?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I know, it is already being done under the present law, and there is no necessity for creating this trust in behalf of these two big companies to do it all. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. LEHLBACH. What harm would it do?

Mr. BLANTON. Then they insure against loss from encumbrances or defective titles. A man in New York, or in Washington, or in Chicago, or in Philadelphia buys a piece of property and pays $500,000 for it. He has a lurking fear that possibly there is some defect in the title and he goes to these two big trust companies here that are formed to do business under this law, instead of taking out a policy in his home town with his home company that is already doing business. He takes that business away from them and brings it here to these two companies that are doing business under special act of Congress, giving them an inside advantage over all of the other companies of the world. He has his titles insured here in Washington for real estate probably situated in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York, or any other place, instead of giving the benefit to his home company already organized and doing business. They may insure against loss or damage by theft. You can insure yourself against any kind of hazard where thieves can get in and steal your property. These two big trust companies would issue that policy to the detriment of your home companies. They may insure against injury to yourself or to the members of your family or property, or against injury or sickness or death of animals. If you have a fine race horse worth $50,000, and you are afraid that he is going to get sick on the day of the race out here on the Baltimore track, you can come in here and insure him in these two big trust companies. They will insure against the liability of the horse getting sick, or against his death, or these two big trust companies will obligate themselves to furnish you veterinary treatment for your horses, your cattle, your sheep, your hogs, under this bill. Why can you not do that under present law with your home companies? What connection has that, I say, with the merchant marine, the name with which they are conjuring to pass this bill? Then you can insure against your liability for causing the death or disability of some one else. You are afraid that you might run over somebody with your automobile, and you come here and take that insurance in Washington instead of taking it out at home.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 30 minutes more, and he can yield the gentleman some time. You are afraid that something will fall off the roof of your house on somebody who is passing by at the time and cause injury or death, and you come to Washington and take out that insurance with these two big trust companies. Why do you not do it at home with your home companies? Then they will insure you against bodily injury or death by accident or against disability resulting from sickness. For instance, a person is afraid that he is going to get sick and lose six months' salary. There are insurance companies now that grant policies in your home town and State covering that. Why should you arrange it so that it will necessitate your constituents coming to Washington to get that insurance? Oh, the gentleman laughs. It will be necessitated in this way: They will have special privileges and may give it much cheaper.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. That is the very thing. They will be granted special privileges under this law to write a policy on all of these matters, and they will be permitted by reason of the exigencies of Washington and the surroundings under this bill to write insurance cheaper than any other insurance company in your home town or State, and I am against any such proposition as that.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I want to finish what I am saying.

Mr. EDMONDS. I just wanted to know where the trust company comes in. I have been looking for it for some time and can not find it in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. A farmer out here in Maryland has a crop of wheat or corn and is afraid that the hail is going to ruin it. He can now go to Baltimore under present laws and take out hail insurance to protect his crop, but under the peculiar provisions of this bill and the privileges to be enjoyed by these two big trust companies coming in here, forsooth, he can get the policy a little more conveniently or more cheaply here in Washington from these trust companies, and you will find the Maryland farmers coming here to Washington to get their hail insurance. Or frost. A farmer is afraid that the frost is going to ruin his corn crop, and he will come here and insure against that with these marine insurance companies. Or snow. Where a man is afraid he is going to suffer some damage because of an unprecedented fall of snow, he will come to Washington to take out his insurance under this bill. Then he can insure against certain kinds of explosions, against loss of automobiles by theft or damage to them. These things are all covered under the privileges to be enjoyed by these two big companies. And it is designated marine insurance!

Fire, lightning, and damages on land—not on sea—concerning property on land—not concerning property on ships—are authorized to be insured against. If you will look closely at this bill, you will see about 1 per cent merchant marine and about 99 per cent trust on every kind of business, and you put into the hands of two big companies the insurance business of the United States and give them special privileges here under a Federal statute. And I am not going to vote for it. I may be the only one, but I am against it. The gentleman says that the people who carry insurance are writing him. One of the biggest shippers of cotton in the United States lives in my home town, and there is not another man in the United States in any 12 months of the year who ships more cotton than he does. He does not ask that this bill be passed. The cotton shippers of Texas do not ask that it be passed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. The other cotton shippers of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana are not asking that this bill be passed. I will yield in just a moment. I have not had a single person from the State from which I come to ask that this bill be passed, but I have had lots of them ask that it be not passed. I have had men from the State of Texas who have been in the insurance business as long as the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey has been in the local fire insurance business—35 years—not as little fire agencies but as general agents for big companies, and they have not asked for this legislation to affect their business. It will let two big trust companies come here, in competition against all other companies of the United States. It is the shutting out of competition—the advantage given them by the special advantages provided for in this bill that gives them the inside on the other companies. Oh, the distinguished gentleman—and there is not a more astute, bright lawyer in the United States than the gentleman from New Jersey, or one who can make a better argument on a proposition—got up here and said that because Lloyd's and German companies, companies that used to do business in Russia and Scandinavia, could issue blanket policy covering every phase of insurance they had run out of business the American companies, because, by reason of convenience to keep from using 20 policies where they could get them in 1, insurers would go to the foreign company, and it hurt American business. And to get around this we ought to build up a local Lloyd's in Washington that shall wipe out all the other insurance companies of the United States and cause men not to go to Lloyd's or German or Russian companies because of convenience, but to come to Washington, to this big Pennsylvania and New York company, because it is a matter of convenience.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I could not refuse.

Mr. LEHLBACH. What is to prevent any or all of the 48 States of the Union from passing similar laws and having their own local Lloyd's?

Mr. BLANTON. What is to prevent every lawyer in the gentleman's State of New Jersey from moving to Washington if he wants to? He does not want to come here; he wants to live in New Jersey. What is to prevent the people in Pennsylvania from moving to Washington? But they want to stay in Pennsylvania and do their business there. And yet you bring in a bill here of 37 pages of legal phrases and definitions to be passed by the Congress, with about 20 or 30 Members on the floor, and the balance of them not knowing what is going on.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will for a question.

Mr. EDMONDS. In regard to the cotton business last year, your patriotic people in Texas allowed England to put one over and placed all the insurance in English companies and required them to be shipped through English companies, and we are trying to get away from that.

Mr. BLANTON. Do you believe that? The Texas shippers of cotton know as much about their own interest as any person in Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMONDS. They know enough where to get the cheapest insurance, and I do not blame them.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman wants the Pennsylvania company to come to Washington under a special act of Congress, inside, and be able to give cheaper insurance with more convenience to the people of Texas so that they will have to go to Washington to the detriment of all the insurance companies of my State, and I am not going to agree to it.

Mr. EDMONDS. You said it was my company. I deny it. I will not have you make that statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I will not say it belongs to you, because you may not own one. But I say the Washington paper says that it is a company that comes from the gentleman's State.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am not interested in it.

Mr. BLANTON. But you did introduce the bill. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Chair require the gentleman from Pennsylvania not to interfere with my time. He has had time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am somewhat puzzled over this bill. I am frank to say that I think it quite an important matter to be considered as it has been. However, the members of the committee, in whom I have great confidence, have given the bill great consideration; not the Committee on Claims or the Committee on the District of Columbia, but the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Basing my action upon the last argument made here against the bill, I shall support it. [Laughter.]

If this bill will reduce the price of hail insurance and the price of fire insurance and the price of tornado insurance there is no insurance company that has got such a grip on me but that I shall support this bill; and inasmuch as the gentleman who has just preceded me [Mr. BLANTON] has charge of all the time in opposition to the bill and has made all the opposition to it that has been made, admits it will reduce these rates, I think it behooves every good, thinking Congressman to vote for the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who has been the only opponent so far upon the floor of the House against this bill, is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which reported this bill. That committee, I am informed, had many hearings on it. I myself am a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and I was a member of the subcommittee that spent many afternoons and evenings far into the night in the consideration of this legislation.

I want to say, first, that the gentleman from Texas a little while ago made some reference to the insurance companies of his State. Under the direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries a complete report was obtained and published with reference to the status of the marine insurance in the United States, based largely upon full returns and reports submitted under oath by the various companies engaged in the marine-insurance business in the United States. Those reports covered the year 1918. There was only one company in the State of Texas that did any marine-insurance business in the year 1918. That was the Republic Insurance Company, of Dallas. It has a total capital stock of $200,000, and it has a limited liability upon any single hazard of $8,000. Of course, they do not begin to do the marine-insurance business in the State of Texas. It is a fact, as was stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], that the people of Texas and of most of the States of the Union—and Texas is no different in that regard from any other State—the people of Texas are getting their marine insurance abroad and not in the companies of the United States, and for some very good reasons.

I know that there is some opposition to this bill. I know that there is opposition to it coming from some brokers who write insurance for the foreign insurance companies, and who are largely concerned with the commissions paid by the foreign insurance companies. Their usual commission, I am informed, is 5 per cent, with 10 per cent discount for getting business—that is to say, they get a nominal commission of 5 per cent, and then they get an additional 10 per cent for placing the business—which means that they get a total of 15 per cent commission. I am told that is the usual practice.

It has already been shown that two-thirds of the marine-insurance business of this country goes abroad.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. RICKETTS. Why is it that two-thirds of the marine insurance business of this country goes abroad?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Because we have not the facilities here for handling it. We have not the insurance companies in the United States. In the year 1918 we had 80 companies in the United States which wrote marine insurance business, but not a single one of them was a marine insurance company, pure and simple. They are nearly all fire insurance companies, which write marine insurance on the side.

Mr. RICKETTS. What is the difference in the rate between the two countries?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The foreign companies, of course, control the rates because they do the bulk of the business.

Mr. RICKETTS. They fix their rate, and the United States fix their rate. What is the difference? Is it higher or lower?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I doubt if there is any difference. I am not prepared to speak on that feature.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has talked about what these two companies that he has dreamed about, that are coming into the District of Columbia for the purpose of consolidating or incorporating, might do by the formation of a trust. Of course that is a hackneyed argument. When you are out of all other arguments, the "trust" argument is the one to bring home to the people. Talk about two insurance companies in the United States coming here to form a trust. That is ridiculous. The insurance business of the United States is not confined to two companies, if there was any such thing intended. But this bill will not affect the fire insurance or the casualty insurance or the liability insurance, or any other insurance business in the States, unless the companies which are incorporated under this bill in the District of Columbia go to the States and obtain licenses to do business there, and when they do that, they become "home" companies, responsible to the State to the extent that they are licensed, and they must then comply with the laws of the State in which they operate.

The only business that these companies organized under this proposed law will be able to write without being subject to the laws of the States is the marine insurance business, which is not local, but which follows the ship upon the high seas all over the world, and the local business which they might write of the kinds that are enumerated in this bill. In other words, one of those corporations may be able to write insurance upon the cargoes and hulls of ships, because that is not localized property.

But whatever business may be done by these companies that may be incorporated under this law, when that business is done in the States, will be subject to the laws of those States. I repeat that because it is essential in this connection, and if your States will not legalize them, will not license them to do business in your States, they can not go there and can not take any of the business away from the local companies.

We are now striving to pass legislation for the maintenance and permanent establishment of a merchant marine for the people of the United States. This is one of the important branches of that legislation. Unless we can provide our own marine insurance, we shall lose control of many other things connected with the shipping interests. I will tell you what the foreign companies do. The foreign companies, which have been writing our marine insurance, have their own salvage companies, they have their own repair men, they have their own subsidiary companies which do all of the ship surveying and fix the amount of damages to be paid. They determine the amount of money to be paid to the owner of the ship, in order to repair a ship which has been damaged, after it has been towed into port. The evidence before the subcommittee with reference to this subject was appalling. It showed that our shipping interests are absolutely tied hand and foot by the foreign marine insurance interests. They write the insurance, they repair the ships, they fix the amount of damage to be paid upon the insurance. They raise or they lower the value of the ship. They can raise or lower the capital invested in the ship by reason of the repairs which they require to be made upon the ship.

Mr. Chairman, this is a technical bill. Some gentlemen have said that it contains a lot of legal phrases on 37 or 38 pages. Of course it does. It has been prepared by experts. It could not be prepared by a mere lawyer. It could not be prepared by the ordinary draftsman of bills. It covers a subject which is technical and specialized. It has been prepared by some of the best experts in the United States upon the subject of marine insurance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I have a little more time?

Mr. FOCHT. How much time have we remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois five minutes additional.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I was saying that this bill is necessarily specialized. It is necessarily technical. I do not know that any Member could undertake to go through all the sections of the bill and make a statement with regard to all of its provisions which would be entirely satisfactory to the mind of every Member of the House.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Shipping Board had the services of Prof. S. S. Heubner, of the University of Pennsylvania. He is one of the best-known experts on insurance in the United States. He prepared first this report which I hold in my hand of "the status of the marine insurance of the United States," based upon questionnaires that were sent out to all of the companies in the United States.

Mr. WALSH. What insurance company is he connected with?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. None, sir. He is a professor in the University of Pennsylvania. I have never heard of his having any connection with any insurance company.

Mr. LONDON. What is he a professor of?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. He is a professor on the subject of insurance. He is a gentleman who has written quite voluminously upon the subject of insurance in the past.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman, in his time, state how Prof. Heubner got to be such an authority on insurance if he has never been connected with any insurance company?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not believe the gentleman means that I should answer that seriously.

Mr. CARTER. I do. I certainly think it is a very important question. The gentleman says Prof. Heubner is one of the greatest authorities on insurance.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. He is one of the greatest authorities.

Mr. CARTER. What experience has he had which has given him this wonderful knowledge of insurance?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You might as well ask me why the experts down in the Department of Agriculture have not been farmers.

Mr. CARTER. No; I know something about that and the House knows, but I do not think the House knows anything about Prof. Huebner.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMONDS. Prof. Huebner has been a teacher of insurance for 20 years in the University of Pennsylvania. That is his special branch. He has written textbooks on all kinds of insurance—life, marine, fire, and other kinds of insurance—which books are recognized throughout the country as being authoritative. He is considered one of the best experts on the subject in the country.

Mr. CARTER. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for giving me the information.

Mr. LONDON. What justification is there for conferring on these insurance companies the power to insure against loss by encumbrances and defects in title?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. All of the big marine insurance companies in the world outside of the United States—and we have very few real marine insurance companies in the United States—have a large line of business. Marine insurance is very hazardous. The whole business of a marine insurance company might be lost if the company carried too big a risk on a particular ship. There are big profits to be made in the marine insurance business so long as everything goes well, but enormous losses occur when there is a catastrophe. If you give companies a wide latitude, so they can have a wide spread of business, give them the right to write multiple lines of insurance, they will be able to maintain and carry on the business of marine insurance with the rest of their business. The present experience of the insurance companies is that the larger the number of lines of insurance they can write, the better their opportunities to expand and maintain their business.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman was talking about reinsurance. As I understand, any company organized under this bill, if it took out insurance on a given vessel, would reinsure it in a number of companies.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; they can spread it all over the United States. The companies now writing insurance would get a portion of the risk, because it would be spread all through the country.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Are these companies under this bill authorized to insure title to real estate?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That only applies to property within the District of Columbia, unless such companies should be licensed in the States.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, when the debate on this question opened the chairman of the committee announced that we were approaching the consideration of a measure that is highly technical, and from the debate that has ensued it is quite evident that it is. The fact of the matter is that any insurance problem is involved and complicated. I heard an insurance man, who claimed to be an expert—and they all claim to be experts—say that even John A. McCall, who was not a lawyer but a great insurance expert, the greatest insurance man the world ever knew, hardly knew himself; but he loaded the policy to such an extent that it worked out and was a success, and that was the answer. He insured the people, made a big profit for the company, until Mr. Hughes brought along his legislation and somewhat modified the profit. Therefore it could not be expected that in the discussion of a bill like this any one individual would be able to entirely clarify the atmosphere and make it a simple problem. But we have had the satisfaction to-day of seeing a straw man, set up and kicked about in this forum, called the trust companies of Pennsylvania and New York.

This introduced a new element into the discussion, something that we did not hear about last summer when the hearings were going on. We had the satisfaction of also learning that the bill, which we were told in the early part of the debate had evidently been framed by a lawyer, was not written by a lawyer but by a layman.

When the measure was before the committee there was made a most sensational statement, the most astounding revelations, by experts from New York and Boston and elsewhere, that I ever heard. I call this preeminently an American bill. Its object and effect is purely American. It is to bring the underwriting to America instead of sending Americans to foreign countries to underwrite the insurance on our ships. It is designed to keep this money in America. In addition to that the point was made that under the present system, as stated by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], that in these foreign insurance companies the residents of the United States had to describe the goods, give their value and the destination, South America or elsewhere, which is a highly important thing at this time when we are appealing to America to crystallize the sentiment in favor of foreign shipping. But, more than that, in a time of war, when American battleships were on the ways, they had to be described in every detail to these foreign Governments in Europe in order to get insurance. What a pitiable plight to put America in a time of war—to have her ships before they took the water described in all of their details to foreign companies in foreign countries.

My friends, I agree that we can not know every little detail pertaining to the bill, but we do submit to the intelligence and judgment of the committee that have had hearings on this bill during these last two or three years. But if there is anything in the world that ought to appeal to an American it is to keep our money at home and to do everything possible to enact this progressive and constructive legislation. And in presenting this I appeal to the American spirit and American patriotism, and I hope it will pass. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

CHAPTER I.—DEFINITIONS.

SECTION 1. That whenever used in this act—

"Marine insurance" means insurance against any and all kinds of loss of or damage to vessels, craft, cars, aircraft, automobiles, and other vehicles, whether operated on or under water, land, or in the air, in any place or situation, and whether complete or in process of or awaiting construction; also all goods, freights, cargoes, merchandise, effects, disbursements, profits, moneys, bullion, precious stones, securities, choses in action, evidences of debt, including money loaned on bottomry or respondentia, valuable papers, and all other kinds of property and interests therein, including liabilities and liens of every description, in respect to any and all risks and perils while in course of navigation, transit, travel, or transportation on or under any seas or other waters, on land or in the air or while in preparation for or while awaiting the same or during any delays, storage, transshipment, or reshipment incident thereto, including builders' risks, war risks, and for loss of or damage to property or injury or death of any person, whether legal liability results therefrom or not, during, awaiting, or arising out of navigation, transit, travel, or transportation, or the construction or repair of vessels;

"Marine insurance company" means any persons, companies, or associations authorized by this act to write marine insurance within the District;

"Insurance company" or "company" means any insurer, incorporated or otherwise;

"Domestic company" means an insurance company organized under the laws of the District of Columbia;

"District" means the District of Columbia;

"Superintendent" means the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] a question. Is it not expected that measure will serve as a model to the different States upon which they can base legislation along this line?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is hoped that it will serve as a model to marine States and to such other States as want to take it up. The gentleman's own State, I think, is considering the matter.

Mr. WALSH. Did not this insurance expert, Prof. Huebner, repeatedly say that that was the principal object to be served by this legislation?

Mr. EDMONDS. Unquestionably that is true; yes.

Mr. WALSH. And that it will not be restricted, of course, to the States bordering on the ocean?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no; Illinois is considering it to-day.

Mr. WALSH. Then, if that is so, why do you term all these different classes of insurance "marine insurance"? Why should it not be a general insurance measure?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman had been here he would have heard my explanation of the matter.

Mr. WALSH. I heard the gentleman's explanation the other day.

Mr. EDMONDS. We found that the code in the District of Columbia did not have a definition of different kinds of insurance, and we were forced to put definitions of insurance in this paragraph. I want to go a little further, and probably this will help the gentleman come to a conclusion in the matter. Marine insurance starts where the goods are shipped from. In other words, cattle will take marine insurance from Nebraska to Liverpool. Marine insurance covers the transportation from the farm to the railroad, the transportation on the railroads, the transportation through the cities to the wharves, the loading on the ships, whatever mortality might occur in handling the cattle along the road, and it also covers the disposition of the cattle at the other end of the line if they are to be delivered in England inland—it covers it all. It covers it while in warehouses, while in bonded warehouses. That is one reason why we had to define all kinds of insurance, although, if you take it as a matter of fact, in some cases pretty nearly all of these lines of insurance will go into some marine shipments.

Mr. WALSH. But it is not restricted to shipments by rail, which are a portion of the shipment to the destination.

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no. The marine policy will be taken out by a manufacturer, we will say, in Chicago, and the marine policy will cover that shipment from the time it leaves the factory in Chicago through all contingencies until it arrives possibly in a store in London.

Mr. WALSH. But it will also permit shipments from Chicago to Arkansas and go no further.

Mr. EDMONDS. In the same car, but that is not marine insurance.

Mr. WALSH. It is made marine insurance by this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think so. I question whether a man would take that as marine insurance. That would be taken as local transportation insurance.

Mr. WALSH. The point I am making is that this definition does not restrict the insurance to shipments, a part of which are over navigable waters.

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no. We said in the beginning that we were in favor of multiple lines of insurance, and that this bill is for that purpose. The first sections of the bill apply to all insurance.

Then, after that you go into maritime insurance and to reinsurance, and reinsurance applies to all insurance. These definitions apply to all insurance.

Mr. WALSH. The point I am trying to get some information on is why you should legislate to define insurance that has none of the maritime aspects connected with its shipment and is purely a shipment by rail between two points inland as marine insurance.

Mr. EDMONDS. We do not. We acknowledge that that paragraph, chapter 2, applies to all insurance, and the reason we did it was because the code of the District of Columbia had no definitions of insurance, and definitions of insurance have been made by the commissioner of the District. The commissioner did not want to do that; he wanted us to describe the kinds of insurance. We have done it, and then we have said that any insurance company doing business in the District of Columbia can write multiple lines of insurance, and then we go into marine insurance, and into reinsurance.

Mr. WALSH. Builders' risk has none of the qualities of marine insurance.

Mr. EDMONDS. We acknowledge that.

Mr. WALSH. But you say it is marine insurance.

Mr. EDMONDS. Where do we say that?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says marine insurance includes insurance against any and all kinds of loss.

Mr. EDMONDS. But only so far as they are connected with marine shipments. We make that large enough so as to cover any possible contingency that might occur in a marine shipment. If there is no builder's risk which goes into a marine shipment, there never will be any insurance in it, but should there be some contingency arise by which a certain amount of builder's risk will be taken up in a policy of some kind in connection with a marine shipment, that would be marine insurance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman of the opinion that this long sentence in chapter 1, section 1, restricts these various other classes of insurance, builder's risk, and loss of property and loss of papers, and all those other various classes of risks which are declared to be marine insurance, to marine insurance only when they are connected with a shipment of some property by water?

Mr. EDMONDS. Not a shipment by water, but what is known to-day as a marine risk.

Mr. WALSH. I have read the House and the Senate hearings, I have read the report made to the gentleman's committee, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and I have read the language of the bill, and from the explanation given before the District of Columbia Committee and the statements made here on the floor I can not see where in this sentence that distinction is made or any limitation of that kind is put upon it.

I would like the gentleman to point out how this limits or restricts.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I suggest lines 11, 12, and 13, page 2—"during, awaiting, or arising out of navigation, transit, travel, or transportation, or the construction or repair of vessels"? That is the concluding phrase of the entire definition.

Mr. WALSH. Where does it say the transportation shall be transportation at sea or in a vessel or anything of that sort?

Mr. EDMONDS. First page, lines 5, 6, and 7.

Mr. WALSH. Of course it does not; and it does not hitch up; and my contention is it is not limited or restricted in that way. You are bringing in all these various classes of insurance under the provisions of this bill as marine insurance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman is drawing a wrong interpretation of this sentence. Here is the situation. I read lines 6 and 7:

Marine insurance means insurance against any and all kinds of loss of or damage to vessels, craft, cars, aircraft, automobiles, and other vehicles, whether operated on or under water, land, or in the air, in any place or situation, and whether complete or in process of or awaiting construction.

Turn over and go to lines 11, 12, and 13, page 2—"whether legal liability results therefrom or not, during, awaiting, or arising out of navigation, transit, travel, or transportation, or the construction or repair of vessels." That definition, I think, has already been established by existing law. I think we copied it from some of the State laws. There may be a little change. We consider marine insurance to cover the stages from the beginning of the manufacture of the goods until the point of the delivery of the goods. That is the construction that has been made by all national authorities and by different State authorities. The marine policy will cover that.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, this question arose during the hearings and there seems to be some doubt about it, but does the gentleman think the words "whether legal liability results therefrom or not" refers back to the first part of this section?

Mr. EDMONDS. Most certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman is wrong. It refers to the words "and for loss of or damage to property or injury or death of any person, whether legal liability results therefrom or not."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I presume the gentleman did not mean to include the words "whether legal liability resulting therefrom or not." That refers to the damage or injury, but the other words in line 12, "during, awaiting, or arising out of navigation, travel, or transportation, and the construction or repair of vessels," which modifies, in a way, the entire sentence, ties it up.

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman will yield, I think the entire section, which consists of one sentence, is too indefinite and lends it to the criticism of the gentleman.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am rather afraid it is.

Mr. LONDON. I think the sentence should be reconstructed. A sentence covering 25 lines is bound to be confusing.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. EVANS. If your definition found in section 1 is subject to the criticism just suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, then in fixing the tax in section 11 it becomes very much more important, does it not, because there you fix a tax on marine insurance and define that part of section 1?

Mr. EDMONDS. It would be naturally important and we would want to have this perfectly plain and understood. It was intended here that the risk connected with marine insurance should be defined as a risk as would arise out of export business from the time it started until the goods arrived.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS. Take the last three lines "during transportation"; by taking out the intermediate words would not that make marine insurance simply transportation by rail between two points entirely inland? "During transportation or other travel."

Mr. EDMONDS. If a foreign shipment is transferred from Chicago to New York it is actually transported between the two points in this country by rail.

Mr. EVANS. But is not your language here such that it would be marine insurance under your definition though it were only during transportation between two inland points and not as part of any water transportation at all?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I do not think so. The phrase "arising out of navigation" modifies that. As a matter of fact, that is done to-day.

Mr. EVANS. It is "arising out of navigation or transportation." You have used both terms, with the disjunctive.

Mr. EDMONDS. Consider that with the first phrase, "insurance against any and all kinds of loss or damage to vessels, craft, cars, aircraft, automobiles, and other vehicles, whether operated on or under water, land, or in the air," and so forth. I think the paragraph has been gone over very carefully, and it covers what we mean. It may not be definite enough, but it covers what we mean.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHAPTER II.—KINDS OF INSURANCE THAT MAY BE WRITTEN.

SEC. 3. That a marine, fire-marine, or fire insurance company may be formed, admitted, or licensed to write any or all insurance and reinsurance comprised in any one or more of the following numbered subdivisions:

First. On marine risks as described in section 1 of this act under the definition of "marine insurance."

Second. On property and rents and use and occupancy, against loss or damage by fire, lightning, tempest, earthquake, hail, frost, snow, explosion (other than explosion of steam boilers or flywheels), breakage or leakage of sprinklers or other apparatus erected for extinguishing fires, and on such apparatus against accidental injury; and against liability of the insured for such loss or damage; and on automobiles against loss or damage from collision or theft, and against liability of the owner or user for injury to person or property caused by his automobile.

Third. Against bodily injury or death by accident, and against disablement resulting from sickness, and every insurance appertaining thereto, including quarantine and identification.

Fourth. Against liability of the insured for the death or disability of another.

Fifth. Against loss of or damage to property resulting from causes other than fire, marine and inland navigation hazards, and against liability of the insured for such loss or damage, and on motor vehicles against fire, marine and inland navigation hazards, and against personal injury and death, and liability of the insured therefor, from explosions of steam boilers and engines, pipes and machinery connected therewith, and breakage of flywheels or machinery, and to make and certify inspections thereof; and against loss of use and occupancy from any cause; against loss by burglary, theft, and forgery.

Sixth. Against loss or damage from failure of debtors to pay their obligations to the insured.

Seventh. Against loss from encumbrances on or defects in titles.

Eighth. Against loss or damage by theft, injury, sickness, or death of animals, and to furnish veterinary services.

Ninth. Against any loss or liability arising from any other casualty or hazard not contrary to public policy, other than that appertaining to or connected with (1) life insurance (including the granting of endowments and annuities), and (2) fidelity and surety bonding.

An insurance company organized for the transaction of one or more of the kinds of insurance permitted under subdivisions 3 to 9, inclusive, of this section, shall also, if complying with this act, be admitted or licensed to write any or all insurance and reinsurance comprised in any one or more of the other subdivisions of this section: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing any insurance company, now formed, admitted, or licensed to transact insurance in the District, from continuing the writing of those kinds of insurance which it may have been authorized to write on the date when this act goes into effect.

Every company formed, admitted, or licensed to transact in the District any of the kinds of insurance permitted by the several numbered subdivisions of this section shall maintain separate and distinct reserves for each kind of insurance so written, and if a stock company shall not transact the business of insurance in the District unless—

(a) It has a capital stock actually paid in, in cash or invested as provided by law, of at least $100,000 for the insurance specified in any one subdivision of this section, nor unless it has a surplus of money or other lawful assets over its authorized capital and all other liabilities of at least $50,000.

(b) With an additional $50,000 of capital stock and $25,000 of surplus for the insurance authorized by any other subdivision of this section and which may be transacted by such company.

(c) That every company writing more than one class of insurance, as authorized in the several subdivisions of this section, shall keep a separate account of all receipts in respect to each class of insurance, as directed by the superintendent, and the receipts in respect to each class of insurance shall be carried to and form a separate insurance fund with an appropriate name, which fund, exclusive of the capital stock and general surplus of the company, shall be as absolutely the security of the policyholders of that class as though it belonged to a company writing no other business than the insurance business of that class, and shall not be liable for any contracts of the company for which it would not have been liable had the business of the company been only that of insurance of that class, and shall not be applied, directly or indirectly, for any purposes other than those of the class of insurance to which the fund is applicable: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall require the investments of any such fund to be kept separate from the investments of any other fund: Provided further, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed as preventing a company, at the end of each calendar—

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. I notice in the last subdivision on page 5 there is a pretty broad authorization for engaging in practically all kinds of insurance, which does not seem to me to be limited in any sense to marine insurance. I notice also on page 12 a provision with reference to taxes, which prescribes the only taxes that can be levied against the company. I was wondering if these two provisions taken together will interfere with State laws which govern the operation of insurance companies within the States.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; because any insurance company formed under this act in the District of Columbia could not do business in your State without compliance with the State laws, and that would probably cover everything except the tax. In your State it would cover the ordinary tax paid by your company. If a company went into your State and undertook to do business, it would be forced to comply with the State tax laws and all other laws. Therefore the only advantage to this company would be in the District of Columbia, or in some State that had the same kind of tax.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Suppose the law of my State required certain conditions, and among them the payment of certain taxes. This bill provides that only certain specified taxes may be levied. Would that not supersede the State law?

Mr. EDMONDS. This is not a national law. This is a law to allow the incorporation of insurance companies in the District of Columbia. It operates only in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It authorizes reinsurance in the States.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true to-day, but they do the reinsurance abroad. Now, we are trying to keep it here. Reinsurance would not affect you at all.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I know. If this were confined exclusively to marine insurance, I would not have any fears along the line of my suggestion, but it seems to me, when you take all these nine different subdivisions in conjunction, you cover all lines of insurance except these last two that are mentioned here—life insurance and fidelity and bonding insurance.

Mr. EDMONDS. While we agree that the bill allows the formation of a multiple line of insurance, yet these definitions are put in here merely to give a definite basis. We had to prepare the definitions. Unfortunately, under the District Code they have not those definitions as to the different kinds of insurance.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that this bill only gives right to the District of Columbia, and if a company does business in any other State it does business precisely as any other company organized in the States? For instance, a company organized in Illinois can only do insurance business in Texas under the laws of the State of Texas. This would be identically the case with this company. This company has no greater rights outside of the District of Columbia than an insurance company of Illinois has outside of the State of Illinois.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman feels sure that this bill does not confer any rights outside of the District of Columbia?

Mr. EDMONDS. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. There is no question about that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Sometimes we attempt to do things that we are not authorized to do.

Mr. MANN. It is a proper inquiry to make, but it can not be done.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Why the exception in lines 4 and 5 on page 4? It seems to be very general in its scope, and I wondered why they eliminated the exception of steam boilers and flywheels.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is not an exception. That is an inclusion.

Mr. WALSH. There is an exception, "other than explosions of steam boilers or flywheels."

Mr. EDMONDS. That is in lines 1 and 2. I thought the gentleman referred to lines 4 and 5.

Mr. WALSH. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I meant lines 1 and 2.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think that comes under another class of insurance.

Mr. WALSH. Probably the gentleman is correct about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That no domestic mutual company shall be organized or licensed within the District unless it has applications from at least 200 persons for each class of insurance (as enumerated under the several subdivisions of section 3) it may be authorized to write aggregating not less than $500,000, the maximum amount of insurance applied for in any application on any risk not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of the aggregate amount, nor 3 times the average amount of insurance applied for in the several applications. No such mutual company shall be so licensed for any of the classes of insurance as allowed under the several subdivisions of section 3 unless it has received in cash, with respect to each such class of insurance written, at least one advanced periodical premium on each such application, aggregating at least $10,000; but if the applications are for employers' liability or workmen's compensation insurance the premiums on such applications shall aggregate at least $25,000, and each employer shall be considered a separate risk; nor unless it has a surplus of $10,000 in money or other lawful investments above its liabilities, including the liability equal to the aggregate amount of premiums so advanced.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] what reserves are required under this bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. The usual reserve required of insurance companies by the best insurance practice. Under the multiple-insurance plan what would happen would be this: A company would pick out the several lines of business that it wanted to enter into, and the commissioner would require a certain reserve to be kept up under that separate line.

Mr. WINGO. That is what I wanted to get at. There is no law now fixing the reserve?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. There is no law now fixing the reserve.

But it would require in each special line the necessary reserve for that line. Then the profits from that line would be turned over to the parent company. This is the English system. It would be like four separate companies under one roof. Now, if one line makes money, that money goes into the surplus fund of the central company. If one line loses money, the surplus fund in the central company makes it up. These English companies are more secure financially, very much stronger because they do that. They carry out their insurance business in that manner. They have lines on which they lose money every year, lines that if necessary for competition can afford to lose money every year, because they make it up on the other lines by the rates that they fix.

Mr. WINGO. I am not familiar with insurance reserves at all, but can the gentleman indicate in a general way what are the reserves required?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have heard Dr. Griffith, the District insurance commissioner, make a statement about that. Dr. Huebner and Dr. Griffith and Mr. Dean of the Shipping Board and myself went over that one night.

Mr. WINGO. What is the general rule which they use in determining the amount of the reserve?

Mr. EDMONDS. I really could not tell the gentleman. All I know is that Dr. Griffith told us that the reserves required in the District of Columbia were about the same as those required in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, and he went on to state what they were. There are tables of insurance practice that are published, and the companies as a general thing follow those lines, the laws of the different States requiring certain percentages of reserves, and whatever is the best practice the companies are required by the insurance commissioners to carry out.

Mr. WINGO. Then the requirements of insurance are very much like the banking law, that the fixed legal reserve is not an arbitrary one, but is predicated upon the past experience of the companies?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is it exactly.

Mr. WINGO. Based on what experience shows to be the necessary amount to carry as a reserve?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is it exactly.

Mr. WINGO. You do not now undertake to disturb the reserve provided by existing law?

Mr. EDMONDS. Absolutely not.

Mr. WINGO. And that reserve is predicated upon the experience of insurance companies?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true. I could not give the gentleman the amount. It is different in different lines. I know that.

Mr. WINGO. I have got the information I want. You do not undertake to fix arbitrarily a reserve other than that which now exists by law?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is correct.

Mr. WINGO. And that is founded upon experience?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. We are not endeavoring to disturb the basic law of the District of Columbia at all. We want the insurance business carried on exactly the same as it has been in the past, with the exception that we are changing the way of doing it.

Mr. WINGO. That information is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That an insurance company organized under laws other than the laws of the District and desiring to transact business in the District shall satisfy the superintendent that it has, if a capital stock company, a paid-up capital and a surplus of assets, invested in accordance with the laws of the State under which it is organized, over its entire authorized capital and all other liabilities, at least equal to the capital and surplus prescribed under section 3 of this act for the writing of various kinds of insurance; and, if a company without capital stock or an interinsurance exchange, that it has a surplus of assets, invested according to the laws of the State under which it is organized, over all its liabilities, of $100,000; or if a mutual company other than a life insurance company, that it has a surplus over liabilities amounting to $100,000, or in lieu thereof a surplus amounting to $10,000 and an additional contingent liability of its policyholders equal to not less than the cash premium expressed in the policies in force; or if a company organized under a foreign Government, Province, or State, that it has a surplus of assets invested according to the laws of the District or of the State in the United States where it has its deposit, held in the United States in trust for the benefit and security of all its policyholders in the United States, over all its liabilities in the United States, of at least $150,000, and, if writing more than one class of insurance as enumerated and allowed under section 3 of this act, an additional $75,000 for each such additional kind of insurance written; and such company so organized under the laws of a foreign Government or State shall also either deposit with the superintendent securities of the amount and value of $150,000 (or such larger amount as may be required by this section if the company writes more than one class of insurance) and of the classes in which insurance companies are permitted by this act to make investments, or with the official of a State of the United States, authorized by the law of such State to accept such deposit, securities of the amount and value of $150,000 (or such larger amount as may be required by this section if the company writes more than one class of insurance), of the classes in which life insurance companies of such State are permitted to make their investments, and such deposits shall be made for the benefit and security of all the policyholders of such company in the United States, and the company shall file with the superintendent the certificate of such official of any such deposit with such official of any such State.

Mr. LONDON. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman the following question: How do the requirements of foreign Governments with reference to American insurance companies compare with the requirements imposed in this bill upon foreign insurance companies? In other words, the question of mutuality often arises in these cases.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am of the opinion that it would be easier for an American company to go into most foreign countries and establish a business there than for a foreign company to conform to our requirements; but we have followed out the general rule of the different States, making the requirements about the same.

Mr. LONDON. If this bill becomes a law it will be a law passed by the General Government, and for that reason I should think the requirements should not be made more severe than those exacted by foreign Governments from American insurance companies.

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course, we did not investigate the requirements of foreign Governments as to American companies. I do know, as a matter of fact, that in the countries where the insurance laws are in a strong and healthy condition—that is, in England, Germany, and some of those countries—they do have a requirement of a deposit in order to meet losses by the company coming into their country from a foreign country and having no legal responsibility in that country, and I think they are right in that. It is virtually a reserve sum; but I believe you could probably go into China and Portugal and Spain and a number of countries and start an insurance company with very little trouble. For that reason countries like Spain and France and Portugal have not the same standing in the insurance world that England has, for instance.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman's impression is that the conditions imposed by this bill are more exacting than those imposed by foreign Governments?

Mr. EDMONDS. A little, but not much.

Mr. LONDON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHAPTER V.—TAXES.

SEC. 8. That with the exception of license fees, real estate and personal property taxes, and a tax on investment income derived from funds representing reserves, capital stock, and surplus as defined by this act, every insurance company organized, admitted, or licensed to transact business within the District shall, with respect to marine insurance written by it within the District, be taxed only on that proportion of the total underwriting profit of the company from marine insurance written within the United States which the net premiums of the company from marine insurance written within the District bear to the total net marine premiums of the company written within the United States. The term "underwriting profit," as used herein, shall be arrived at by deducting from the premiums earned on marine insurance contracts written within the United States during the calendar year (1) the losses incurred and (2) expenses incurred, including all taxes, in connection with such business.

Premiums earned on marine insurance contracts written during the calendar year shall be arrived at as follows:

(1) Gross premiums on marine insurance contracts written during the calendar year, less return premiums and premiums paid for reinsurance.

(2) Add unearned premiums on outstanding marine business at the end of the preceding calendar year.

(3) Deduct unearned premiums on outstanding marine business at the end of the current calendar year.

Losses incurred, as used herein, shall mean gross losses incurred during the calendar year under marine insurance contracts written within the United States, less reinsurance claims collected or collectible and salvages or recoveries collected or collectible from any source applicable to aforesaid losses.

Expenses incurred shall include—

(1) Specific expenses incurred, consisting of all agency commissions, agency expenses, taxes, licenses, fees, loss-adjustment expenses, and all other expenses incurred directly and specifically for the purpose of doing a marine insurance business.

(2) General expenses incurred, consisting of that proportion of general or overhead expenses, such as salaries of officers and employees, printing and stationery, all Federal Government taxes, and all other expenses not chargeable specifically to a particular class of insurance which the net premiums received from marine insurance bear to the total net premiums received by the company from all classes of insurance written during the current calendar year.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Just what is the rule of taxation carried in this bill? Do you not put insurance companies on a preferred basis as far as taxation is concerned?

Mr. EDMONDS. Only in so far that we tax the net profits instead of the premiums. At present most of the States tax gross premiums. In fact, I think all of the States do that. We propose to tax the net profits of the companies, and the endeavor is that in the tax we impose we shall get about the same return that we do to-day from the tax on premiums.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean to say that the tax on investment income is the same thing as net profits?

Mr. EDMONDS. The question of investment income is a mooted question and quite conflicting. We placed the tax on investment income in the bill at the request of the District commissioner. I believe there is a controversy as to what is investment income and how it should be paid and what kind of a tax should be paid on it. But the District commissioner seems to think that it is the proper thing.

Mr. WINGO. I am not familiar with the tax laws of the District. Take any other corporation in the District. Is a tax paid on the capital investment? Do you have a tax on the corporation or an income tax or a mixed system?

Mr. EDMONDS. I did not look that up as to other corporations in the District.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, they all pay taxes on real estate, but I notice that you provide in here that with the exception of license fees, real estate taxes, personal property, investment income, capital stock surplus as defined by the act—

Mr. EDMONDS. They pay a real estate tax—

Mr. WINGO. There is no dispute about that; all pay real estate tax. If you have a stock tax in arriving at what would be assessable value of the stock, you of course would deduct the assessable value of the real estate from the total assessable value of the stock, so that you would not have double taxation. I assume there is no dispute about that; but the point I am getting at is that you except other things subject to the protection of the laws of the District, and getting the benefit of protection you provide that it can only be taxed "on that proportion of the total underwriting profits of the company from marine insurance written within the United States which the net premiums of the company from marine insurance written within the District bear to the total net marine premiums of the company written within the United States." Is not that further exemption from taxation?

Mr. MANN. Under this bill they tax all tangible property here. Then it is proposed instead of taxing all of the business of the company where it receives premium from marine insurance only to tax that portion which is earned in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WINGO. I do not think that provision does it. That may be what they intended.

Mr. MANN. This provision does it, and that is plainly the purpose of it.

Mr. WINGO. It says tax only "that proportion of the total underwriting profit of the company from marine insurance written within the United States which the net premiums of the company from marine insurance written within the District bear to the total net premiums of the company written within the United States." I think the gentleman is correct, and that is what is intended?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, you tax the tangible property like other corporations; you do not make any change in that. Then the intangible property is taxed on the net profits growing out of premiums they received in the District of Columbia business.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. In arriving at that you take the proportion that the District business bears to the portion of the whole business earned in the United States, and you say that arbitrarily shall be the proportion of the intangible tax that should be assessed in the District.

Mr. MANN. Yes; on the receipts of the business.

Mr. WINGO. Now as to deductions. Do you permit them to deduct all taxes they pay, including Federal taxes? The bill seems to provide for that. In other words, as expenses of the business, do you permit them to take credit for all taxes they pay, including Federal taxes?

Mr. MANN. Only on the net income of the company.

Mr. WINGO. Is the corporation permitted to charge up and deduct Federal taxes?

Mr. MANN. No; I think not.

Mr. WINGO. I fear the gentleman is in error. In this provision you specifically authorize them to deduct "specific expenses incurred, consisting of all agency commissions, agency expenses, taxes, licenses, fees," and then, under general expenses, you permit them to deduct Federal taxes. Will you name any other corporation in the District that has that privilege on intangible property? I am not sure about this matter, and am seeking information.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think that is intended in that way.

Mr. WINGO. That is the reason I called the gentleman's attention to it. My impression is that neither an individual nor a corporation under any of our laws is given that privilege. The gentleman is not given that privilege in his own business.

Mr. EDMONDS. No.

Mr. WINGO. And when you pay your Federal income tax you are not permitted to deduct that which you have paid theretofore.

Mr. MANN. And these people will not do it when they come to make their return for the Federal income tax.

Mr. WINGO. But they will on the income in figuring out their net profits.

Mr. MANN. Wherever any company is taxed on its net income, of course it deducts the taxes that it has paid, because that comes out of the income. That does not relate to the return for income taxes of this company or anyone else.

Mr. WINGO. It is a specific kind of income tax that we are discussing. We are not talking about Federal income tax.

Mr. MANN. But it is not what we call the income tax.

Mr. WINGO. I know, but it is a species of income tax, and it is comparable to the income tax that some States impose on corporations. Is it not comparable with the income tax paid in the State of New York?

Mr. MANN. I think in all of those cases, as it was with the Federal income tax when it was first started, where you tax the net income the taxes are deducted as a proper expense.

Mr. WINGO. Has not the State of New York followed the policy of the Federal Government and taken away the privilege of deducting the Federal tax?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think it was intended to do that in this bill. I do not think they had any idea of changing the situation with reference to the Federal tax on any corporation.

Mr. WINGO. It is not a question of affecting the Federal income taxes. Here you are giving them an exemption. In other words, here is an insurance company in a building down town, and when it comes to make up its taxes for the District of Columbia, for the purpose of arriving at its net income under this intangible tax, it takes credit for taxes paid the Federal Government, while right across the hall in the same building would be another business corporation that would not be permitted to charge up either as general or specific expenses for the purpose of fixing its intangible tax for the District the Federal taxes that it had paid. That would be a discrimination.

Mr. MANN. There is no tax here that I know of on a net income or profit of any corporation.

Mr. WINGO. But the question is how you fix the net income. The net income represents the income after allowance is made for all deductions, and you can deduct taxes paid both to the State and to the Federal Government. There will be corporations in the District of Columbia that in figuring the same tax and arriving at their net income will not be permitted to include Federal taxes.

Mr. MANN. They include Federal taxes in cases where you tax the net income, and the only exception, and that was made only recently, is in the Federal income tax return, where they do not allow you to deduct the Federal tax paid by you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Then some corporation in the District that would have to account to the Federal Government for the principal part of its tax would be denied a deduction of general expenses that this insurance company in the same building would be permitted to take?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Suppose the State of Arkansas undertook to organize corporations under a bill such as this. This right to deduct Federal taxes in the District of Columbia would apply here, but would it apply to the company organized in Arkansas? In other words, the revenue act under which we live now denies to the company organized in Arkansas the right to deduct the Federal tax, and we will give it to the company organized in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WINGO. I do not think there is any question about that. Mr. MANN. But an Arkansas corporation would not pay any taxes here unless it had property here. It would pay a tax on its income.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 14, lines 9 and 10, strike out "all Federal Government taxes."

Mr. EDMONDS. I agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Wingo) there were—ayes 21, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 14, line 8, strike out the words "overhead expenses, such as salaries of officers and employees," and in line 10 strike out the words "Government taxes."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee has just voted on the question of the elimination of the words "all Federal Government taxes."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has offered a separate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, he proposes to leave in the language "all Federal and other expenses"?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, this is merely a pro forma amendment to permit me to discuss a question that is in order under that language.

In section 29, which we have not reached yet, it provides the following new officers: The superintendent of insurance is authorized to appoint, in addition to the present force, an examiner at $3,000 per annum, a clerk-stenographer at $1,800 per annum, and to increase the contingent expenses of the insurance department in the sum of $800 a year. That is going to require more Government taxes in order to pay these extra officeholders. Most of it comes out of the Federal Treasury and the people have to pay it in Government taxes. That is another reason why this bill should not be passed. Nearly every time we have a committee call up a bill they can not do it without having new officeholders and new salaries to be paid and extra Government taxes to be taken out of the pockets of the people. That led me to say awhile ago that we already have plenty of laws, already have plenty of marine insurance companies, we already have plenty of other companies doing business in the United States. And that is another reason why this bill should not pass, and I think we ought to have a quorum here, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. That is the result of the gentleman's five-minute speech; he drove everybody out.

The CHAIRMAN. [After counting.] Seventy-two gentlemen are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll and the following gentlemen failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 2265, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 295 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he submitted the list for publication in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the point of no quorum was made the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] submitted an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. That, Mr. Chairman, was a pro forma amendment, and I desire to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman a question. Is it the intention of the committee to exempt these companies from the payment of any taxes on any foreign business they may do?

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman means outside the District? In insurance parlance foreign business means outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I mean business in foreign countries.

Mr. EDMONDS. That would depend entirely on the profit they would make. Their business in foreign countries would be taxed when it became part of the profits of their company.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I just wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the limit of taxes under the section we have under consideration is for business written within the United States. It says they shall only pay taxes on that business, but in a later provision, page 28, it makes their foreign business subject to taxes provided in section 5, and as I read these two provisions in connection the company would be absolutely exempt from any of the revenue laws of this country for business done in foreign countries under the provisions of chapter 8. I do not know that is intended.

Mr. MANN. What language in the bill did the gentleman first refer to?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The language here which says at the bottom of page 12 to the effect that they shall be taxed only on that proportion of the total underwriting profit of the company from marine insurance written within the United States.

Mr. MANN. I know, but we tax the District business only in proportion to that written in the United States. It has nothing to do with the question of taxes otherwise. That is taxes with reference to marine insurance written by them within the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am rather inclined to think that is the intention of the committee, but I was afraid as it starts off if they shall be taxed only on that it might not be exactly the meaning intended.

Mr. MANN. The business in the District is taxed only in proportion on the business between that done in the District and the United States, and that is all it says.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is all the last part of the language says, but it sets out certain exceptions here, and it says "shall be taxed only in proportion of the total underwriting profit of the company."

Mr. MANN. Marine insurance written here within the District shall be taxed only in proportion, and it says that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It does not say that exactly. If it says that it taxes only on the business done within the District, that would be a different expression, but it says the company shall be taxed only; in other words, there shall be no other tax.

Mr. MANN. I know; but it says, respecting marine insurance written by it in the District of Columbia, it "shall be taxed only," and so forth. It relates only to the business done in the District.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am not sure that that is the correct construction, and especially in view of the stipulation that is put in at the end of section 21.

Mr. MANN. That is another matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 9. That every company transacting marine insurance in the District shall set forth in its annual statement to the superintendent, and in the form prescribed by him, all the items pertaining to its insurance business as enumerated and prescribed in the preceding section. To determine the basis of the tax on underwriting profit, every company which has been writing marine insurance for five years shall furnish the superintendent a statement of all of the aforementioned items, in the form prescribed by him, for each of the preceding five calendar years. A company shall furnish to the superintendent a statement of all the aforementioned items for each of the calendar years during which it has written marine insurance.

If the superintendent finds the report of the company reporting correct, he shall, if the company has transacted marine insurance for five years, (1) ascertain the total average annual underwriting profit, as defined by this act, derived by the company from its marine insurance business written within the United States during the last preceding five calendar years, (2) ascertain the proportion which the average net annual premiums of the company from marine insurance written by it in the District during the last preceding five calendar years bear to the average total net marine premiums of the company during the same five years, (3) compute an amount of 5 per cent on this proportion of the aforementioned average annual underwriting profit of the company from marine insurance, and (4) charge the amount of tax thus computed to such company as a tax upon the marine insurance written by it in the District during the current calendar year. Thereafter the superintendent shall each year compute the tax, according to the method described in this section, upon the average annual underwriting profit of such company from marine insurance during the preceding five years, including the current calendar year; namely, at the expiration of each current calendar year, the profit or loss on the marine insurance business of that year is to be added or deducted, and the profit or loss upon the marine insurance business of the first calendar year of the preceding five-year period is to be dropped, so that the computation of underwriting profit for purposes of taxation under this act will always be on a five-year average: Provided, however, That a company which has not been writing marine insurance in the District for five years shall, until it has transacted such business in the District for that number of years, be taxed on the basis of the annual average underwriting profit on marine insurance written within the United States during the preceding five years as averaged for all companies reporting to the superintendent for the current calendar year and which have been transacting marine insurance in the District for the past five years: Provided further, That, if at any time none of the companies reporting to the superintendent shall have written marine insurance in the District for five years, a company which has not been writing marine insurance in the District for five years shall be taxed on the basis of an annual average underwriting profit as averaged for all companies reporting to the superintendent for the number of years during which they have written marine insurance in the District, subject, however, to an adjustment in the tax as soon as the superintendent, in accordance with the provisions of this section, is enabled to compute the tax on the aforementioned five-year basis: And provided further, That in the case of mutual companies the superintendent shall not include in underwriting profit, when computing the tax prescribed by this section, the amounts refunded by such companies on account of premiums previously paid by their policyholders.

When the superintendent has computed the tax on a company's underwriting profit, he shall forthwith mail to the last known address of the principal office of such company a statement of the amount so charged against it, which amount the company shall pay to the collector of taxes within 30 days after receipt of such notice from the superintendent, and no further tax, except the taxes on investment income from funds representing reserves, capital stock, and surplus as prescribed by sections 10 and 11 of this act and the license fee prescribed by section 13, shall be imposed by the District upon such company, or the agents thereof, for the privilege of transacting the business of marine insurance in the District.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, who has introduced this measure in the House, a question relative to the provision at the bottom of page 14 and at the top of page 15:

A company which has not been writing marine insurance for five years shall furnish to the superintendent a statement of all the aforementioned items for each of the calendar years during which it has written marine insurance.

Is it intended that these companies shall furnish that information under the oath of one of its officers?

Mr. EDMONDS. I believe that is required under the present law. Annual statements are required to be made under oath. That is in the present insurance code here.

Mr. WALSH. Would not this supersede the present law?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I think this is an addition to it.

Mr. WALSH. No; I do not think this is in addition to it; it is a new kind of statement under a provision requiring another kind of information to be furnished. In the next sentence it is provided, "If the superintendent finds the report of the company correct," he shall, and so forth.

Mr. EDMONDS. It says "that every company transacting marine insurance business in the District shall set forth in its annual statement to the superintendent, and in the form prescribed by him, all the items pertaining to insurance business as enumerated and prescribed in the preceding section." The code of the District requires an annual statement to be furnished under oath.

Mr. WALSH. Well, this is applying to companies that have not done marine insurance for five years.

Mr. EDMONDS. No. The idea was that if a company had only done business for three years or two years or one year, it should furnish the statement anyhow. That is to encourage the companies to go into the marine insurance business.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, I appreciate that I am not very clear in the statements I am making in the endeavor to get this information. This section provides that "To determine the basis of the tax on underwriting profit, every company which has been writing marine insurance for five years shall furnish the superintendent a statement of all of the aforementioned items, in the form prescribed by him, for each of the preceding five calendar years."

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Now, that is one kind of a statement to be furnished where they have been doing business for five years. Now, they also furnish a statement of all the aforementioned items if they have not been doing it for five years.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And I am asking whether or not these statements are under oath?

Mr. EDMONDS. Unquestionably.

Mr. WALSH. Then what is the necessity of the following language: "If the superintendent finds the report of the company reporting correct, he shall, if the company has transacted marine insurance for five years, ascertain," and so forth?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is to separate out the marine insurance for taxation purposes under this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what happens if he finds the report incorrect as to a company that has not been doing business for five years?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is covered, as the code undoubtedly punishes people for furnishing incorrect information.

Mr. WALSH. How long has that been the law?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think that law—the code—has been in existence since 1902, and basically since 1887. All reports are required to be furnished under oath.

Mr. WALSH. Then what is the necessity for this?

Mr. EDMONDS. Simply to arrange for new companies to go into the business, and so make their reports that we can tax them and at the same time not be unfair to them.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose they make a mistake in the report; suppose they make a statement that is not correct?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is for the obvious purpose that the superintendent shall not be bound by a report which, in fact, upon investigation, he finds to be incorrect. He is not bound by it, and he does not have to function under this act under the basis of an incorrect report. He can correct the report, and then go ahead and function and levy the taxes.

Mr. WALSH. Well, can a company, by filing an erroneous report, delay proceedings so that they will not have to pay any taxes?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If they file an erroneous report they are susceptible to the remedy which the criminal law provides for perjury.

Mr. MANN. The superintendent has the right to have correct reports filed under the District Code.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Certainly; and if a company willfully files an incorrect report for the purpose of delaying the payment of taxes there are plenty of remedies under the code that will punish that sort of procedure so as to make it unprofitable.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the understanding of the gentleman from New Jersey that if a company has been doing business for less than five years under this law they can be required to submit a statement under oath?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think so.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to know where the authority is. The District code provides that the report and annual statement shall be submitted under oath. This is something entirely in addition to it. It does not refer to that statement, and it does not require it to be under oath. It is a new statement.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It says that every company transacting marine insurance in this District for five years shall set forth in its annual statement to the superintendent all the items in the form and manner prescribed by him. This must be under oath. Then, the section reads:

A company that has not been doing a marine-insurance business in the District for five years shall furnish to the superintendent a statement of all the aforementioned items for each of the calendar years during which it has written marine insurance.

That language, without repeating all this verbiage that goes before it, necessarily must be construed to mean that such statement shall be made in the same form and in the same manner; that is, the statement must be under oath, and in the form that the superintendent requires. That language could all be repeated, but it is not necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but this statement does not have to be under oath.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 11. That, in addition to the taxes, as prescribed under sections 8 to 10, inclusive, of this act, every company organized under the laws of the District and transacting marine insurance therein shall, with respect to marine insurance written in the District, pay a tax of 2 per cent on its investment income from funds representing capital stock and surplus as shown by the company's annual statement. Such investment income shall, for purposes of taxation under this act, be arrived at as follows: Add the gross assets at the beginning and end of the calendar year and strike an average. Add capital stock and surplus at the beginning and end of the year and strike an average. Ascertain the proportion which the average capital stock and surplus bears to average gross assets. Credit to investment income on capital stock and surplus such proportion of all income, except income taxed under section 10 of this act, derived from interest, dividends, rents, and profits on sales or redemption of assets. Charge against investment income on capital stock and surplus such proportion of all losses on sales or redemption of assets.

Should a company subject to this tax be writing other classes of insurance, and the capital stock and surplus referred to herein relate to all the classes of insurance written without being specifically allocated to the several classes of insurance written, then such proportion of the investment income from funds representing capital stock and surplus, computed according to the method prescribed in the preceding paragraph of this section, shall be applicable to marine insurance for purposes of taxation under this section as the net premiums from marine insurance during the calendar year bear to the net premiums of the company from all the classes of insurance written.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON. At the suggestion of several gentlemen around me, I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the section just read proposes an additional tax upon the companies authorized to do business under the provisions of this act.

Mr. EDMONDS. This is a tax on their investment income from funds representing capital stock and surplus. It is a tax that is collected by pretty nearly every State on the investment incomes of the insurance companies. It is an excise tax.

Mr. WALSH. One is on the investment income and the other is upon its average earnings on reserves for unpaid losses and unexpired premiums.

Mr. EDMONDS. Insurance companies have large sums of money which they invest as reserves. From these reserves they have a certain income. In order to tax that income, which would otherwise go into surplus, most of the States put a tax on the investment income. This tax of 2 per cent on the investment income was suggested by the commissioner of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. That is in addition to the 5 per cent on its average income on reserves?

Mr. EDMONDS. This is on the investment income. It is not a part of its underwriting profits. Investment income is entirely separate from underwriting profits. Underwriting profit is what comes out of the premiums paid.

Mr. WALSH. I am not talking about underwriting profits. Section 10 imposes a tax of 5 per cent on the average earnings on reserves for unpaid losses and unexpired premiums.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Then in addition to that there is 2 per cent on its investment income from funds representing capital stock and surplus as shown by the company's annual statement.

Mr. EDMONDS. There is a difference in different States as to what investment income from the reserve should be considered to be. We tax it as the other States tax it, and there is no particular description here that will in any way affect what other States have done in connection with investment income.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman state that there is no advantage under this scheme?

Mr. EDMONDS. No detriment and no advantage at all.

Mr. WALSH. It is just the same?

Mr. EDMONDS. Just about the same. Some States levy a tax of 1 per cent and some 3 per cent, but it is on exactly the same principle, and the amount was chosen by the insurance commissioner of the District. We asked him what amount he wanted and he said 2 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 13. That in lieu of all other license fees every company writing marine insurance in the District shall pay a single annual fee equal to $100 if the assets of the company aggregate $1,000,000 or under, to $150 if the assets aggregate over $1,000,000, and do not exceed $5,000,000, and to $200 if the assets exceed $5,000,000. The manner and time of paying this single fee and its remittance to the collector of taxes shall be the same as prescribed under section 9 for the payment of taxes on underwriting profit.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state what is the difference between the amount of license fees charged under this section and the amount paid now?

Mr. EDMONDS. It amounts to about the same thing. Heretofore it has been the custom for the companies to send to the District commissioner's office and get a number of small memoranda and papers that they paid for. They have paid a dollar for some papers and 50 cents for others. It was a source of a good deal of annoyance to the companies and to the commissioner. Now, they are to pay a license fee, and when they pay that license fee they are entitled to secure such papers as they need. The District commissioner said these figures were sufficient to cover a little more than he made out of the companies to-day. It is simply a difference in the form of collecting the same thing.

Mr. WALSH. Would this apply to companies in existence here now?

Mr. EDMONDS. It will apply only to marine companies. We hope it will apply to all of them. We would be glad to have it apply to all of them.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. If this is a bill authorizing insurance companies under this law to insure all kinds of hazards except life and surety, why does this license fee apply only to marine insurance?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have stated a number of times to-day that marine insurance includes almost every kind of insurance.

Mr. BLANTON. Marine insurance does not include every kind of insurance under the definitions of this bill. It does not embrace all the various kinds of insurance mentioned in the nine different sections.

Mr. EDMONDS. It embraces pretty nearly all of them. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. BLANTON. Because marine insurance is defined in the first section. It says, line 15, page 2, "marine insurance company means any person, company, or associations authorized by this act to write marine insurance within the District." Then in describing what kind of hazards companies formed under this law may insure against, there are nine different subdivisions or sections of definitions of those hazards. The first hazard, subdivision beginning on line 22, page 3, says first on marine risks as described in section 1 of this act under the definition of marine insurance. Second, on property and rent against loss or damage by fire, lightning, tempests, earthquakes, and so forth; third, against bodily injury or death by accident, and so forth; fourth, against liability for the death or disability of another, and so forth; fifth, against loss or damage to property resulting from causes other than fire, and so forth; sixth, against loss or damage from failure of debtors to pay their obligations to the insured; seventh, against loss from encumbrances on or defects in titles, and so forth; eighth, against loss or damage by theft, injury, sickness, or death of animals, and to furnish veterinary services, and so forth; ninth, against any loss or liability arising from any other casualty or hazards not contrary to public policy, and so forth.

If it is going to permit these companies to insure generally, why not provide a license fee generally? The license fee is made applicable only to companies carrying marine insurance. It is not a very large license fee. I know real estate dealers who pay a larger.

Mr. EDMONDS. The superintendent of insurance thought it was sufficient.

Mr. BLANTON. It seems to me to be a clause directed against companies here in the District doing marine insurance and not doing anything else.

Mr. EDMONDS. It is to transpose the local charge made from day to day to an annual license fee. To-day a man in the insurance business pays a quarter or half a dollar for papers from time to time.

Mr. BLANTON. The companies operating under this law will insure against numerous hazards, everything except life and surety. By reason of the fact that it does marine insurance it pays a license fee. Others doing only marine insurance pay this same fee. It seems to me that this is inequitable.

Mr. EDMONDS. The commissioner thought it was perfectly proper, and he is an expert in the business. I am not.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 16. That none of the taxes or fees prescribed under sections 8 to 13, inclusive, shall be imposed upon business written within the District by "Syndicate B," a marine-insurance syndicate created by agreement between the United States Shipping Board and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and a number of subscribing American marine insurance companies, under date of June 28, 1920, for the purpose of insuring all American steel steamships which the United States Shipping Board and/or United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation may hereafter sell to others, to the full extent of the unpaid purchase price thereof, and also such other American steel steamships heretofore sold by said Shipping Board and/or by said corporation as are acceptable for insurance to the Syndicate B subscribers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in this section this new-fashioned phraseology which has been sought to be put into legislation heretofore by using, in lines 20 and 24, the word "and" with an oblique line and then the word "or." Now, when the other committee of the House brought in legislation with this new-fashioned phraseology it was said it was suggested by some of the experts outside, and the committee decided that one or the other of those words and the oblique line should be eliminated. It seems to me that in this case it ought to be eliminated, and that it will not sacrifice the sense or the effectiveness of the language. We do not write statutes saying "the United States Shipping Board and or the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation." That would not in any wise make less effective the law.

Mr. EDMONDS. Would it make any difference whether it was left in or taken out?

Mr. WALSH. If you leave both of the words in it makes it doubtful what it does mean.

Mr. EDMONDS. This is the usual term in the shipping business. It is used in all policies and in all charter parties.

Mr. WALSH. But it is not used in a single law ever passed by any legislature.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know; I never saw it. I agree with the gentleman as far as that is concerned, but I do not think it makes any difference.

Mr. WALSH. It makes a difference in the sense.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman does not mean that all the insurance policies and charter parties are invalid because it has that phraseology in it?

Mr. WALSH. I do not; but I say it does not make sense.

Mr. EDMONDS. If it is used in policies and charter parties, I can not see why it does not make sense.

Mr. WALSH. If that is so, why is it not used all the rest of the way through the bill, wherever you use the word "and" use the diagonal line and the word "or"?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because the Shipping Board admiralty lawyers wrote it in here.

Mr. WALSH. I think you will find that was in the original bill, which was referred many months ago to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee.

I suggest to the gentleman that we not establish a precedent here by including both these words, and that one or the other should be eliminated. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 20, page 21, after the word "board," by striking out the word "and" and the oblique line; and also in line 24, after the word "board," by striking out the word "and" and the oblique line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 21, line 20, after the word "board," strike out the word "and" and the oblique line following it; and also in line 24, after the word "board," strike out the word "and" and the oblique line following it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 2265 and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7077. An act to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—
Mr. COOPER of Ohio, on account of illness.

Mr. KRAUS (at the request of Mr. PURNELL) for two days, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 16, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

534. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a request from the Secretary of State for legislation to make appropriation for the maintenance of the International Latitude Observatory at Ukiah, Calif., to be included in the deficiency appropriation bill now under consideration by Congress (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 16, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou hast granted us the privilege of seeing the light of another day. Help us in the understanding of duty, that we may realize the high conceptions of the privilege of serving our generation by Thy will. So direct our thoughts that every problem may have its solution, that every way may be blazed before us, and that we may find ourselves continually turning unto Thee for guidance and grace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ODDIE presented the petition of C. H. Baker, president of the Lovelock Gun Club, and sundry other citizens of Lovelock, Nev., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 1452, the so-called public shooting ground and game refuge bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of C. H. Baker, president of the Lovelock Gun Club, and sundry other citizens of Lovelock, Nev., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 2670, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain lands in the Newlands reclamation project to the Truckee-Carson irrigation district unless the bill be so amended that the rights of citizens of Nevada to hunt game on said lands is forever preserved, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the memorial of John H. Dixon and sundry other students of the electrical department of United States Veterans' Bureau Vocational School No. 1, remonstrating against the proposed discontinuance of the above-named school, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Relief Corps, Auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Parsons, Kans., favoring the passage of House bill 7213, providing for increased pensions for veterans of the Civil War and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of House bill 13, the so-called Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of Senate bill 1253, regulating immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of House bill 6308, to exclude fraudulent devices and lottery paraphernalia from the mails, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of House bill 2193, prohibiting importation or use of opium for other than medicinal purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, of Boston, Mass., favoring relief to the suffering peoples of Austria by deferring for 20 years payment of Austria's debt, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, of Boston, Mass., praying for immediate relief to the peoples of Armenia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of House bill 8626, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce of immoral motion-picture films, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LADD presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial of the Automotive Trade Association, of Fargo, N. Dak., remonstrating against the proposed gasoline and horsepower tax on automobiles in connection with the soldiers' bonus plan, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Dickinson Rotary Club, of Dickinson, N. Dak., praying that an appropriation of $5,000,000 be made for the relief of farmers in drought-stricken regions, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the grain growers of Alva, Okla., favoring the passage of Senate bill 2604, the so-called Ladd honest-money bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented resolutions of the Parent-Teachers Association, of Courtenay; and of a mass meeting of farmers in Shepherd Township, Walsh County, both in the State of North Dakota, favoring the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petitions of Paul Haugen and 10 others of Amidon, Martin K. Saethou and 28 others of Steel, Sarah Hagen and 19 others of Hillsboro, and Martin Tweden and 42 others of Buxton, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 995) for the relief of Charles G. Griffa, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 996) for the relief of J. W. La Bare, submitted an adverse report thereon (No. 500), which was agreed to and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2531) to create a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 501) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 3140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion to extend the time for payment of construction charges under Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

INDIANA HARBOR (IND.) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2993) authorizing a modification of the adopted project for Indiana Harbor, Ind., and I submit a report (No. 499) thereon. I wish to make just a brief statement with reference to the purpose of the bill, as I desire to ask for its present consideration.

The bill was introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New]. The project for the improvement of Indiana Harbor contemplated an improvement of the outer harbor by the Government, and private parties were to make an improvement of the inner harbor along a certain channel which the Government was to take over when completed and maintain. The private parties have already constructed the canal for a certain distance along the line, but they have come to the conclusion that it has gone as far as it should be extended, and they desire to have abandoned the western part of the right of way and to use it for industrial development.

The War Department have examined the matter carefully and report that they have no objection. The committee have examined it and recommend favorable action.

As it is rather urgent, as the parties desire to begin their industrial development right away, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the project adopted in the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910, for the improvement and maintenance of Indiana Harbor, Ind., is hereby so modified as to eliminate that part of the projected inner canal extending from the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of section 20, township 37 north, range 9 west of the second principal meridian, westwardly to Lake George; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to quitclaim and convey to local interests, on such terms and conditions as he may deem just and equitable, the rights of way which have been heretofore donated by local interests to the United States for the said section of the canal and for connecting the said Lake George with Wolf Lake.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEWBERRY:

A bill (S. 3158) for an examination and survey of the Cheboygan River, Mich.; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 3159) to exempt ferryboats and the owners, masters, and agents thereof from payment for services of officers or employees of the United States in the examination of passengers and baggage; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3160) for the relief of Alfred P. Reck; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 3161) granting a pension to Jennie S. Emery (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 3163) to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings; and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

GRAZING PERMITS IN FOREST RESERVES.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, owing to the serious losses to cattlemen and sheepmen of the West, particularly those who have leases and permits in forest reserves, I introduce a bill for the purpose of relieving them from their payments for the current year, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have had a number of petitions relating to the same question.

The bill (S. 3162) to authorize the remission or cancellation of the payment of grazing fees for the use of national forests during the calendar year 1922 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

RELIEF FOR DESTITUTE INDIANS.

Mr. MYERS. I introduce a joint resolution, which I send to the desk, to make an appropriation of money for the relief of destitute and suffering Indians, and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162) to make an immediate appropriation of money for the relief of destitute and suffering Indians was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MYERS. In connection with the joint resolution, I ask to have printed in the Record a statement from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to conditions which make necessary the appropriation of money called for by the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

RELIEF FOR DESTITUTE INDIANS.

The Indians have felt the universal postwar depression to a greater extent than the whites, because of their more or less dependent economic status, limited resources, and lack of provision for such emergencies. The situation was anticipated to some extent several months ago, but at that time it was thought that we would be able to get through the winter with funds already appropriated for the present fiscal year. However, reports now indicate that the situation is far more serious than was at first anticipated, and that the amount asked for will be absolutely necessary in order to provide needy Indians with the actual necessities of life in the way of food and clothing; otherwise there will be great distress and hardship. There have been successive crop failures on several reservations because of drought, pests, etc. The outside industries adjacent to many of the reservations upon which the Indians have largely depended in the past are practically at a standstill, thereby eliminating this source of income. Insufficient money is available for the pay of Indian labor in reservation activities to provide work for all able-bodied Indians who have no other means of support.

The reports indicate that Indians on 30 reservations will require help during the present winter, and the minimum sum necessary for this purpose is $100,000. The regular appropriations for the support and civilization of the Indians during the current fiscal year have been practically exhausted, which is also true of the appropriation for the relief of distress. No reservation has been included in the estimate where other funds are available that can be used for this purpose. The following typical extracts from the reports will serve to illustrate the seriousness of the situation:

"Under the conditions I do not see how considerable suffering can be avoided unless aid is extended."

"We have a great many old people who are without funds, and $10 a month barely provides the necessities of life."

"Without the amount asked for actual suffering will result to our old and crippled Indians."

"The care of the old and permanently indigent is also most difficult, and as a matter of fact has been solved in most instances by leaving them to their inevitable fate as a consequence of the ever-prevailing lack of adequate funds."

"I believe that it will require not less than $7,600 in addition to any reimbursable allotment to prevent actual suffering among these people during the remainder of the current fiscal year."

"Unless we have rain within the next two weeks there will not be a spear of wheat grown on the entire reservation, and there will be at least 50 per cent of the Indians in destitute circumstances before spring, and 50 per cent of this reservation means approximately 2,000 Indians. Unless conditions change immediately it will be necessary to feed these people to avoid starvation."

The main object of the appropriation is to furnish funds for the purchase of food, clothing, and other supplies for the old, indigent, and disabled; and on most of the reservations the greater portion thereof will be expended for such purposes. However, as set forth above, many able-bodied Indians ordinarily self-supporting will require help this winter. It has therefore been thought advisable to provide that in such cases the appropriation can be used for the employment of Indians of this class in the construction of roads, and other improvements on the reservation. This not only avoids the gratuitous issuance of rations to able-bodied Indians by providing them with funds for their support but will also result in better roads and other badly needed facilities.

The situation is most serious on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana. This reservation, inhabited by 3,007 Indians, is immediately south of the Canadian border and the winters are long and severe; the growing season being short and the agricultural possibilities of the reservation limited. Last year numerous letters were received alleging starvation among the Indians of this reservation. A careful house-to-house investigation disclosed no starving Indians, but developed the need for additional help in the way of food and clothing. As a result of the investigation large quantities of food and clothing were purchased and distributed, 2,000 Indians being supplied with rations during the greater part of the winter. In the spring of 1921 another investigation was made with the view of formulating plans for bringing about permanently improved conditions, as the result of which a constructive and systematic program to this end has been inaugurated. An important feature of this plan involves the better utilization by the able-bodied Indians of the agricultural possibilities of the reservation, principally in the production of grain and vegetables. However, the Indians lack the necessary seed and implements for this purpose.

The superintendent reports that it will probably be necessary to ration about 1,000 Indians this year, at an estimated cost of $27,040 in addition to the amount already authorized for this purpose; besides which the Indians need clothing, bedding, etc., in order to adequately protect themselves against the severe winters which prevail there.

The need is likewise great on the San Carlos Reservation, Ariz. However, it is the intention to afford relief there principally by providing labor for Indians on the reservation in road work and other activities, although it will be necessary to purchase about $4,000 worth of additional rations.

The Papago Indians in Arizona also need help. The Indians of this reservation have been practically self-supporting in the past. Last year there was an unusual drought with resultant heavy loss of cattle and horses, thereby greatly impoverishing the Indians. The superintendent reports that owing to the lack of winter rains no wheat was planted, and that if the drought continues 50 per cent of the Indians will be left in destitute circumstances, in which event it will be necessary to feed them in order to avoid starvation.

I can not too strongly urge the imperative necessity of this appropriation immediately if extreme hardship and destitution among Indians are to be avoided.

AMENDMENT OF TARIFF BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the permanent tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PARK SYSTEM.

Mr. BALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 3098, authorizing the extension of the park system in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside of their districts, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS OF RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment proposing to authorize the appropriation of $4,200 for improvement of the Tensas River (La.), in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 95, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3017) authorizing appropriations for the prosecution and maintenance of public works on canals, rivers, and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also (for Mr. BROUSSARD) submitted amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. BROUSSARD to Senate bill 3017, the Senate river and harbor bill, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 8, after line 18, to insert: "Bogue Falaya River, La., with a view to securing a navigable channel from Madisonville to Covington."

On page 8, after line 18, to insert: "Lake Fausse Pointe, La., with a view to securing a navigable channel by constructing and maintaining a canal from Grand Bayou to Sandy Point, or otherwise."

RECLAMATION PROJECTS TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I submit an amendment which I intend to offer to the Interior Department appropriation bill. I ask that it may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and I wish to say just a word in reference to it.

The matter has some bearing upon the question involved in the unfinished business, in charge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the bill (S. 2749) to prepare for future cyclical periods of depression and unemployment by systems of public works.

The unemployment conference called by the President some little time ago suggested, as an immediate opportunity for relieving to some extent the condition of unemployment, that public works upon the various reclamation projects of the country which have been authorized by law be prosecuted actively, and that appropriations be made for this purpose. They gave a list of the various projects, one or two of which are in the State of Washington, most of which, however, are in other States, projects which have been approved, for which plans and specifications have been made, some of which are already in process of construction and some of which are ready in all respects for actual construction work.

It seems to me, if I may be allowed to say just a word further in explanation, that this affords a practical effort for getting actual results along the lines so well advocated by the distinguished Senator from Iowa. There is very little use referring to a policy and legislating that policy into law unless it is executed. What we desire is the employment of those who are out of employment. What we specifically desire in this case is the creation of new homes for those particular people and for other people who are willing to undertake the work necessary for the development of these projects. It affords them the opportunity to go upon the land under conditions which have been demonstrated to be advantageous. It affords the opportunity for the creation of enormous wealth for the Nation. All that it needs is the appropriation of a comparatively small sum of money. I intend to ask the Committee on Appropriations to attach the amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NETTIE B. ROSS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 239), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Nettie B. Ross, widow of James D. Ross, late a laborer in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

NAVAL OCCUPATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on the 3d of the present month I offered a resolution (S. Res. 234) directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish full and complete information to the Senate as to all costs to the United States resulting from the naval occupation of Haiti and the Republic of Santo Domingo. The resolution is lying upon the table. I ask its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELLEN M. WILLEY.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on Monday last I moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 5659) for the relief of Ellen M. Willey, widow of Owen S. Willey, was passed. It appeared from the record then before us that the person who had been a soldier, which was the basis of the demand for relief, had been a deserter. There was, however, some contention made at the time that there was a mistake as to identity. I have made investigation, and I am convinced that there was a mistake in identity. I therefore withdraw my motion for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

LOANS ON ARIZONA FARM LANDS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the Record a letter from the Federal Farm Loan Bureau giving data as to loans to citizens of Arizona.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.
FEDERAL FARM LOAN BUREAU,
WASHINGTON, February 13, 1922.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: Your letter of the 6th instant for some reason or other has just reached me this morning. I am very glad, indeed, to furnish you the information sought, as follows:

(1) Number of applications from citizens in Arizona for loans.—Answer, 1,325.

(2) Gross amount of such loans applied for.—Answer, $4,616,287.

(3) Number of such applications granted and loans closed.—Answer, 383.

(4) Number of such applications rejected.—Answer, 680.

(5) Number of applications pending at this date.—Answer, 262.

(6) Total amount of money loaned in Arizona to this date.—Answer, $1,219,700.

I note that you are receiving some complaints from applicants who feel that there is undue delay in the consideration of their applications. If you will send me down these complaints as you receive them from time to time I shall be very glad, indeed, to ascertain in each case the reasons for the delay.

Assuring you of my pleasure in trying to be of service,

Very truly, yours,

A. F. LEVER,
Member Farm Loan Board.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was directed this morning, at a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to introduce and ask the Senate to pass a resolution which I have prepared and now introduce. I will not ask action on it today because in the nature of it the resolution will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the resolution so that Senators will know what the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry propose to do, in order that they may voice their objections, if they have any to it, when a report is made from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I anticipate that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry desire that the Senate shall be fully informed. If the Senate does not want the committee to take the course mapped out it will say so, and the committee of course will pursue a different course.

The committee to-day had under consideration the proposition of Mr. Ford in reference to the improvement of the Government power proposition at Muscle Shoals. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee, or at least of all those who were present, and there was more than a quorum present, that in order to properly pass on the important question which we are instructed by the Senate to investigate the committee ought to make a trip to Muscle Shoals to look at the physical conditions and, perhaps, take some evidence there on the ground if it shall be thought necessary so to do. So, in accordance with the direction of the committee, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 238), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or any subcommittee thereof be, and they are hereby, authorized to go to Muscle Shoals, Alabama, for the purpose of taking evidence and making investigation regarding the advisability of the completion of the Government improvement for power purposes at that place, either by the Government itself or by some lessee. There is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $1,000 for the payment of the expenses of said investigation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. As I heard the reading of the resolution it provides that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which is now investigating the proposition involved in the resolution, shall go to Muscle Shoals. Would the Senator have any objection to including amongst the Senators who shall go to Muscle Shoals any other Senator, a member of any other committee, who might desire to go there, for certain features of this question—the dam features, and so forth—have been investigated by some other committees?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I certainly should have no objection to any other Senator going to Muscle Shoals for the purposes of this investigation. I realize that in some respects, perhaps, and as to some features of the matter it will be considered by some other committee than the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as, of course, it will be considered by the Senate generally. Perhaps it is a proposition which is important enough for the Senate itself to go, as all Senators will have to vote on the matter. If the Senate desire to broaden the resolution, there will be no objection by me to that being done, and I think there will be none from any other member of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. That is a matter which the committee itself may consider.

Mr. NORRIS. As to whether it wishes the resolution broadened is a matter which the Senate ought to settle.

Mr. HARRISON. My suggestion was that the committee which is to consider the resolution may amend it, and if it sees fit may make such provision as I have suggested.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly; that may be done.

Mr. SMITH. To what committee has the resolution been referred, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

PROPOSED FEDERAL TAX ON GASOLINE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the chairman of the Tax Investigation Committee of the State of Washington, referring to a telegram from the same source which was printed in the RECORD a few days ago at the request of my colleague [Mr. JONES of Washington]. In the letter the committee referred to state their opposition to the imposition of a Federal tax upon gasoline and object to the invasion of that field of taxation by the Federal Government and insist upon it being left to the action of the States.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF WASHINGTON,
TAX INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE,
Seattle, Wash., February 11, 1922.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Please find inclosed wire confirmation of our telegram dated February 11, copy of which is herewith inclosed.

The Legislature of the State of Washington, at the 1921 session, passed a law directing the governor of the State to make a special survey of the taxation system of the State of Washington with the idea of lessening the tax load borne by real estate in the State, and gave the governor power to appoint a committee or select tax experts to compile a report and present it to the governor not later than the 1st of July. The governor appointed a committee, naming the following persons: D. W. Twohy, of Spokane; Alex. Polson, of Hoquiam; George M. Elliott and Frank D. Oakley, of Tacoma; W. W. Robertson, of Yakima; Peter McGregor, of Hooper; S. B. L. Penrose, of Walla Walla; Robert H. Harlin, of Seattle; and the undersigned, who was elected chairman of the committee.

The committee has held public hearings all over the State and is now engaged in preparing its report. At our meeting on the 30th and 31st of January a like committee from the State of Oregon sat with us in executive session, and among the tax questions that came up was the gasoline tax. The committees of the two States were advised that the Federal Government was contemplating the use of a tax on gasoline for Federal purposes. The committee takes it for granted that you are aware that the States of Washington and Oregon, together with five other States, are now using a gasoline tax levy for the purpose of maintaining and building roads, and that the tax is essentially one belonging to the States for their exclusive use, due primarily to the fact that the roads have to be constructed in a measure to accommodate the use of automobiles, and all the revenue that can be secured from the automobile should remain in the State for the purpose of maintaining the roads over which they run.

The undersigned was directed by the State of Washington Tax Investigation Committee to advise you of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the chairman of this committee be instructed to immediately advise our Representatives in Congress that it is the consensus of opinion in this State that the United States Government should not seek to secure Federal revenue from a tax on gasoline, that the gasoline tax is essentially a State tax, and that our Members in Congress take the necessary steps to see that this field of State taxation be not invaded by the Federal Government.

In making up our report to the governor of this State a paragraph will be devoted to the action of this committee in this connection, and a copy of the foregoing resolution, together with copy of letter to you, will be embodied in the report. The Oregon delegation meeting with us on the dates mentioned above passed a similar resolution, and a similar communication will be in the hands of the congressional Members from Oregon at an early date.

Yours, very truly,

N. ECKSTEIN, Chairman.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR VETERANS OF WORLD WAR.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the RECORD will bear me out, I think, in the statement that I have not transgressed the wise policy of keeping out of the RECORD, generally, editorials and statements from outside sources. I have not asked permission to insert such matters in the RECORD. However, there have been many intemperate statements on both sides of the question in reference to the soldiers' bonus question; not so much in the Senate Chamber, perhaps, as outside of it. In the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune of February 14 is a brief editorial on the subject of "Big business and the soldiers' bonus." I think it is a fair statement, which will be of some value to the country, and I, therefore, ask unanimous consent to have the editorial printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STERLING. I ask the Senator from Ohio to have the editorial read.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to having it read. If the Senator desires to have the editorial read, let it be read in accordance with his suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the editorial.

The reading clerk read the editorial, as follows:

BIG BUSINESS AND THE SOLDIERS' BONUS.

Speaking as the president of the National Association of Manufacturers, John E. Edgerton refers to the so-called soldiers' bonus bill as "this iniquitous measure." He also calls it an insult to the former service men, on the theory that it is a bone tossed to baying dogs by Congress as coward's act in bribery for votes. Inferentially Mr. Edgerton leads public opinion to the conclusion that industries in general have the same contemptuous regard for the soldiers' compensation bill as he has voiced. This is in corroboration of the charge filed by former service men that high finance is fighting the measure in Congress through a potent and persistent lobby.

Economically considered there can be no question that the bonus for the former service men is giving concern to finance, both Federal and general. Adding so large a sum to the already enormous outstanding obligations of the Nation is piling embarrassment upon inconvenience. Safe and sane methods of raising so great a sum on top of present bond issues and tax provisions are not easy of attainment. The further inflation that must follow making available for circulation such a sum along with the other sums already afloat can not but react in ultimate depreciation unless wonderfully well guarded and engineered with exceeding wisdom and excess of discretion. In the circumstances it is reasonable that big business should view with caution at least, if not with some measure of alarm, this contemplated legislation. But there seems small occasion to be mean about it.

There is also something to be said—if the matter is to be continually discussed, derided, and damned as disgraceful and degrading—on the other side of the question. There is even an economic phase to be found there. It can not be denied that save for the service of these men the country would have been in much worse financial funk than is now possible to bonus causes. It may be even reasonably assumed that there would be by this time little American business—conducted as American business. It must be agreed that most of the men who served made decided economic sacrifices. They did not ask this compensation; liberal-minded and appreciative citizens over the country suggested it. Only when the suggestion was derided by men who had made millions while these men sacrificed, and by politicians who oppose all appropriation that isn't connected with pap, did service men speak. They saw other countries conferring bonuses in generous appreciation. To them it seemed a gracious thing that their country do likewise.

It may be that ethically the meager dole that is contemplated to each man will do poor service to some and disservice to others. It is hardly the province of a patriotic people making some small return of favor for patriotism in action to stipulate as its uses or abuses. It is hardly inspiration to instinctive loyalty that this one appropriation of billions has been pilloried as pernicious. While pouring out billions in aid of class appeals at home and credits abroad, millions in subsidy of industries, transportation, labor, agriculture, and whatever else needs inflated assistance, there is this constant haggling over this one act in generous expression of the country's appreciation of service rendered.

That this alone should find itself taboo by interests that would be bankrupt German dependencies but for the service rendered by these men who are now being branded as self-seeking beneficiaries of an iniquitous measure is beyond contempt of the great mass of Americans in all walks of life whose impulse of gratitude was made vocal in the bonus suggestion.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A resolution (S. Res. 236) submitted by Mr. SWANSON on February 13, directing the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to investigate the appointment of postmasters and rural carriers in certain cases.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I understood the arrangement with the Senator from Virginia to have been that this resolution was not to be acted upon until the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], had returned to the city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie on the table.

THE FOUR-POWER TREATY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 237) submitted yesterday by Mr. HITCHCOCK, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, all drafts or forms presented to or considered by the delegates of the United States, the British Empire, Japan, or France in considering the subject of the four-power treaty.

Also, copies of all proceedings, records, negotiations, arguments, debates, discussions, and conversations which occurred between the delegates of the United States, the British Empire, Japan, or France, or any of them, covering the subject of the four-power treaty or the supplementary note which accompanied it or the supplementary agreement relating to it and subsequently signed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask leave to modify the resolution by inserting on line 7, after the word "records," the words "or minutes of," so that the resolution will read:

Also, copies of all proceedings, records, or minutes of negotiations, arguments, debates, discussions and conversations which occurred between the delegates of the United States, the British Empire, Japan, or France—

And so on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed modification will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, after the word "records," it is proposed to insert the words "or minutes of."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will offer no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I shall offer no objection to the adoption of the resolution. I think it is only fair to say, however, that many things are asked for in the resolution in the way of records of conversations, and so forth, that have no existence as written documents; but I make no objection to asking for whatever there may be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken in his assumption, because it would be an amazing thing that this four-power treaty, which is recognized by the President himself as being the outstanding compact in connection with peace in the Pacific and which up to the present time has occupied practically all of the debate and the discussion, should have been concluded without similar records, minutes, and memoranda to those which were deemed necessary in the consideration of the much less important treaty relating to China.

We have here a very complete record of minutes, of conversation, debates, and discussions relating to the Chinese treaty and relating to the disarmament compact; but when it comes to this great treaty, the so-called four-power treaty in the Pacific, which is really the center of the whole thing and is deemed to be, as some have asserted, the keystone to the arch, it would be amazing to think that similar records were not preserved. At least this resolution when sent to the President will develop the exact situation. I trust it will be productive in having sent to the Senate such drafts and forms of the proposed treaty as will throw some light on a number of debatable questions involved in the construction of the treaty. I am glad the Senator from Massachusetts makes no opposition to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I presume there will be no record vote on the resolution, and therefore I wish to state that I am opposed to it. If the American representatives at the conference could not have conversations with the representatives of other countries or between themselves, without having a stenographer following them around, I think they would not have gotten anywhere and would not have been able to consummate an agreement. There is, however, a record. The Senator from Massachusetts made a speech about the treaty to the full conference when it was adopted. As I said in the beginning, I am opposed to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska as modified.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I took the other step in order to obtain a quicker result. I suppose it will be no breach of propriety for me to remind the Senator that the Committee on Foreign Relations discussed it to a very considerable extent this morning, and that the outcome of that discussion was that the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, assented to the adoption of the resolution with the modifications which I have made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I did not know of any agreement between the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Massachusetts, nor would any agreement of that sort, of course, bind me.

In the first place, I understand that a lot of things are called for in the resolution that do not exist. In the second place, even if they did exist I should be opposed to the resolution, because I think that it is an expression of a bad public policy. I do not believe in making the Executive of this Nation give every parlor, every preliminary conversation or exchange of notes leading up to an agreement with the other nations of the earth, or with any of them; and therefore I have made the suggestion that the matter go to the Foreign Relations Committee.

It is true that the Foreign Relations Committee discussed this resolution at some length this morning. It is also true that it did not vote upon it and has taken no action, and I think it is a matter of sufficient importance to justify a delay at least to that extent. I do not believe, myself, that the United States Government is without power to enter into binding treaties with the other nations of the earth whenever the President and the Senate agree to them; and I believe that those treaties are as binding upon all branches of the Government as any other law is or can be.

If the Senator will not suggest that the resolution be sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I shall move it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi let me interrupt him a minute? I just want to make a suggestion, if he will permit me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the discussion in reference to the four-power treaty really was not so much a discussion of the four-power treaty as it was a discussion of something else, namely, the English-Japanese alliance. It was undoubtedly the desire of the American delegation, from the time it took up the treaty for the reduction of naval armaments, to secure the cancellation of the English-Japanese alliance. That was not a question that could be openly discussed in the conference—necessarily so—because it was an existing treaty between two foreign countries, in which we were not involved. Whatever discussion there was in reference to the matter had to be by private conversation and suggestion, because we could not say publicly to either Japan or Great Britain, "We request you to cancel an existing treaty." The matter could not be approached in that way, and therefore what occurred consisted entirely of private suggestions. It developed in those conversations that the English-Japanese alliance could not be canceled without something being put in its place; and then the suggestion came that if the four powers participating in this treaty would enter into an understanding that they would respect the rights of each other in the territory named in the treaty, it could bring about the cancellation of the English-Japanese alliance.

When it was agreed that the powers would respect the rights of each other in this territory, the balance of the four-power treaty was merely the work of a draftsman in the State Department. That was all there was to it. That is my recollection of it. I was not the leading negotiator in the matter. The whole matter was discussed from time to time before the American delegation; but the chairman of the American delegation, Secretary Hughes, naturally presented our viewpoint to the other three powers. It was not a matter that was discussed either in the committee on armaments or in the committee on Far Eastern questions of the conference or in the plenary session of the conference, except when the Senator from Massachusetts presented the treaty; so that really these private discussions or talks, I am sure, could not be kept up with. I did not participate in them to any large extent myself, but I would not trust myself to try to repeat the various conversations that occurred, because I might misquote them. They had not reached the point where they were definite.

The only definite point that was reached was when the American delegation found that by entering into a four-power treaty to respect the rights of these several powers in the territory of the waters of the Pacific the other treaty could be canceled; and from that time it was a mere question of a draftsman to put the matter in form.

So I do not think there is any information about this matter that I know of that has not been laid before the Senate; but, as one of the delegates representing the United States, I am very anxious that nothing in connection with this matter shall be withheld, whether it is proper to be called for or not. I agree with what the Senator said; we have no right to call on the Executive for private conversations. That is not within the rule. I do not know of any information that can be given, but there may be some. The Secretary of State is absent from the country now on a vacation. He will be back in a couple of weeks. There may be something that he could lay before the Senate for its information that I do not know about, and I think it is very important that we should give the Senate every opportunity to know anything that occurred. Therefore, agreeing with the Senator from Mississippi that this is not in order, because it is not, and it is not proper to ask for conversations that are not of record, I hope he will let the resolution go through, so that if there is anything there the Senate may have the benefit of it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator for a moment.

Mr. POMERENE. My understanding was that there were perhaps several drafts of this treaty. If so, they might be of assistance to Members of the Senate or members of the committee in coming to a conclusion in regard to the interpretation of certain of this language. For that reason, if for no other, it might be of very great value to us to have those documents, if there are such.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator, as to what the draftsmen did who prepared the technical form of the treaty, that they are mere agents of the Government, clerks in the department. I do not know how many drafts they may have made. So far as my recollection is concerned, there was only one draft that originally came before the American delegation, and I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that is not correct. As far as the American delegation is concerned, the only draft we had was the draft that is now before the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. That is the only draft we had at all. I will say, as I said in the committee—the Senator may remember it—that before there were any meetings of the heads of delegations in regard to it I offered a draft which I handed to the Secretary of State.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have not yet made the motion that I said I would make, and I want to make it now. I move that this resolution be sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I trust the motion of the Senator from Mississippi will not prevail. The resolution is now completed. It is satisfactory to the leader upon the Republican side. I take it that it is substantially satisfactory to the leader upon the Democratic side. If it can be at once passed with the least possible delay, such information as is forthcoming can be given to the Senate.

I want to take this occasion to congratulate the leader upon the Republican side and the leader upon the Democratic side upon their attitude respecting this resolution and upon their expressed desire that all the information that may be obtainable shall be obtained not only for the Foreign Relations Committee but for the Senate and for the people of the United States as well.

When the proposal for a League of Nations was pending before the Foreign Relations Committee I had the honor to present a resolution calling in rather sweeping language for all the data that existed concerning the league. I thought then that the Foreign Relations Committee, the Senate, and the people of the United States were entitled to all the information that might be obtained which dealt with their future in any degree. I thought that under the Democratic administration; I think it, sir, under the Republican administration; and in the case of a treaty of such importance as I view the new quadruple alliance, or the four-power treaty, or however you may desire to designate it, I believe that every scrap of information that can be legitimately given ought to be readily accorded, and I am sure that it will be readily accorded.

Mr. President, I spent four hours night before last in going through what was handed us as the minutes of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. I went through it, keeping in mind what the President had said on the day that these minutes were presented to us and having very vividly before me this language:

Accompanying the treaties I bring to you the complete minutes of both plenary sessions and committee meetings and a copy of the official report made to me by the American delegation to the conference. Both the complete minutes and the official report of the American delegation are new accompaniments to the Executive report of a treaty or treaties, but they are fitting testimonials to that open and simpler diplomacy for which the world has asked and the practice of which contributed largely to the success of the conference so recently adjourned.

I know, therefore, because of those utterances by the President, how very gladly he will welcome the resolution that is presented to-day, for, Mr. President, after four hours of perusal of the minutes that were submitted to us day before yesterday I am unable to find within 900 pages thus submitted a single word, a single line, a single syllable relating to the most important treaty that has been presented to us in years, save and except the report of the American delegation to the President of the United States and the address of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] upon the presentation of that treaty.

Mr. President, of course it seems to me that there must be in existence some data, some memoranda, some minutes, some information upon this four-power treaty. If there is any information, any data, any memoranda, I want it, and the Foreign Relations Committee ought to want it, and the Senate of the United States ought to want it, and the people of the United States are entitled to it.

Mr. President, because of the utterances of the President, because there is in this volume nothing of the sort referred to, and because of the right of the Senate and the Foreign Relations Committee and the people to the information, I trust that the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska will be adopted.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in regard to the fact that the Senator from California found nothing in the minutes relating to the four-power treaty, I merely wish to say that it is because, as the Senator from Alabama has already explained, the negotiations were conducted, so far as I am aware, entirely by conversations. The matter was left in the hands of the heads of delegations. I think it was entirely dealt with by conversations, for the reason which the Senator from Alabama has explained. I know of no records or minutes of those conversations, and I never heard of any minutes of them.

I am ready to make everything public that I know of or have any control over, as is my colleague, the Senator from Alabama, and so, I am sure, is the whole American delegation; but it is impossible to repeat from memory conversations; and if no conversations are to be allowed unless they are taken down in shorthand in the presence of witnesses, there will be very few negotiations ever brought to a conclusion between any nations. There must be many informal conversations. It is impossible to negotiate without them. I need not repeat the reasons which the Senator from Alabama has given as to why this particular negotiation was conducted in that way.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator from Nebraska modified his resolution so as to include the records?

Mr. LODGE. He has, I understand, made that change, and I have no objection to its being adopted with that change made; but there was no attempt at secrecy whatever. To give an illustration, which I think will make the matter clear, the Senator from Alabama and I, two members of the delegation, both happening to be Senators, have had many conversations, besides those which were held by the American delegation as a whole, which were constant and of which no records were kept. Was it necessary or to be expected that we should have a stenographer present? Could we not discuss the very important business in which we were engaged without being guilty of secrecy unless we had it taken down and published? It seems to me the question answers itself.

The result of the conversations and negotiations which occurred among the heads of the delegations, if you choose to dignify them by that name, is the treaty which has already been laid before the Senate, and everything relating to it which either the Senator from Alabama or I can tell the Senate will be told by us, of course. We have nothing to conceal, and nobody has, but we can not produce the minutes of conversations where no minutes were taken.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not look upon this as an implication that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] or the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] are attempting or intending to conceal anything, but there is some controversy as to the intent of those who wrote the treaty, and as to its meaning. I take it, if there are any records or anything which would throw light upon that subject, no one has any objection to our having them, and I understand the Senator from Massachusetts is perfectly willing that we shall have them.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. BORAH. So I do not understand what the controversy is about, because, of course, if there are no records of any conversations, we can not get them, and we are not asking for them. We are not asking for anything which does not exist, but the Secretary of State will know very readily what does exist, and he will send what does exist or what he thinks we ought to have out of that which exists.

Mr. LODGE. There is no difference of interpretation among those who signed the treaty, so far as I am aware.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, this resolution is drawn so as to be as nearly innocuous as a resolution can be. It could not by any possibility be made more considerate or conservative. It asks the President to send to us these records in case he does not deem it incompatible with the public interest. It asks for copies of all proceedings. It asks for drafts of this particular treaty, and we know that there were a number of drafts made, and they are probably on file in the office of the Secretary of State. Those drafts will in all probability throw light upon the discussions which may not have been recorded. They certainly will throw light on the meaning of the language used and upon the positions taken by the different Governments.

I may be entirely wrong in thinking that there are as many records in existence as I have been told there are. The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Alabama are neither of them in a position to speak, because they both confess that they were not present at these negotiations. In fact, it is a most remarkable condition that the two representatives of the Senate upon the delegation appear to have little or no personal knowledge of the conversations had and the negotiations which resulted in the formation of this treaty.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not mean to give an entirely wrong impression. The matter of this treaty was fully discussed in the American delegation before anything was done or any conversations were held. The negotiations, if you can call them so, were carried on between the heads of delegations, to whom it was referred, and those negotiations were fully reported to the American delegation, and I assume they were fully reported to the delegation of the British Empire, the delegation of Japan, and the delegation of France, who were each represented in the conversations. Mr. Root was a third member of the American delegation, and we all occupied precisely the same position; we trusted to Mr. Hughes, the head of the delegation, to meet with the heads of the other delegations. Nothing whatever was kept from us at any stage of the negotiations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that he was not present at the time these negotiations were held with the other delegations.

Mr. LODGE. I was not. I have said again and again that the negotiation with the other powers was carried on by the head of the delegations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Hughes, Mr. Balfour, Baron Kato, and Mr. Viviani met and negotiated, or had conversations, individually or collectively. Whatever they did was reported to us by Mr. Hughes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator to say that this particular treaty was referred to the heads of the delegations. They therefore constituted a committee, and I am unable to understand the President's language, in the light of the statement now made, that there are no records or no reports from that committee. When the President addressed the Senate on Friday last he said:

Accompanying the treaties I bring to you the complete minutes of both plenary sessions and committee meetings, and a copy of the official report made to me by the American delegation to the conference. Both the complete minutes and the official report of the American delegation are new accompaniments to the Executive report of a treaty or treaties, but they are fitting testimonials to that open and simpler diplomacy for which the world has asked, and the practice of which contributed largely to the success of the conference so recently adjourned. I trust they will facilitate that ample and helpful understanding which is desirable in the Senate, and reflect that understanding which was the keynote of the conference itself.

When I heard the President of the United States say that the minutes of the conference and the minutes of the committees would help the Senate in interpreting these treaties, like the Senator from California and other Senators, I assumed that we would have the minutes of the committee that considered this particular treaty, and I was perfectly amazed, as other Senators have been, in going through this record, to find that there is not a scrap of paper giving any minutes whatever of the meetings of the heads of the various delegations who constituted the committee which considered this particular treaty.

Not only that, Mr. President, but I have investigated a little further, and I find myself a little in the position of a boy from the country who has been completely taken into camp. I find that there were no communiqués issued to the press during the time the heads of the delegations were negotiating this treaty. The Japanese and the Chinese met, I think, some thirty-six times in considering their treaty of adjustment, and after each meeting communiqués were issued to the press as to the progress of the negotiations. Newspaper men tell me that there was not a single communiqué issued to the press of the United States on this important treaty.

That is not all. When I come to look at the agenda of the conference, I find there is no mention of the four-power treaty, or anything like it, in the agenda, and it is even confessed by the President of the United States that this four-power treaty was not within the agenda.

I think we ought to have some information of the meetings of the four men who represented the four countries—the Secretary of State, representing the United States; Baron Kato, representing Japan; Mr. Balfour, representing Great Britain; and, I presume, M. Viviani, representing France, although he was not the head of the delegation all the time.

Mr. LODGE. He was the head of the delegation after M. Briand left.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Those four constituted the committee, they framed this treaty, and they reported it to the others. They had undoubtedly various forms before them, one form, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, drawn by himself, and probably forms drawn by the other representatives on that committee. We all know that the creation of the four-power treaty had for its chief purpose the dissolution of the treaty between Japan and England, and we know that the British Government was perhaps more anxious to have that treaty abrogated than any other power. It had been the subject of discussion for some six months when the representatives of the British Empire met. There were certain representatives of the British Empire here very anxious to have that treaty abrogated, and they could only get it abrogated by getting the four-power treaty. So it is quite possible there were other forms presented at that time.

Under these circumstances I do not see why we should not have this information. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for consenting to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the Senate might as well know just what the exact facts were. There were four powers concerned in this treaty. The matter was not before the conference. The Senator from Alabama has stated already why we did not bring the treaties between Japan and England before the conference. It simply could not be done. A committee of the conference did not draft this treaty. The other committees, of which we have the minutes, were regularly appointed committees of the conference, and we have a full report of all that happened in their meetings.

This treaty was negotiated by the heads of the four delegations as the simplest way of reaching a result in the matter which some of us at least considered of very great importance, the termination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. It was done in that way, in a perfectly natural way. It was no formal committee. The heads of the delegations met, instead of the full delegations, and without any intention of secrecy about it. Of course, what each delegation chose to give out itself concerned each delegation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the matter before the Senate at present is the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Although the resolution is not at present before the committee, the committee had an informal discussion of it this morning in the committee meeting. I am perfectly satisfied from the feeling which has been expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from California, that they would like to have the resolution passed, and my own feeling about it, and my knowledge of the feeling of the other members of the committee, is that it would be a useless performance to refer the resolution to the Foreign Relations Committee. It would simply result in useless delay. I think the committee would no doubt report it.

The precise terms of the resolution are not of great importance, in my opinion, because the resolution requests the President to furnish the information therein specified, if not incompatible with the public interest. I think there are some requests in the resolution with which it would be impossible for the President to comply, and he will doubtless say so. I have not the slightest desire to trench upon the power of the Executive to negotiate treaties in the fullest manner according to his own notion of the proprieties and the objects to be achieved.

The conversations and intimate expressions of opinion among the delegates of different countries, involving their own domestic and political situation, especially questions of national defense, I can realize are of such a delicate nature that if every word that one of the plenipotentiaries said to another of a different nation were to be dragged out and discussed before the whole world, it would operate as a serious restriction upon that frank interchange of sentiment between representatives of different nations which must be essential to a meeting of the minds of the parties, especially where great concessions and sacrifices are asked of the negotiating parties. So I do not expect that the President, in laying this matter before the Senate or in replying to the resolution, would feel like revealing everything that may have come into the minds of the negotiators or of himself.

But, Mr. President, I think, if there are various drafts of proposed treaties, in relation to the subject matter covered by the four-power treaty, which were formally submitted to the heads of the delegations of the four participating powers and which were debated and considered and amended and substitutes offered for them, and if the President does not think it incompatible with the public interest, they might be of interest to the Committee on Foreign Relations, to the Senate, and to the country. But if the President thinks there is any reason why it should not be done he can say so. The whole matter is in his hands and I have no doubt he will, of course, reply courteously, and his desire will be to give us all the information which can be given out without prejudice to the best interests of the country.

As I said, I recognize, and no man more freely concedes, the exclusive right of the President to keep in his own possession the preliminary proceedings involved in the negotiation of a treaty, if he so desires. When I say that, I do not mean that I deny the propriety of the Senate expressing, as it did in the League of Nations contest, its view of what it would like to have or what it would like to have the President do along the lines of negotiation. It has been repeatedly done. It was done when the Senate, after President Wilson had summoned the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House in conference upon the draft of the so-called Covenant of the League of Nations, which he brought with him from Paris when he first returned after the Versailles conference over there. The committee and the Senators who had read the proposed covenant of the League of Nations took it upon themselves, and I think with perfect propriety, to express their opinion that the League of Nations in the form as it then existed should not be ratified by the Senate, and they thought the better way was for President Wilson to make the treaty of peace proper as soon as possible and then attempt to form any sort of League of Nations afterwards, if it could be done.

I do not think that the Senate was beyond its proper prerogatives. I think it was a kindly act, if the Senate could not agree to what the President had already thought was a proper form for the League of Nations, for the Senate to advise him before it was too late to modify it.

I know we have been attacked and reproached by some for venturing to have any opinion about the matter after the President had expressly requested us to come to the White House and give him our opinion. I never took that view of it, but I admit that the President is not obliged to give any consideration whatever to the views of the Senate during the process of negotiations. After the negotiation is finished and the President lays the treaty before the Senate, of course, the Senate should exercise its own judgment about the propriety and desirability of ratifying the treaty, perfectly free and untrammelled. If it can not do it, then the constitutional provision that the Senate should advise and consent to a proposed treaty becomes a mere idle form.

The President can always, when he has negotiated a treaty, come to the Senate and say, "Take this treaty just as I have drawn it or else the country will be dishonored," or something of that kind. But if the Senate could be influenced by that sort of appeal, the Constitution might just as well be revised and provide that the President can make treaties for the United States without the advice and consent of anybody. No one claims that that would be desirable.

As I said, I do not think any useful purpose will be served by referring the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hope the resolution will be adopted. If I had drawn it, I think I would not have included so many specific topics of information, but I am perfectly certain that the President will not give us any more information as to the preliminaries of negotiations than he thinks is compatible with the public interest, and, therefore, I think the resolution is a harmless one.

It is an entirely different case, in my opinion, from the request of the Senate for such information as ex-President Wilson may have had in his possession with reference to the Versailles conference, because the President in that case had gone to a foreign country to negotiate a treaty, whereas the delegates from foreign countries have come to Washington, have come to our country; and, secondly, because ex-President Wilson advised the Congress before he went abroad that he would keep us intimately acquainted with everything he did.

In view of the fact that many of the minutes of the Versailles conference are now coming to light for the first time in newspaper and magazine articles out of the steel box of ex-President Wilson, I do not think that is consistent with the theory that it would have done any harm for that information to be given then to the Senate of the United States, whose constitutional function it was to have information enough to act intelligently upon the ratification of the treaty of Versailles. I do not believe the minutes should have been withheld from the Senate if they are open to publication now for commercial purposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall not enter into any defense of ex-President Wilson. He is his own defense and as history records more and more what he has done and what he has stood for, history will become his defense.

It is evident, with the consortium existing between the heads of the two sides of the Chamber, that my motion to send the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations will be very much defeated, but there are a few things concerning which I have very definite ideas and one of them is upon the character of the treaty-making power of the United States Government. I have always regretted that our forefathers required two-thirds of the Senate in order to ratify a treaty. However, that provision is in the Constitution; that requirement exists.

But there is a line of clear demarcation between the Executive power and the Executive rights, and the Senate power and the Senate rights. The Executive negotiates a treaty, and in negotiating the treaty I believe it is bad policy to have any legislative Paul prying into conversations and pour parlers leading up to results. Treaties are just like agreements and bargains between individuals before entering into a contract. It is very natural that when people sit around a table, each one has a prejudgment which is modified and in some cases absolutely surrendered after argument. So far from it doing any good to bring up all these preliminary conversations as steps toward an adjustment, it might do a great deal of harm, and in the past in several cases has done a great deal of harm. Let the Executive go ahead and negotiate and then let the Senate sit in judgment upon the result with every possible information concerning the questions to be determined and concerning the results recommended to the Senate.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] can go no further than I in standing for the right of free judgment upon the part of the Senate in determining whether it shall ratify or shall decline to ratify the result of an Executive negotiation. That is not all. I believe and have believed for a long time that, except for the long practice which started soon after we became a Nation and has continued down to now, the Senate ought either to ratify or reject a treaty. I believe the power which it has assumed of suggesting amendments and so-called reservations is a usurpation, but it is a usurpation that has been fixed by years of practice and there is no use talking about it now.

Knowing beforehand that my motion that the resolution should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which was discussing it in committee meeting this morning and whose chairman requested that we meet again at half past 2 for the purpose of continuing the discussion, will be defeated, I am going to withdraw the motion and content myself with simply voting against the passage of the resolution and of any future resolution like it. I never have voted for one, and I never shall, no matter which President or which party is in power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HUTCHCOCK] as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the injunction of secrecy with reference to the treaty with Japan concerning the Island of Yap may be removed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type two articles written by Hon. David Jayne Hill, published on December 17 and December 22, 1921, relating to the four-power treaty.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Tribune, Dec. 17, 1921.]

DOES THE FOUR-POWER TREATY MASK A MILITARY ALLIANCE?
(By David Jayne Hill.)

Objections offered in the Senate and elsewhere to the four-power treaty negotiated and signed at Washington assume that there is involved in it, if not in its language, at least in its implications, a pledge in certain contingencies to resort to war for the protection of the rights of the signatories against the aggression of any other power.

In presenting the treaty to the conference for its approval at the fourth plenary session, Senator LODGE stated:

There is no provision for the use of force to carry out any of the terms of the agreement, and no military or naval sanction lurks anywhere in the background or under cover of these plain and direct clauses.

It is certain, therefore, that anything even approaching a pledge, in any circumstances, to resort to war was not intended to be included or involved in this treaty. The categorical statement to the contrary was made by Senator LODGE not as a personal opinion, or the interpretation of the American negotiators alone, but as the understanding of all who had participated in the negotiations; for he spoke in the name of all the representatives of the powers who had made the agreement which he was delegated by them to present to the full conference. His statement was a part of the report and became a part of the record of the proceedings. No contrary interpretation was expressed at the time or since by any of the plenipotentiaries who framed the treaty or who voted upon its adoption. Acceptance was unanimous and publicly committed all to the interpretation which the reporter gave in presenting the treaty.

It appears, therefore, almost superfluous to take notice of the contrary opinion that the treaty does by implication involve a resort to war in certain circumstances that may arise. It is, of course, undeniable that an aggression might occur on the part of some other power upon the rights of the signatories of this treaty that would call for and fully justify military action by the signatory powers jointly or separately. Such an occasion might even arise from the aggression of a power not named in the treaty upon some other power not named in the treaty, and the United States might decide at such a time to employ its Navy and its Army to repress the aggressor. This it might do without any treaty, as it did in entering upon the war with Germany. It is incredible that even if the United States had not been attacked by Germany this country would have refrained from military intervention if in the course of the recent war the Imperial German Government had invaded Canada and taken possession of its soil. It is, therefore, sophistical for anyone to say that conditions might arise in the Pacific Ocean which, if this treaty were ratified, would involve this Nation in war, and therefore it should not be ratified. It is impossible for human foresight to know what conditions may yet arise in that ocean which would render it necessary for the United States to employ its Army and Navy there or elsewhere, either with a treaty or without it.

The chief matter deserving of consideration in connection with the ratification of this treaty is the effect of the treaty upon war and peace in the Pacific. Admittedly its terms contain no engagement in any conditions to use armed force. On the contrary, they provide for mutual respect by the signatories for one another's rights and for the adjustment by joint conference of controversies that may arise between them. They open a pathway to mutual understanding and reciprocal confidence. And since these four signatories are the chief powers in the Pacific Ocean whose rights may be, or appear to be, in conflict, the agreement removes at one stroke the major probabilities of war. This is the clear purport of article 1.

As regards the "aggressive action of any other power," with which article 2 is concerned, the exposure to such danger as prevailed when the Anglo-Japanese alliance was first formed does not now exist. Outside the four powers signatory to this treaty there are no powers in the Pacific Ocean that can be classed as naval powers, and it is only naval powers that require to be taken into account so far as the purposes of this treaty are concerned. The reference to possible "aggressive action by any other power" is merely subsidiary to the primary idea of the treaty, and is intended to answer the question, What would happen if some other power should fail to respect the rights which the signatories of the treaty agree to respect?

The answer is simple and direct. The four powers agree that they would "communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly and separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation."

It is not possible to extort from this agreement a pledge to anything beyond an "understanding" in which all freely participate. There can be no compulsion to agree. It is true that measures to meet the exigencies of the particular situation are the subject of this understanding, but there is no implication of warlike measures. It has been authoritatively stated that "no military or naval sanction lurks anywhere in the background or under cover of these plain and direct clauses." If war should follow, it would have to grow out of the "particular situation," and not out of the obligations of the treaty; and if there were in the situation good reasons for warlike action, they would exist and be equally effective if there were no treaty.

There is, however, in this agreement provision for avoiding armed conflict in case of aggression by another power which would not be operative if the treaty did not exist. It has been generally conceded that if there had been a full and frank discussion in a meeting of the chief European powers when the Austrian ultimatum was sent to Serbia in 1914 there would probably have been no war. A course could have been devised that would have given satisfaction to Austria and would have been just to Serbia. So, in case of any act of aggression in the Pacific Ocean committed by a power not named in the treaty as well as by one of the signatory powers, if the powers fully and frankly communicated with one another in order to arrive at an understanding, an incident which without this provision would very certainly lead to war might be treated in a manner that would avoid a serious conflict.

A moment's consideration of the kind of conflict likely to arise in the Pacific Ocean over insular possessions and dominions gives emphasis to the foregoing statement. Nothing is more improbable in those possessions and dominions than an organized plan of conquest by some power other than the four signatories of the treaty, the appearance of some formidable armada, or any deliberate plan of invasion. If any act of aggression is committed, it is likely to be some real or imaginary insult to a flag, some arrest or punishment of sailors, or some discrimination against the rights of persons that might lead to deeds of violence. From such a spark national passions might be kindled into a flame which would not be extinguished except by a full and frank communication of the facts to the calm judgment of friendly powers. Article 2 of this treaty provides for this, and it is, apparently, to meet just such exigencies that it is intended.

It has been alleged that it is impossible for these four powers to meet otherwise than as armed powers; and, therefore, their decisions would necessarily be based on the menace or the exercise of force, which would render them arbitrary if not unjust. It has been further represented that, if these powers were devoid of material effectiveness, if they were not armed powers, in brief if they were totally disarmed, then such an agreement to communicate, to meet, to discuss, and to come to an understanding would be inoffensive and unobjectionable.

It requires but little reflection to realize how strained and ill-founded these representations are.

What ground is there for assuming that armed powers can not meet and discuss controversies without the use of arms? They have met and discussed the most delicate questions in the present conference without the use or the menace of force; and, having explicitly excluded a resort to force from the purposes of this treaty, it would be a violation of the treaty to base any decision to which a future conference of the powers under this treaty might arrive upon armed force. It is a part of the agreement in this treaty that arms are to be left outside the council chamber.

As for the alleged superior moral status of totally disarmed nations, it should be evident to every intelligent citizen how visionary such a conception is. It is not only impossible to realize it as a question of fact, but it would be a complete abandonment of the defense of right against wrong. It may be safely asserted that this treaty will never be repudiated on the ground that only the totally disarmed are fit to make a treaty.

The question has been asked, Even supposing that there is in this treaty no intention to use armed force, are not the high contracting powers under a moral obligation to resort to it in case the particular situation is such that it is rendered necessary to the accomplishment of the purpose of the treaty, namely, the protection of the rights of the contractants? And, if so, is this not a treaty of alliance?

If this treaty promised a definite act, undoubtedly that act would have to be performed, cost what it might. If it were a pledge to come to the assistance of a particular power in case it were at war, and to conduct the war in common, as in the case of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which it terminates, then there would be a moral obligation to fulfill the contract. If it promised to preserve the territorial integrity and the political independence of all the signatories, as in the case in article 10 of the covenant of the League of Nations, then clearly it would be an alliance. But there is in this treaty no obligation, expressed or implied, that goes beyond the pledge to endeavor to arrive at an understanding. The convocation of the powers in a given emergency is simply for the purpose of arriving at an understanding. If one or more powers should demand military action, another might under the terms of the treaty justly decline to participate in it, unless the case were such that without any treaty a moral obligation to participate would be evident. In brief, whatever moral obligation there might be would not rest upon the treaty but upon the particular situation wholly independent of the treaty. It is of the highest importance that now, before ratification, this question should be placed beyond all doubt or future controversy. This treaty is not to be construed as implying an undertaking, even of a moral kind, to engage in war with any power for any cause. If any signatory of this treaty regards the powers as morally pledged to war, this should be asserted by it now, or this interpretation should be hereafter debarred.

This treaty is a compact to provide for procedure by mutual understanding. It is not a pledge of any definite action, but an agreement to seek a peaceful solution in any situation that may arise. There is no obligation to apply any measures unless they are agreed to at the time when they are to be applied. Joint action is in no case obligatory. Separate action is distinctly provided for, which signifies that each power may take the course it decides to take in each particular situation, and the steps it can take may vary according to the constitutional limitations of the different powers. In the case of the United States, it is well understood war can not be undertaken except by an act of Congress; and it would, therefore, be a false interpretation of this treaty to pretend that it can be intended to pledge military aid in any circumstances whatever. If it has that effect as between the other powers, which it is distinctly declared not to have in any case, it can not be pretended that there can be a moral obligation on the part of any Executive to violate the Constitution of the United States. Without committing the United States to war, this treaty pledges all the signatories under article 1 to respect the rights of the United States, and in case of any controversy in which those rights are in dispute, not to resort to arms without an effort to adjust the difference in a joint conference of the four powers signatory of the treaty where the United States would be represented. The obligation is undertaken, reciprocally, to respect the rights of the other signatories in like manner, but only in each case so far as they relate to "insular possessions or insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean." Any or all of the four powers might be engaged in war with other powers, or with one another, beyond these defined limits without bringing into operation any provision of this treaty. It is, therefore, not in any sense an alliance; it is not even an entente, except in the sense of general friendliness, beyond the circumscribed area to which its terms apply. What gives it great value is that it shows locally and concretely what might be done in a broader field if the nations were in agreement.

The really vital questions connected with the negotiations now proceeding at Washington are not involved in the terms of this treaty, except as it covers the nature and extent of the "rights" of the United States and other powers in the Pacific Ocean. What these are it does not define. They will be just what the status quo shows that they are when the negotiations are concluded, and we therefore await that indication with the deepest interest.

[From the New York Tribune, Dec. 22, 1921.]
THE POSITION OF JAPAN IN THE FOUR-POWER TREATY.
(By David Jayne Hill.)

"The misleading character of some of the comments on the four-power treaty between the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan, if they are not corrected, is likely to create confusion in the mind of the citizen who accepts without examination dogmatic statements upon this subject.

"The engagement of the United States under this treaty, it is alleged, is not merely to maintain peace with Japan by mutual respect for the rights of the two countries in their insular possessions, but in an exceptional manner binds the United States, in case of an attack upon Japan by any other country, to send troops and ships for her support. No such engagement, on the other hand, binds Japan with reference to an attack upon the United States.

"This astonishing conclusion is based on an argument that may be stated in the following manner:

"Article 2 of the treaty provides for joint action in case 'the rights of the powers in their insular possessions and insular dominions in the Pacific Ocean' are threatened with aggression, but does not apply to any other territory.

"The Japanese Empire consists of insular possessions in the Pacific Ocean.

"Therefore the Japanese Empire has the benefit of the provisions of article 2, which can not be claimed for the home territory of any other signatory of the treaty.

"No one, I presume, would dispute the logical perfection of this syllogism, assuming the correctness of the premises.

"The first premise, which defines and limits the scope of article 2, can not be disputed. Nor can it be denied that the homeland of the Japanese Empire consists of an archipelago in the Pacific Ocean.

"The defects of the argument for the conclusion that the United States is under obligation by the treaty to defend Japan with troops and ships if threatened by the aggressive action of any other power are, however, evident. The less vital defect is the assumption that Japan, on account of her insular character, has an exceptional and a favored position in the treaty. The second and completely destructive element in the argument is that article 2 imposes any obligations involving the use of troops and ships.

"There is, in fact, nothing in the treaty that differentiates Japan to her special advantage as a signatory from the other powers. The fact that she is insular and in the Pacific gives her a deep interest in peace in that ocean, but has not the slightest bearing upon her obligations to others or their obligations to her in any important sense.

"There is, no doubt, opportunity for an academic discussion over the difference between a 'possessor' and a 'possession.' One may say that if Japan is a 'possessor' she can not at the same time and in the same relation be a 'possession.' One ingenious commentator has attempted to solve the problem by the brilliant observation that because His Majesty the Emperor of Japan is personally named in the treaty as the source from which the Japanese plenipotentiaries derive their authority, Japan may be regarded as His Majesty's 'insular possession.' The same reasoning would make the President of the United States the personal possessor of islands in the Pacific.

"If it were Great Britain that were in question, and a treaty had been signed regarding 'insular possessions in the Atlantic Ocean,' it is probable that Great Britain herself, although both an insular and an Atlantic power, would be classed as an 'insular possession'?

"But in truth a debate on this subject would be as unprofitable as it is unnecessary. The delegates who framed the treaty are understood to hold that it was intended to consider Japan as belonging to the category of 'insular possessions and insular dominions' in so far as the effect of article 2 of the treaty is concerned. Only Japan herself is now said to feel inclined to a different opinion, for the classification would seem to place her in the category of less self-reliant insular groups and to rank her as a quasi protectorate of the other powers. It is possible, therefore, that, at Japan's own request, her insular character will not be emphasized and the interpretation officially given may be officially changed.

"The truth is that, materially, Japan has nothing to lose by being regarded as a 'possessor' rather than as a 'possession.' A dispassionate examination of the terms of the treaty will establish this statement.

"It can not, of course, be held that article 1 of the treaty involves any of the qualities of an alliance, military or non-military, or that it creates any obligation having relation to protection or partnership as respects other powers. It is essentially an ordinance of self-denial on the part of all the signatories and it is nothing more. They agree to 'respect' one another's rights, for that is the evident meaning of the less precise expression 'their rights.' If they keep this pledge, there will be no war between them; at least, there will be none until questions of right that can not be settled by diplomacy have been considered in joint conference, which is a very satisfactory guaranty that armed conflicts between them will be avoided.

"It is important not to lose sight of the fact that the whole scope of this treaty is limited to 'rights in relation to insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean.' It is not an agreement covering the territory of the signatory powers in their totality or in relation to anything beyond the limits specified. Any of these countries might be at war elsewhere, even with one another, without calling into operation the obligations of this treaty, so long as rights in the Pacific were not affected. If any of these countries were at war, either with one another or with other countries, it is improbable that any of them would wish to complicate the situation by disturbing their relations with other powers in the Pacific with which they were at peace; and it would be impossible for them to do so unless they were possessed of great naval strength. It is evident also that victory in the Pacific would not be likely to be worth its cost to any European power that could hope to gain it. The danger, therefore, of European quarrels being transferred to the Pacific Ocean if this treaty is concluded is very slight. In effect, article 1 is virtually the whole of the treaty and dedicates the Pacific to peace by understanding.

"It is, however, toward article 2 that hostile criticism is mainly directed, and it is upon the slender engagement which is there undertaken that the denunciation of the treaty as a military alliance wholly depends.

"If said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other power, a certain prescribed course is to be pursued. If that course were meant in any case to be war, the treaty should plainly say so. It says nothing of the kind. The Anglo-Japanese alliance, on the other hand, plainly promised military aid. 'If by reason of an unprovoked attack or aggressive action, wherever arising, on the part of any other power or powers, either of the high contracting parties shall be involved in war in defense of its territorial rights or special interests mentioned in the preamble of this agreement,' runs the Anglo-Japanese treaty of alliance, 'the other high contracting party will at once come to the assistance of its ally and will conduct the war in common and make peace in mutual agreement with it.'

"That is the way a treaty of military alliance is written. That is the way it has to be written if it is to be depended upon. No intelligent diplomatist would accept anything less than that, if he were seeking a treaty of military alliance.

"What, then, does the four-power treaty promise in case of threatened aggressive action? It says, 'The high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly.' For what purpose? 'In order to arrive at an understanding.' What is the subject about which an understanding is to be sought? Is it military action? Senator LODGE, speaking for the negotiators, declared that force had no place in the treaty. The subject about which an understanding is to be sought is, therefore, not a decision between war and peace, but how peace may best be preserved.

"The form of expression used in the treaty, it is true, is not precise; but how can it be, since the understanding to be reached is left for the future? It is the distinctive quality of this treaty, which is based on continuous understanding, that it leaves every signatory at all times free.

"There is to be, if possible, an understanding 'as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly or separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.' This does not bind all the participants to the same action or to any action. For some it might mean merely mediation. For others it might mean inevitable war; but there is in the treaty no obligation to participate in war. If any moral obligation to do so should arise it would not proceed from the terms of this treaty, which make no pledge of military action, but from the moral aspects of the particular situation, which would be as imperative if no treaty existed. What the treaty binds every signatory to is to respect the rights of all the others, and together to cooperate to secure respect by every peaceful means.

"It has been said that the four-power treaty is a 'substitute' for the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which it expressly terminates, and that its language is in part borrowed from that document.

"Not having the same purpose, it can hardly be called a substitute; but, even looking upon it in that light, the difference between it and that covenant is striking. The Anglo-Japanese alliance was a treaty looking toward war, in clear contemplation of war, and distinctly pledging the signatories to make war in common. The four-power treaty, on the contrary, nowhere speaks of war, does not contemplate it, and makes no provision for it. It provides for peace on the basis of mutual respect for rights voluntarily recognized by the signatories. Should there be a threatened act of aggression on the part of another power there is provision for a conference between them with a view to an understanding as to how peace may best be maintained.

"The fact that the language of the four-power treaty reveals a previous examination of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and even the retention of some of its expressions conspicuously exposes the wide difference between the two documents by showing what has been rejected and what has been preserved. All that made that alliance offensive to the United States as a war compact has been abandoned and only the terms relating to conference have been retained. The only 'understanding,' apart from the mere agreement to seek one, in article 2 regarding the action of the signatories in case of threatened aggression by other powers is to be arrived at freely when the occasion arises. Beyond the effort to reach such agreement in the particular situation there is, strictly speaking, no engagement whatever.

"If this account of the nature of this treaty is correct there is not the slightest ground for the assertion that it contains an obligation in any circumstances whatever to send troops and ships for the protection of Japan or any other insular territory against an assault by some other power.

"In the light of what has been said in the foregoing paragraphs regarding the obligations of the powers under the treaty, the question whether Japan is a 'possessor' or a 'possession' appears merely academic. Japan has the promise of the three other naval powers to respect her rights in the Pacific, as they have her promise to respect theirs, and it would be unworthy of the other signatories of this treaty to enter into a discussion to show that owing to a distinction between Japan's homeland and her colonies they do not promise to respect all her rights. Her rights, unless this treaty is a pretense, will be respected by her cosignatories everywhere and she will respect theirs, but troops and ships have not been promised by anyone to be sent anywhere.

"It is, perhaps, more to the interest of Japan than to that of any other power that this treaty for peace in the Pacific Ocean should have been negotiated. As an insular power, it does in fact render her almost immune from attack, unless a mistaken policy in the Far East on her own part should awaken resentments that would create a powerful enemy. No one wishes to take away her island empire and no one could successfully attack it without a great naval force. The treaty means, and was intended to mean, security for Japan if Japan herself desires peace.

"This security through understanding with her neighbors should furnish no occasion for jealousy of the exceptional position of Japan as an insular empire. In return there is the well-grounded assurance of security for others also. Instead of growing hostility this treaty opens a path of friendship between all the powers in the Pacific, a friendship that implies no enmity as its reason for existing.

"What the American people have most to consider is that this treaty, without depending for its effect upon warlike measures or preparation, converts the area most dangerous to the interests of the United States from a scene of probable future conflict to a region of probable repose and peaceful development. One must qualify the outlook by the word 'probable,' because if the spirit of distrust, the use of investives, and the stirring of race animosities are to continue there is no high purpose of just relationship between nations that may not be completely frustrated by a vociferous minority of militant obstructionists."

MR. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that a letter from the Secretary of State, addressed to me, in connection with the treaties now pending, may be printed in the Record in eight-point type, and also as a public document.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, February 11, 1922.

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to our conversations in relation to the note given to the Netherlands Government, I beg to say that the following is a copy of the note which was delivered to the minister for foreign affairs of the Netherlands on February 4, 1922:

"The United States of America have concluded on December 13, 1921, with the British Empire, France, and Japan, a treaty with a view to the preservation of the general peace and the maintenance of their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the region of the Pacific Ocean. They have agreed thereby as between themselves to respect their rights in relation to these possessions and dominions.

"The Netherlands not being signatory to the said treaty and the Netherlands possessions in the region of the Pacific Ocean therefore not being included in the agreement referred to, the Government of the United States of America, anxious to forestall any conclusion contrary to the spirit of the treaty, desires to declare that it is firmly resolved to respect the rights of the Netherlands in relation to their insular possessions in the region of the Pacific Ocean."

This is identical with notes delivered by the British, French, and Japanese ministers.

A similar note was delivered to the Portuguese Government.

Very sincerely, yours,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEYS AND AGENTS BY ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is morning business closed?

Mr. KING. May I make an inquiry before morning business is declared closed?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. On January 5 last I offered a resolution asking the Alien Property Custodian for information concerning the number of attorneys appointed by the Alien Property Custodian, the compensation allowed each, the character of services performed, "the names of all attorneys, directors, supervisors, managers, auditors, or other agents appointed by the Alien Property Custodian to take care of or to have the administration of property," and so forth. The information I conceived to be important, as also did other Senators. May I inquire of the Presiding Officer whether that information has as yet been furnished?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed it has not as yet reached the Senate.

Mr. KING. If the information is not furnished by to-morrow, or no satisfactory explanation is given, I shall offer another resolution directing the Alien Property Custodian to immediately comply with the resolution which the Senate adopted on January 5. The delay in furnishing the information desired by the Senate may be justified, but I have not been advised of any reason for such delay. There are many patriotic Americans who believe that our Government is failing in its duty in withholding from the owners the property seized during the war. They oppose a policy which holds this property and places it in the hands of agents of the Alien Property Custodian who have charged and are charging enormous fees for their services in connection therewith. Why should we violate the provisions of a treaty and the principles of international law and refuse to German nationals and Austrian nationals hundreds of millions of dollars which we seized. I find no excuse for the course of the Government in holding this property, and feel that it is subject to criticism in selling a portion of the same, as has been done in a number of instances. All property seized except perishable property should have been held as a trust fund and restored to its owners as soon as the war was over, or at least as soon as a treaty had been negotiated.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I understood these properties were held as a trust fund. I have been glancing at the testimony of Col. Miller, who, I think, is at present the Alien Property Custodian, given before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, as I recall, in relation to the condition of affairs in his office. The different properties which were seized are known as trusts, and they are so labeled, and in the books they are kept as trusts, as I understand.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator from Connecticut that while all the property seized was labeled as being trust property a portion has been sold. My information is that some belonging to German nationals was sold to Americans, who have greatly profited by the transactions. Among the properties disposed of was the Bausch magneto and more than 4,500 German patents. One of these patents covered the formula for Salvarsan, and many other valuable patents were seized and sold for $250,000 to the Chemical Foundation. There are persons who think that the Government violated its trusteeship in disposing of these properties and that whenever possible the property sold shall be recovered and delivered back to the original owners.

If we were warranted—and there is some question about the rightfulness of our course, in view of the treaty which we had with Germany—in seizing the property, certainly we were not warranted in selling it or in confiscating it. It was our duty after sequestration to hold it in trust, and as soon as hostilities were over or as soon as the treaty of peace was negotiated it should have been returned to the German or Austrian nationals to whom it belonged.

Many months ago—indeed, more than a year ago—Germany, as I am advised, restored all property belonging to American nationals which she had sequestered during the war. Can we permit Germany to show a higher regard for international law than the United States does? We should remember that the property seized by the Alien Property Custodian consisted of investments made in the United States by Germans and subjects of Austria-Hungary pursuant to treaty and in conformity with international comity. We were benefited by these investments. We encouraged aliens to employ their capital in the development of our resources and industries. To rob them of their investments would subject the United States to universal condemnation. The immorality of such a course would shock all lovers of justice and all who possess any regard for international law.

It should not be forgotten that ours is a creditor nation. Americans have billions invested in foreign lands. We can not afford even from a pecuniary standpoint to indorse a policy which might react upon the heads of American citizens and despoil them of their investments in other countries. The harshness of ancient laws and customs should not be a part of our policy. It has been the pride of our statesmen and jurists that the United States has always demanded the inviolability of private property from seizure or confiscation by belligerent nations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, when I said that the properties were held as trusts I did not mean that the property may not have changed form; I did not mean that the property may not have been sold in certain cases and converted into cash and the cash held as a trust fund. I mean that the properties, in whatever form, were carried as trusts, and I assume that the Alien Property Custodian is waiting to see what disposition Congress will make of those properties, what public policy we will determine upon.

I agree entirely with the Senator that it is—I was going to say entirely improper for a government which is at war with another country to seize the property of the nationals of that other country and confiscate it. That, Mr. President, was the custom in barbaric times. In previous generations in time of war not only the property of alien nationals was seized but their persons were ruthlessly violated. It has always been questionable in my mind, though I have never given it any exhaustive consideration, whether we had the right to take over, whatever legal situation the taking over may have resulted in, the property of Germans which was in this country at the time of the outbreak of the war. Of course, I agree that, as a war measure, the use of the property could properly be controlled so that it could not be made an asset of the enemy for war purposes; but I am talking about taking over the title of the property. It is, of course, the modern feeling that war produces carnage and trouble enough for the world generally without bringing down upon the heads of inoffensive, and, perhaps, entirely innocent private citizens, the additional personal woe of a deprivation of their property. Many people whose property was taken have almost gone to the poorhouse, because they were deprived of the income of their property; and the property is taken, mind you, without any judicial proceedings, without any judgment, but is taken because the authority taking it may suspect that it is alien-owned property or is being used improperly. I have no doubt there are many cases where property has been taken from American citizens upon the mere allegation that it was alien enemy-owned property, and great injustice has been done.

Of course, the treaty of 1828, if I recall the year accurately, which this Government entered into with Prussia purported upon its face to be for the very purpose of operating during war, and provided for the sacredness of the property of the citizens of each country within the borders of the other during war. There was a specific provision in the treaty that the outbreak of war should not operate to repeal or in any way affect adversely the stipulation that the property of the citizens of the respective countries should be exempt from seizure; but in spite of that both countries took the property of citizens of the other country. I wish to ask the Senator before I take my seat whether the information asked for by his resolution, which I think it is perfectly proper that Congress should have, was obtained from the previous occupants of the office of Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know that I fully comprehend the Senator's question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will endeavor to make it plain. The Senator from Utah, as I understood his resolution, has asked the Alien Property Custodian to furnish the Senate with a list of attorneys whom the custodian had employed and the salaries paid to each. I want to ask him if the same information as to attorneys hired and the salaries paid by previous occupants of the office of Alien Property Custodian had ever been furnished to the Congress.

Mr. KING. I am not sure as to that; if so, I have not seen it; but I will say to the Senator that my resolution not only called for a list of the attorneys and the compensation paid under the present Alien Property Custodian's administration but from the beginning.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not understand that.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that it also called for the names and amounts paid to all custodians, supervisors, directors, those who were put in charge of alien property, because my information is—and I hope it is incorrect—that a large number of persons were appointed by the Alien Property Custodians as directors, managers, agents, and attorneys to take charge of corporations the property of which was owned by Germans or Austrians and of property owned by private individuals of foreign birth and who owed allegiance to enemy countries. It is charged that these persons so placed in charge of the seized property have been paid considerable sums from the property under their control or from proceeds derived from the use or operation of the same.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I have said, I did not rise to object to the consideration of the resolution, for I think it is a very proper one.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, two bills have been introduced by myself which are now pending before the Judiciary Committee. I introduced one of them more than a year ago—nearly two years ago—asking that the property belonging to German and Austrian nationals be restored to them. I felt that it was a wrong which we could not defend in morals or under the principles of international law to seize and hold this property. I was unwilling to make its return contingent upon the return by Germany of property belonging to American nationals or the payment of claims which the United States might have against the German Government. My view was that our Government should do right, no matter what other nations or other people might do.

The Senator referred to the treaty of 1828. That treaty was substantially the same as the one negotiated by Benjamin Franklin in the early days of our Nation—indeed, as I recall now, before the United States became a Nation, but when it existed as a confederacy—and so scrupulous were the American fathers in regard to the observance of the highest principles of international law that they provided that the property of nationals should not be taken by the belligerent nations; that it should be immune from seizure. They provided that in the event of war the nationals of the belligerent countries could remain unmolested in the countries of the enemy, conducting their business so long, of course, as they remained neutral; and, as I remember, the treaty of 1828 provided that if war should break out between the United States and Germany, the Germans should have nine months, if they desired, to remove from the United States and to take their property with them, and Americans had the same privilege. The Alien Property Custodian seized property belonging to Americans upon the theory that they were Germans. Property in the United States owned by persons of Swiss nationality who happened to be in Germany at the time the war broke out was seized.

I think that we should immediately pass a law providing some commission or instrumentality to pass upon the claims of owners and restore to the owners the property seized; I sincerely hope that the Judiciary Committee, which has held these bills before it for so long, will take them up for consideration and report to the Senate a measure which will deal with the subject in a comprehensive and just manner.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to an article appearing in this morning's issue of the Washington Herald; and from the fact that I believe that this paper is owned, or principally owned, by Mr. Hoover, the Secretary of Commerce, the particular article which I am going to read in part has at least a semi-official appearance.

Mr. President, it seems to me quite evident that whatever, if anything, is left of the Sherman antitrust law as it applies to big business has been repealed by Mr. Hoover in this article. If it means anything, it seems to me it means that in the future no attempt will be made to prosecute big business because it combines or forms a monopoly, providing it is done according to the methods mapped out in Mr. Hoover's letter, which means in effect, as I understand the article, that business concerns that want to combine and form a trust or a monopoly have only to announce that their combination is not in restraint of trade and is not a monopoly, at least as far as can be ascertained on outside observation.

Mr. Hoover's letter is not printed in full in the paper, but the main points that he makes in the letter are printed. It seems that he outlines certain things that, in his judgment, corporations and organizations can do without violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and calls upon the Attorney General for an opinion as to whether or not he is 'correct'. I read now from the article:

The specific activities embraced in the questions propounded by Secretary Hoover to Attorney General Daugherty include the following: Establishment of a standard or uniform system of cost accounting through trade associations.

Advocacy by trade associations of uniformity in the use of trade phrases and trade names.

Standardization of quality and grades of product of members of trade associations.

Collection by trade associations of credit information as to the financial responsibility of those using the products of the industry.

Placing of insurance through the agency of a trade association.

Cooperative advertising by a trade association for the promotion of trade of its members.

Promotion of welfare work by a trade association in the plants of its members.

Representation by a trade association of its members in matters of legislation, rate litigation, and railroad transportation questions.

Promotion of closer relations between an industry and the Federal and State Governments through trade associations.

Collection by a trade association of statistics from each member showing his volume of production, his capacity to produce, the wages paid, the consumption of his product in domestic or foreign trade, and his distribution thereof, together with his stocks on hand.

Compiling by the trade association of such information into a consolidated statement which shows the total volume of production of the membership, its capacity to produce by districts, and production, the wages paid by districts, the production and consumption in foreign or domestic trade by districts, the volume of distribution by districts, and stocks on hand by districts.

Transmission by the trade association of such consolidated statement to the Secretary of Commerce for distribution by him to the members of the association through the public press or otherwise and to the public generally.

Collection by a trade association also of prices received by its members, specifying the volume of each grade, brand, size, style, or quality, and the price received for the volume so sold in each of the respective districts.

Consolidation by the trade association of the price reports into one statement for distribution to the public through the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. President, no doubt many of the activities so outlined would be harmless; but most of them, and all of them taken collectively, make the famous Gary dinners sink into insignificance. If business associations are allowed to organize and carry on these various activities and furnish the information back and forth between themselves, then the Sherman law has no application to them. It means, it seems to me, a statement that the Sherman antitrust law shall not apply to organized business. It probably has not applied very much; to a great extent it has been repealed; but this is almost an open statement that the association must, at least on the face of things, pretend that it has nothing to do with throttling competition, but if the things that are outlined there are carried on competition is as dead as a doornail. In fact, some of those specific things are the very things that have been outlined in decisions at least of the Federal Trade Commission where they have found a monopoly to exist and business to be carried on in restraint of trade and in violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I agree entirely with what the Senator says, and I am afraid a disservice to the country and to the administration has been done. The President of the United States in one of his messages indicated an adherence to the same fallacious and indefensible view and construction of the Sherman antitrust law, and Mr. Hoover has been a protagonist of the idea of these open-price organizations. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States recently, in the case of the American Column & Lumber Co. et al., appellants, against The United States of America, rendered a decision that shows that this view for which Mr. Hoover is contending, and which I hope the Attorney General does not indorse, is wrong and is violative of the Sherman antitrust law. Unfortunately, Mr. Justice Brandeis and one other justice, Mr. Justice McKenna, dissented from the decision of the court; but the majority of the court in the case to which I have just referred have rendered a very strong opinion showing that the organizations which are referred to by Mr. Hoover are violative of the Sherman antitrust law and that they are amenable to the criminal terms of that statute.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is not any doubt about it as I read the English language. If these things that have been outlined by Mr. Hoover as being not in violation of the Sherman antitrust law are proper, then the particular case to which the Senator refers must be reversed. The rendering of that opinion by the Supreme Court absolutely nullifies the proposition laid down by Mr. Hoover. One of the main things upon which that decision was based is one of the things that Hoover wants to permit.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; if it is on this subject.

Mr. WILLIS. I wanted to know if I understood my friend correctly to attribute to the Government, particularly to the Department of Justice, the views set forth in this article?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I expected to have something to say about that.

Mr. WILLIS. I wanted to call particular attention to the fact that the Attorney General, in his statement, disavows that, and leaves it entirely open. He does not commit himself at all to the views set forth by Secretary Hoover.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that if I had not forgotten it, I would have called attention to the fact that at least as far as this article is concerned I have no criticism to make of the Attorney General. Of course, I am not criticizing Mr. Hoover. He has a right to that belief; but I want to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that under this plan big business could easily monopolize and combine to throttle competition. One of these plans provides that they shall furnish to each other statements of wages paid, the amount of stuff they have on hand, the raw material they have on hand, how much they have been selling it for, and all about it. Another provision is that they shall furnish to each other a sort of a blacklist, where the credit of customers is not good. That is one of the means to be resorted to. The customer who sells at a lower price than this combine, wants the thing sold for on the market would be reported as a man whose credit was not good, and therefore he would be unable to buy any of the products of any of these business concerns manufacturing them in the future. There are a thousand ways in which every dealer who refuses or neglects to carry out the mandates of this great monopoly or combination in restraint of trade could be put out of business, and the monopoly continue to prosper and go on.

Mr. WILLIS. In connection with what the Senator has said in approval of the attitude of the Attorney General, I direct his attention, if he will permit me, to what the Attorney General is quoted as saying near the top of the article:

If in the actual practice it shall develop that competition is suppressed and prices are materially enhanced, this department—must treat such practice as it treats any other one which is violative of the antitrust act.

That is, the Department of Justice—

Mr. NORRIS. When these great combinations exist, doing what Mr. Hoover has outlined they should be allowed to do, it is a very difficult thing to prove actual violation, and yet, if they are allowed to do those things, they could bring about a condition of affairs in which they could monopolize and control the entire output of some particular product necessary for human life, could put the price at anything they pleased, and say simply, "We are doing nothing in restraint of trade. We are all independent. It happens that our prices are just the same, and we are swapping information all the time as to wages, as to the amount of product in this section of the country and the amount in that section, how much raw material is over here and how much is there, how much it costs us to manufacture and how much it costs another man to manufacture, and all that information." But, according to Mr. Hoover, it would not mean anything.

The intent with which an act is done is impossible of direct proof. Every judge who has ever sat on the bench and instructed a jury in a case of conspiracy, or of burglary, or any other crime where the intent is a necessary essence of the criminal act, would tell the jury that it is seldom, if ever, possible to prove intent by direct evidence. Every man is supposed to mean to accomplish the natural consequences of his acts, and you prove intent by proving what men have done.

When it is once established that the different business concerns manufacturing a certain product, or a large proportion of a certain product—for they do not have to control it all in order to control the market, or to be a monopoly—are meeting and comparing everything which goes to constitute the expense of the manufacture of the article that they produce, and then separate, and all charge the same price, that is evidence of a conspiracy. That is proof, Mr. President, of a monopoly and of a conspiracy in restraint of trade. But all that would be permitted if Mr. Hoover had his way.

I did not want this to pass without somebody calling attention to the fact that the carrying out of this program of Mr. Hoover is, in effect, an open declaration that the Sherman antitrust law is repealed as to every big business concern that is organized, and that it applies only to the unorganized citizenship.

PAY OF THE ARMY AND KINDRED SERVICES.

Mr. KENYON obtained the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution, which I ask the Secretary to read. Then I intend to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. KENYON. Will the resolution require much discussion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If it does, I shall not trespass upon the Senator's time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York.

The resolution (S. Res. 240) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the special committee created by the provisions of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved May 18, 1920, shall be referred to a special committee of five Senators which shall have power to report to the Senate by bill or otherwise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate and to the Senator from New York, but my attention was diverted by conversation, and I did not hear the resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire that the resolution shall again be read?

Mr. NORRIS. I either wish to have the resolution again read or to have the Senator from New York state its object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The reading clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It relates to the pay revision of the several services mentioned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently appointed as the special committee of five Senators under the resolution Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. NEWBERRY, Mr. MCKINLEY, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. WALSH of Montana.

RELIEF AGAINST DEPRESSION AND UNEMPLOYMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2749) to prepare for future cyclical periods of depression and unemployment by systems of public works.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, on yesterday the bill which is the unfinished business met with a number of objections. It seemed to be the day for Senators to come into the Chamber, put a few holes in the bill, and then retire. I think, however, that at least one of the objections was worthy of consideration, and that objection may be obviated.

Mr. President, possibly Congress does not desire to take any step at all, even a small step, in connection with the unemployment situation, but that situation is becoming worse instead of better. I had my attention called only this morning to the case of an employee of the Washington Navy Yard, who has been working here for years. He went to the yard and reported for night work, but was told that he was discharged. Many others were also discharged. The policy of retrenchment, in which we all believe, works considerable hardship. The man to whom I refer had a sick wife; and he also had a mortgage on his home. I do not think he got a square deal. I think the haste with which these men are being discharged by the Government would not be followed by a private corporation. I repeat, it is not exactly a square deal.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If the bill which the Senator from Iowa now has before the Senate had been on the statute books, would it have saved from discharge the man of whom the Senator has spoken?

Mr. KENYON. No; but it would have tended to provide him with other employment.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would point out how it would provide other employment.

Mr. KENYON. I am going to try to do that; I tried to do it yesterday. Let me say, however, before I reach that, that I do not believe that when the Government is paying attorneys for the Shipping Board $35,000 a year and thereabouts it can afford to do anything that is not fair to the humblest worker in its navy yards.

The unemployment question is here. If it can not be helped any by a system of developing public works, what is the alternative? The Senate has got to face it. There are to-day in this country from four and a half million to seven million men who are unemployed.

The alternative is a system of unemployment insurance; such a system is bound to come if we do not provide otherwise, for people are not going to starve in this country. A man who is willing to work is entitled to a chance to work.

If the plan suggested by the pending bill is not going to accomplish any good, let some Senator present another and a better plan. We are up to the question now and we are going to continue to be up to it good and strong.

The objection was raised yesterday that, under section 2, the publications by the Secretary of Commerce would be in the nature of predictions of impending disaster and therefore would be most unfortunate. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] advanced the suggestion that it would be injurious to business instead of helping it, while the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling] said that big business wants this bill. I doubt if big business wants panics. I have prepared and shall offer an amendment to section 2, subdivision (a), which is designed to meet that objection. I have submitted the proposed amendment to a number of gentlemen who have raised that objection.

As to section 1, the theory of that section is that the heads of executive departments shall go ahead within the limits of the appropriations they now have, without additional appropriations, and lay out plans of public work, not as has been suggested when a period of depression is at hand but during periods of prosperity so as to be ready when a period of depression may come.

Another objection relates to section 3, and is directed against the power being placed in the hands of the President to postpone the date of the commencement or retard the prosecution of portions of public works. Mr. President, although I do not know that there is any authority for it, such a practice is followed to-day. Congress under this bill is merely stating a policy, which must be carried out by some one, and it would have to be carried out by the Executive, for there is no one else to carry it out. Congress may order projects to be commenced at any particular time, and if it should take such action no power is lodged anywhere to stop work on such projects. The Senator from Florida raised objection to the authority being granted to the President to stop work on any project. Some years ago we passed a public buildings bill and appropriated sums of money for the construction of the buildings. The provisions of that bill have not been carried out, and there is no way to force them to be carried out. This bill proposes to do merely in an orderly and legal way what is being done now. If the Congress does not desire any such thing to be done, Congress says so in the act, and this bill does not apply. The last part of section 3 so provides.

Mr. President, we have an engineering branch in the War Department having to do with rivers and harbors; we have one in the Lighthouse Service; we have one in the Interior Department; we have a Bureau of Public Roads; a Supervising Architect of the Treasury. All of these instrumentalities are now in existence and can be used in formulating the plans contemplated by the pending bill.

Senators will not, I fear, read the report of the employment conference.

Now I shall endeavor to answer the question of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] as well as I can. A system of public works has been prepared, we will say, by the engineering branch of the War Department or of the Interior Department or of the Lighthouse Service. The plans have all been formulated and they are ready to go ahead with the work when an appropriation is made. From the reports, however, which will be published by the Secretary of Commerce it is believed that a period of depression is approaching; but it can not be said that it is at this time upon us. The plans for public works are ready to be proceeded with, however, and the appropriations have been made; and against a period of depression a certain percentage of the work is put off for a year and another percentage for another year. Thus we would have a reservoir for the employment of labor on work to be done—say, on 40 per cent of public works—that had not been carried on in the year when it would have been performed had not the times been prosperous times, had not the Government been looking ahead. When the depression is at hand, when all reports on business conditions indicate that trouble is coming, then work could be proceeded with on the 40 per cent or the 60 per cent held back, as the case might be, and thus employment be given to labor. That is not going to be a difficult thing to accomplish, nor will it involve very great consequences. The figures that I gave yesterday as to the number of men employed by the Government in public works when running at full capacity show that they constitute about 1 per cent of the men employed in the general industries and business of the country, but a stimulation will result from the activities of the Government and the municipalities and private enterprise will be encouraged to go ahead and do something to take care of the unemployment situation.

The mayor of Rock Island, Ill., reported to the conference as follows:

Our local committee have made every effort in the world to stimulate the employment of labor. We have had numbers of our citizens employing one man one day a week, simply making work for him to prevent him from becoming an object of charity. I have had the railroad companies ship me many carloads of discarded ties and old lumber of no further use to them, gratis, which has been distributed among the poor for fuel by means of municipal trucks.

Here is something from Youngstown, Ohio:

Our mayor's committee on employment is at the present time functioning in a most efficient way. Through the efforts of the committee municipal bonds were sold, and through the money provided in this way work was provided in the city parks for men with families. The men were divided into two groups, and worked in two-week shifts. One group went on as the other came off.

They have also, as a committee, interviewed the heads of the steel mills of the Youngstown district, and as a result it has been agreed that the mills will take back their family men in two-week shifts, as far as possible.

I know there are men in this Chamber who do not care to do anything for labor, who feel that labor can be liquidated, that it can take lower wages, that it can refuse to unionize, and that now is a good time to crush it.

Now, I want to call attention to one or two things more. I welcome any interruptions. I have no pride of opinion in this bill. I am simply trying, in a humble way, to see if I can not do something.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, since the Senator invites interruptions, I want to ask him a question. The public work engaged in by the United States is about 1 per cent of the employment of labor that is given by private people and corporations; so, of course, the bill would only apply to that 1 per cent, so far as the Government employment is concerned, and only a portion of that would be put off, as I understand the Senator, even if the bill that he advocates were passed. Is not that true?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. So that after all, as far as the Government's part of it is concerned, it is a mighty little thing compared with the whole.

Mr. KENYON. I have never claimed otherwise.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not objecting to anything that can be done in any legitimate way—and I will stretch a point to make it legitimate—to help labor; but the danger under the Senator's bill, as I look at it, is in the power that is given in one instance to the Secretary of Commerce, who is going to prophesy and tell us in advance when hard times are coming and when good times are coming.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator may have been out when I spoke of the amendment I intended to offer.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I heard the Senator mention the amendment he was going to offer to make that good.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think the language is susceptible of that construction in any event; but, if it is, I am just as anxious as the Senator is to protest against anybody making these prophecies. We have enough of that kind of prophecies now, and the language I shall propose will cure that. I know the Senator will agree to that.

Now, I want to call the Senator's attention, because his ideas are so good, and I know how his heart is on this labor question, to the effect of this conference. These conferences do not amount to much, generally, but this one did do some good. There were labor leaders there—Mr. Gompers was there and very many others—and they indorsed this kind of a proposition. They did not think it would do a tremendous amount of good, but they thought it would do some good. I will read to the Senator, in a minute or two, what they said.

The very fact that this conference met and indorsed this plan has stimulated work in the municipalities and has resulted in a good many advantages for labor. Many people object to that because they say it makes more tax-exempt bonds; but the tax-exempt bonds have not kept pace with the increase of wealth.

In November, 1921, 380 municipalities sold $118,000,000 worth of bonds for public works.

In December, 1921, 386 municipalities sold $210,000,000 worth of bonds for public works.

In January, 1922, 480 municipalities sold $94,000,000 worth of bonds for public works.

They broke all records for corresponding dates in any year, and there was some stimulation on this employment proposition.

In 1921 the volume of public works under way or under appropriation was $1,200,000,000, or double that of any previous year. That was brought about to a considerable extent by the postponement of public works during the war, as the Senator knows; but if it had not been for these things this employment situation would have been infinitely worse, because it has resulted in the municipalities employing hundreds and thousands of men. I know that in my own town they are building a great high school. It takes up a whole block. Hundreds of men have been employed on that work. There was a good deal of objection to it. It was said that it was a bad time to do it; that the cost of work was high, and all those things; but it was a question of unemployment.

A little while after the armistice was signed I introduced here a bill to create an emergency public works commission to plan Federal public works for the depression which would follow the war, whenever it should arrive; and these depressions are just as sure to arrive as night is to follow day. No consideration could be given it at that time because everything was booming, and everybody said: "Why borrow trouble?" If that bill had passed, the letter which the President wrote on this subject the other day to the Secretary of Commerce, not in reference to this bill but in reference to the general subject, would have made it possible to have some plan for great public works that could be put into effect now and employ hundreds of thousands of men. When are we going to do this—when times are good and booming, as they were then, or when a period of depression comes, such as is upon us now?

I want to call attention to the record, because if this bill is defeated, that will be a matter of some discussion in the country.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I just want to say in that connection that there seem to be two lines of thought in Congress—one to the effect that when we have depressions, and everybody is hard pressed, working people as well as other people, we ought not to make appropriations; we ought not to proceed with public work; we ought to shut down on all expenditures.

Mr. KENYON. And make more unemployment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. I differ with that view entirely, and I agree with what I understand to be the Senator's view—that that is the very time when public work ought to be prosecuted.

Mr. KENYON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FLETCHER. We ought to go on with those things that need to be done, and will eventually be done, and do them then. I am fully impressed that that is the better view and that would be the wiser course, and I entirely sympathize with any effort in that direction.

The one danger point in this bill seems to me to be, as I indicated yesterday, the giving of power to the head of a department to discontinue work in one part of the country, or any portion of the country, according to the language of the bill. I am a little afraid that if you vest the head of a department with so much power, even where work is undertaken and is in process of execution, he can stop the work there and order work to be done somewhere else; and I would not want to give him any such power.

Mr. KENYON. No; I would not want to see any such thing done, but that would hardly be probable, in view of the fact that the whole purpose of the bill is to make more work. He would not stop work that was being done in one place and transfer it to another.

Mr. FLETCHER. It does not seem as if he would.

Mr. KENYON. And, in any event, whatever is done must be done with the advice of the President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; but of course the President would be unable to look into all these details, and he would act on the advice of the head of the department appointed by him and in whom he had confidence, very properly. I do not question the propriety of that.

Mr. KENYON. Most of the retarding of the work would be apt to be in these great projects running over many years, not the small projects.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was wondering if the Senator could not perhaps modify that language, change it in some way, and perhaps leave it to Congress to determine whether or not it shall be stopped.

Mr. KENYON. Let me say this: Under the bill as it now is, where the Congress designates the time within which work shall commence or close, that is the end of it. There can not be any change. The Congress in any act can protect itself absolutely, and the President has no power to interfere with it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The latter clause of section 3 provides for that. If Congress does fix a time limit, of course it must be observed; I realize that; but it is very seldom that Congress ever does fix a limit of time within which work is to be completed.

Mr. KENYON. Of course we can do that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Now, Mr. President, I want just a minute or two to put in the Record some things, because apparently very little attention is being paid to the bill here.

In the address of welcome of the President to the Unemployment Conference he used this language:

Fundamentally sound, financially strong, industrially unimpaired, commercially consistent, and politically unafraid, there ought to be work for everybody in the United States who chooses to work.

That is a sound proposition. I wonder what the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] expects to do with thousands of men walking the streets, unemployed and with hungry children at home, not enough to eat and not enough fuel to keep warm. What are we going to do with them? Read them the passage from the Bible that the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] read? No; every able-bodied man, willing to work, is entitled to work in this country. The Government owes him a chance to work, if he is willing to work. I do not know, Senators, whether we can sit around in our smug complacency and talk about everything of this kind being paternalistic, as my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] does. You are going to be up against the facts. What are you going to do with them? Now, you have to feed these people. You will have to donate the money to feed them and get nothing back, make them objects of charity, which they do not want, or help the country and the municipalities and the States by great systems of public works where you take care of them and at the same time help the country. Is not that a sound economic policy?

There are remarks from Mr. Hoover, who presided at the conference, which I shall not take the time to read.

Here is a report of the committee on public works on long-range planning of public works:

When public works are done in greatest volume during periods of active industry the same men and material are being competed for by both public and private employers. The inevitable result is to raise the height of the crest of the wave of cyclical business inflation—

That is where we got this term that has been discussed so much—and to cause a greater crash when the heightened wave breaks, as it always does.

In a growing country like the United States the aggregate volume of public works of cities, counties, States, and of the Federal Government is so great that if a larger proportion were executed in years of depression than in years of active industry a powerful stabilizing influence would be exerted.

Further in this same report, found on pages 96 and 97:

The leadership of the Federal Government in expanding its public works during periods of depression and contracting execution in periods of active industry requires no great change from existing procedure. Already the executing agency enjoys great latitude as to the period in which the appropriations may be spent. The remaining step is to choose the period of intensive execution to synchronize with major periods of industrial depression.

Certain works of the Federal Government, such as reclamation, flood prevention, river and harbor work, roads and public buildings, are peculiarly suited for consideration as large undertakings covering a long period and capable of elasticity of execution to synchronize with cycles of business depression.

Then a recommendation is made in the following terms on page 98:

The present industrial situation can immediately be improved by the use of such of the following measures as the conference may approve and promote. Your committee is convinced that the expansion of public works during the winter of 1921-22 constitutes one of the most important measures to revive private industry and to check unemployment. We therefore recommend to the conference that methods be formulated and measures pressed for the advancement and augmentation of public works for the following reasons:

1. The best remedy for unemployment is employment.
2. Direct employment is given by public works.
3. Indirect employment is given in the manufacture of the materials needed.

I referred to that yesterday. If you take even 1 per cent of men and put them back into employment, they make work for others in making shoes and in making garments and household furniture and everything that they may need.

The wages paid to those directly and indirectly employed create a demand for other commodities which require the employment of new groups to produce. Thus public works assist in reviving industry in general.

Public works will serve as a partial substitute for private relief and charity.

I read, further, from page 106:

There is a serious apparent objection to the policy of deferring needed public works during a period of seven to nine years in order to concentrate a larger amount than normal in a depression year. On examination it will be found that no specific piece of public work will be deferred for any such length of time. This may be illustrated as follows:

Suppose that normally the public works construction of some given community amounts to $100,000 a year. The community is asked to defer about 20 per cent of this in normal years. The first year, public works to cost $20,000 are deferred. The construction of this particular public works will not, however, be deferred until the depression year. It will be constructed in the second year, and newly authorized public works to cost $40,000 will be deferred from the second into the third; to cost $60,000 will be deferred from the third to the fourth year, and so on. Only after the fifth year would any specific public works construction be deferred more than one year. The work concentrated in the tenth year would be deferred from no earlier year than the eighth.

This is a pretty good illustration of what at least I hope might be worked out under this bill.

I said yesterday that the cycles of industrial depression shown by the economic history of the country occurred up to 1903 at regular periods of 10 years, and from 1903 on at regular periods of 5 to 8 years. They are absolutely certain to come. The theory of this bill is to enable us during the fat years to get ready for the lean years.

I might take up some of the evidence of the labor representatives, Mr. Edgar Wallace, Mr. Mallory, and others, but I think I will not take the time.

The amendment I want to offer to cover the first objection is to strike out subdivision (a) of section 2 and insert the language I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEFLIN in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. Substitute for subdivision (a), section 2, the following:

That the Secretary of Commerce shall prepare and publish monthly reports as a supplement to the Current Survey of Business of the Bureau of the Census, or otherwise, concerning existing business conditions, in order that the President, the heads of the executive departments, the Congress, the governors of the respective States, the mayors of cities, and persons engaged in private industrial enterprises and in agriculture may have more adequate, frequent, and reliable information upon the general industrial situation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hesitate somewhat to say anything in opposition to this bill, because I realize that those who favor the bill are moved by motives which are lofty and worthy. I always sympathize, as everybody who knows me will bear witness, with the underdog. I sympathize with men who are out of employment, and I am willing to go as far as any Member of the Senate will go to give relief, either temporary or permanent. I do not believe the bill now pending before the Senate will bring relief. Some provisions in it in my judgment will be injurious, and I can not myself see much in it which will be beneficial.

In the first place, unemployment, particularly now, is an abnormal condition. I would be willing, however, to legislate for temporary contingencies which exist now, or which will exist in the future. I would be willing to make an appropriation to be put in the hands of the President—I would rather have it in the hands of the President than in the hands of a Cabinet officer—to be used at any time when, in his judgment, the conditions of unemployment of labor in the country warrant it, the money to be used for the construction of public works. Let the President have it permanently as a safeguard.

This bill would not accomplish that. The amendment suggested by the Senator to section 2 I think will help it, although I have not had an opportunity to analyze it, as the only knowledge I have of it is from hearing it read from the desk. But that would not be relief of a permanent nature, even if we should adopt it. We are doctoring the effect and not the cause.

I think section 2 of this bill, as it is printed, confers upon the Secretary of Commerce a power which would be detrimental to the welfare of the country, and would bring on just exactly what those who favor the bill want to avoid. The amendment offered would remedy it to some extent, but the inherent objection would still exist. I am not surprised that that power in section 2 is given to the Secretary of Commerce, because, as the Senator from Iowa told us the other day, the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, was one of the men behind this legislation favorable to it. Perhaps he helped to draw the bill.

Mr. KENYON. No; he did not. I merely said Mr. Hoover was favorable to it. Mr. Hoover was chairman of the President's conference on unemployment, and favored it there.

Mr. NORRIS. Secretary Hoover generally favors anything which gives the Secretary of Commerce more power.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that I had intended to move to strike out subdivision (b) of section 2.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator would improve the bill if he would strike out section 2 entirely. Let me read that:

That the Secretary of Commerce shall prepare and publish monthly reports as a supplement to the Current Survey of Business of the Bureau of the Census, or otherwise, concerning the trend of business conditions, the approach of periods of business strain and overextension, or of periods of business depression, in order that the President, the heads of the executive departments, the Congress, the governors of the respective States, the mayors of cities, and persons engaged in private industrial enterprises may properly prepare for and plan against such periods.

Clothed in nice language, but in common English, it seems to me that means, or those entrusted with the power will soon construe that it means, to say to the heads of departments: "Strain your eagle eyes out into the future, and tell us what is going to happen." The prophecy of Joseph in the days of Pharaoh would sink into insignificance compared with the prophecies which Hoover would give us in our own day.

Then they would get ready for it. Somebody will tell the President and the Congress and the governors and the mayors and all the people that next year we will probably have a panic which will wipe us off the face of the earth, that we are going to have a terrible depression. We know what that would mean. Banks would fail, and immediately we would all start to get our money out of the banks in order to avoid the panic which was to come the following year. I would rather postpone a panic until the time when God brings it than to have Hoover entrusted with this power, and get the panic a year sooner.

We had better let those things alone. If they are going to come every so often, as the Senator from Iowa says they will and always have, we had better let God run it as in the past, and not take the power away from Him and give it to Hoover.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator would not accuse the Lord of being responsible for what Hoover does?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. I misunderstood the Senator, if that was not his statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with Hoover. I would just as soon give this power to Hoover as to anybody else.

Mr. CARAWAY. With the Senator's permission, I want to stand up for the Lord, if he is trying to saddle Hoover's acts on Him.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has my permission to stand up for the Lord. I will not object to that, and it might be good for the Senator if he would stand up for the Lord oftener.

Mr. CARAWAY. I presume the Senator is merely promulgating a theory, not something he has tried.

Mr. NORRIS. It is quite evident that the Senator from Arkansas has not tried it. If he had, he would have known that I was always there.

Mr. CARAWAY. Where?

Mr. NORRIS. At church, for instance, on the Sabbath Day, when the Senator was trying to get his flivver running and to pump up the tire he yesterday told us was exploded. If the Senator was anxious to stand up for the Lord, as he would have us believe, he would not stop because his tire exploded or because his battery would not work, but he would do as I do, save the price of gasoline and street car fare and walk to the house of worship and serve the Lord.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I may be permitted to say it, I never saw the Senator in a church in my life.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not doubt it a particle, because the Senator does not go to church.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the Senator was a lawyer.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, an attorney.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I am making no claim; and even if I did make pretensions to belong to that class, the Senator should not rub it in by calling public attention to it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I presume the Senator could disprove it; but, at any rate, I understood he had a license to practice law. What I wanted to suggest was that he must know he should not decide a matter on hearsay evidence, and he not being at church, could not know whether I had been.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no doubt but that the Senator from Arkansas will stand up for the Lord, as he says. I hope he will, and if he is anxious to do that he must vote, it seems to me, against section 2.

I mean no disrespect to Mr. Hoover, but I think section 2 in a sense means that we are crowding the Lord off the throne and putting Hoover in His place. He is to tell us when the good times will come and when the bad times will come, so that we can get ready for the good and avoid the bad, and as sure as he is able to do all those things, and accomplish them with reasonable perfection, there will be no further use for anybody else in the way of government.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has said, "If you do not favor the bill, present a plan of your own; but let us do something." As I said awhile ago, I do not think the bill does anything, so far as I can see, either of a temporary or permanent nature. The things the Senator from Iowa wants to accomplish I would be glad to help accomplish, but in my judgment they will not be accomplished by the pending bill. There are a good many things proposed that ought to be done to bring permanent relief rather than a temporary relief, although when we find a man in the gutter the proper thing to do is to pick him out of the gutter and get him on his feet. That is one thing that we ought to do and which will not admit of delay, but a better thing than that would be to remedy the cause that put him in the gutter, remove the cause that brings about unemployment. To a great extent I think it can be done. I would not suggest the remedy that I propose to offer if it had not been that the Senator from Iowa had said, "If you do not favor this bill, what do you favor?" That is a proper question, too, and I admit it.

One of the difficulties of the situation is that we can not get enough Senators to think alike on any one thing. I thought I had a remedy. I say, "I." I was only an instrument in the hands of the committee—both in the Senate and in the committee—and had no more to do with it than some others. As I looked at it, one of the troubles in the country was that we had overproduction, as we always do, of agricultural products. There was no instrumentality by which they could be taken from the field of production to the field of consumption across the sea, where millions of people were hungry for the food that was rotting in the farmers' fields in America. But they did not have the money to pay cash. The farmer could not sell on time. The middle man, the speculator, was the only one who could bridge the chasm. I think if the Government would bridge that chasm temporarily it would be accomplishing the greatest of any one of the steps that could be taken to relieve distress both in our country and abroad. If we would furnish a market for the surplus agricultural products of America, we would have no unemployment question to-day. I do not believe any student of conditions will deny that proposition, although we will disagree as to how that undesirable condition was brought about. But I was defeated in my proposition, although I had given to it more work within a certain length of time than I had ever spent on any other question that I have ever tried to solve. The administration was too much for me. Mr. Hoover's power was too much. Mr. Meyer, of the Finance Corporation, with the prestige and the power of the President of the United States, was too much for me. Those who agreed with me went down to defeat.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. It was my very painful duty as I saw it to differ from the Senator from Nebraska about that bill. I differed with him on that subject, and I am not dead sure that I was right about it, but I followed my inclination and did the best I could with the question. I would like to ask the Senator how his corporation could have relieved the situation in this country or abroad when the volume of currency was being reduced at the rate of about $80,000,000 a month?

Mr. NORRIS. I am not intending now to discuss in detail the proposition that I had in the Senate and which the Senate voted down, as they had a right to do of course. I am only answering the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, which I think is a proper one, "If you oppose this bill, what is your proposition?"

That was not the only thing in the bill that I wanted to oppose, and was not the only thing that I thought was wrong with the situation. It was not the only thing I included in the remedy. I did not include what the Senator from Georgia has suggested, although I am ready to admit I believe, with him, that the deflation of the currency brought about by the Federal Reserve Board was one of the causes that brought on a good deal of the unemployment. I am not sustaining that. I think that is another thing that ought to have been done differently from the way in which it was done. I think a great deal of our trouble has come about from the fact that the currency and the credits, particularly of the agricultural sections of the country, were deflated by the action of the Federal Reserve Board at too rapid a rate, and so brought ruin.

But, Mr. President, there is another thing that is the trouble with us and that has something to do with the unemployment proposition. That is the question of transportation, and I included that in my proposition that went down to defeat.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator if he does not think it is wrong principle to encourage people to look to the Government for employment. Does that tend to build up industry?

Mr. NORRIS. I think we ought, if we can, to legislate to so control conditions in the country that those terrible depressions will not come, but when they do come or if they do come and suffering results, as it always does, I am willing then as a Government to go where I would not go in ordinary times to help the situation, and to almost any length.

Mr. President, there is nothing we use or eat or wear or consume but what has a part of its cost made up of the item of transportation. It is in our clothing. It is in our food. It is in our furniture. It is in our homes. It is in everything, so that it has been very carefully estimated that one-half of a man's lifetime is spent in working to pay the railroads for transportation. I do not complain of that condition of things. That is necessary to make up our economic welfare. Transportation enters into everything. Therefore every man, woman, and child is interested in transportation; is interested in seeing that the profit is taken out of transportation.

But our great transportation systems are founded upon the theory of profit and nothing else—getting all that the traffic will bear. I do not complain of the men who are in it. That is their right. We have railroads built sometimes where there ought to be no railroads, sometimes where there are too many railroads, sometimes where there are not enough, sometimes where there are none when there should be some. The only thing that ought to be taken into consideration is the instrumentality that goes to make up the common good of humanity, and transportation is one of the elements that make it up.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I fully agree with my friend the Senator from Nebraska about the immense cost of transportation. I know that the rates in my part of the country are very nearly prohibitive. The Senator knows, as I do, that the Government has built and is successfully operating a magnificent railroad in Alaska. I think we are also operating one in the Canal Zone.

I would like to have the Senator from Nebraska indicate how we are going to remedy the transportation question unless and until the Government takes charge of the railroads and pays for them honestly and operates them like it does the post offices.

Mr. NORRIS. I say to the Senator that I do not know any way to do it until we do that, and I am not brought to that conclusion because I want to reach that conclusion, but I am brought to that conclusion by what I believe to be the inevitable logic of the situation.

Transportation is one of the things that is raising the devil with the country and the people who are in it now. Everybody knows that. They do not have to be told that. Transportation or freight charges, and that is the important part of it, on the railroads of the United States are so high that they actually prohibit the consumption of a great many things that the people would consume if transportation charges were reasonable.

When we had the other question before the committee, when the committee had the hearings, I had an interview with one of the great railroad heads of the United States, a man whose name every Senator would recognize if I mentioned it, one of the best railroad men in the world. In my judgment, so far as I know him, he is a gentleman of very high attainments, square and straight. He came to see me about the proposition that was then pending before the committee.

We spent several hours going over it, and he was very honest, I thought, and very free in telling me just what he thought, although our conversation was not, of course, for publication, so far as his name is concerned. After I had told him of the information that came to me of agricultural products rotting on the ground, like hay and similar things, that had to be shipped within a reasonable time or they would spoil, he said, "You are looking at it from a patriotic standpoint; you are looking at it from a standpoint that I will admit is right. You are viewing transportation from a different viewpoint, however, than that from which I am compelled to view it. I am not criticizing you for the viewpoint you take," he said, "but look at it for a moment now from the railroad owners' standpoint. You have your wheat, your corn, your oats, your barley, your potatoes, and other farm products stored up. You say the freight charges are so high you can not ship them. The railroad man knows that before you can get those products from the place of their production to the place of their consumption you will have to patronize the railroads, and if he does not get the business to-day he will get it to-morrow. If he does not get it this week he will get it next week. So why not look on it from the point of the man who owns the railroad and who wants to make some money out of it? Therefore there is a question involved whether from that viewpoint he is not right in saying, 'I will get a bigger profit if I keep the rate high enough, although I may have to wait a little longer to do the work and to some extent some of it will be spoiled and I will not be able to haul it all, but I will make more money in the end if I take that course than I will if I reduce the rates.'

My contention is that in a time like this, when we know that in many agricultural products—products of food—one section of the country has an abundance which other sections of the country can not have or get, that if the freight were paid—whatever had to be paid—out of the Federal Treasury it would be a good step and would get the products to move from the producer to the consumer rather than to have them rot or spoil or moved at a price that brings ruin to one class of our people if they have to buy them or to the other class of our people if they have to produce them, or perhaps to both, and the middleman get all the cream there is.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything about this. I only do it because of the very pertinent and proper suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, "If you criticize this, you ought to have something else in view."

I know that what I have proposed failed to receive a majority of the votes of the Senate, but still I am clear in my own conscience, at least, when I comply with a request which I think is reasonable and suggest what I believe to be a remedy that will at least afford some relief.

Mr. President, there are some other features of the bill which I do not like. I want to be constructive; I do not want to be always tearing down. I would rather help to get something through that will do a little good than to prevent something going through which, in my judgment, may do some harm.

It seems to me if it is desirable that the Government of the United States should take steps to relieve unemployment in times of depression by constructing public works, and if it is advisable by law in advance to get ready for such a condition rather than to wait until it comes, a simple law making an appropriation and placing the money in the hands of the President to be used in his judgment for the improvement, let us say, of rivers and harbors, the erection of public buildings, the development of water power, the construction of reclamation projects, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] suggests, the draining of swamp lands, even the building of homes for laborers and disposing of them on time, almost anything that would bring employment, would be better than to provide an elaborate scheme by law under which somebody shall look into the future in order to see when depression is coming and tell everybody about it, so that all may be ready for it, the theory being that they could all escape it. As a matter of fact, it would only bring it on that much sooner. It may be that the best thing to do would be to make an appropriation when a particular condition arises. For instance, we have unemployment now. Instead of passing this bill, which is general in its terms, why not, if we consider that we ought to do something in order to relieve the unemployment situation, make an appropriation to construct some great public work, to build some great road, to develop some great water power, and set the Secretary of War and his engineers at work, and let them employ as many men as may be needed to carry it on? I should think that would be much more practicable and bring better results in the present situation than a bill such as that which is now before the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I supported the bill of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], although I was not certain that it would bring the relief to the agricultural interests that the proponents of the bill had hoped. I regretted that certain interests saw fit to defeat the bill. I think it was a mistake, but to defeat the pending bill would not revive that one.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arkansas a question before he proceeds?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator this question: If agriculture were prosperous, and if producers had a market for their surplus products, is it the judgment of the Senator that there would be any unemployment now?

Mr. CARAWAY. I think it is exceedingly doubtful that there would be. I supported the measure of the Senator from Nebraska, as he doubtless will recall, and I regretted that certain influences saw fit to defeat it. The Senator very correctly, I think, diagnosed the influences which brought about the defeat of the measure. Opposition came from the administration, but, I repeat, it would not revive that measure nor change the attitude of the administration toward it to defeat the pending measure.

I do not think this bill is going to prevent all the unemployment that is to occur in the future, but, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] said much better on yesterday, here is a measure that business men, members of boards of trade, chambers of commerce, industrial experts, men who employ labor, men who develop enterprise, have said they believe would be helpful. On the other hand, organized labor has said that they were impressed with the possibilities of the measure. Men who employ labor and the labor which produces wealth alike have asked Congress to give them this legislation.

The bill is not to cost the Government anything. In my brief service in the Senate this is the first measure that I have seen come before the Senate that offered to help somebody without costing the Government something to do it. The bill does not propose an appropriation; it does not look for an appropriation; it does not make a place for somebody; it does not create soft snaps for political supporters and henchmen. It simply provides that with the ordinary intelligence with which men look forward in their own business and make their arrangements for future transactions the Government shall look forward to the welfare of its citizens. I do not think any man in the world ever made a success of his own business who let everything drift until the situation had developed and he was compelled to act. He must look to the future and lay his plans. This measure does not provide, as the Senator from Nebraska seems to think, that the Secretary of Commerce shall predict panics; but if the Secretary of Commerce retains his common sense—although I have sometimes thought when people get into office they throw their common sense away—he will know, as we all know if we look into the future, that when prices are abnormally high and we authorize public works we pay more than they are worth. Usually Congress gets busy and provides appropriations for public works when everybody has a job, when material is selling at the very highest peak of the market. This bill says that the Secretary may, with the consent of the President, hold back the construction of certain improvements that have been agreed upon, and when periods of depression occur the contracts may be let. The Government will get the advantage of having them constructed when material is cheapest, when labor is lowest, and, on the other hand, men will be afforded an opportunity to work who otherwise would be, as the navy-yard workers here in the District of Columbia find themselves without warning, out of employment.

If somebody had had the power to look ahead and withhold contracts which have been let at exorbitant prices to private enterprises and which could have been performed in the navy yards, there would have been work to-day for the 1,300 or 1,400 men who are to-day walking the streets of Washington without a job.

I do not know what harm the bill can do. There is nothing in the measure, if the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me for saying so, that compels the Secretary of Commerce to say that there is to be a panic next year or the year after. It simply provides that he shall hold back a certain amount of each appropriation each year, and when such a condition develops that men commence to be thrown out of employment and when business seems to be going to pieces, instead of publishing the fact that there is a panic, he is to commence to construct public works and to that end to employ men who are thrown out of private employment and set them to work for the Government building public highways, constructing irrigation plants, improving rivers, erecting post offices, or doing any of the innumerable things which the Government must do. That is not advertising that we are going to have a panic; it is simply throwing out a life line when we feel the symptoms of an approaching panic. If there is any harm in that, if it is something that the Government ought not to do, if there is anything unwise or unpatriotic in it, I am curious to know wherein it lies.

We ought to do something that will enable the Government to save money and at the same time help men to help themselves; and that is all the measure does. There is nothing in it anywhere that directs or authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to proclaim that we are to have a panic, and thereby bring it on, as the Senator from Nebraska said, a year in advance of its actual coming. The bill simply says that each year he shall hold back a certain amount of public work until it is apparent, when everybody knows, when the material market and the labor market disclose the fact that men are out of employment, and that then would be a good time and a cheap time and a wise time and a patriotic time to carry on the public improvements, to construct the public works, and to give idle men jobs.

I myself was a little astonished to see the opposition to the bill. It did not develop in the hearings; no one there suggested the possibilities of evil or the unwisdom of the legislation. Nobody had intimated that it was a power given to the Secretary of Commerce to divine when a panic is due and therefore to proclaim it and bring it on. Such ideas, I am frank to say, seem to have arisen more out of the apprehension and distrust that the Senator from Nebraska entertains of the present Secretary of Commerce than out of anything that really appears in the bill itself.

I think it would be rather unfortunate in this hour of stress to say to people "we are not even willing to try to guarantee that this kind of a condition shall not overtake you next year or the year after or the year after that; we are not willing even to put on the statute books a law that does not cost the taxpayer a single penny. It struck me as about the only unselfish, wholly disinterested measure that the present administration has recommended, and I was delighted to find myself able to agree with it for once. I am astonished that the members of the administration's own party are unwilling to trust it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss this bill in detail, but I can not permit some of the suggestions to go by without saying something to keep the record straight regarding certain policies pursued by the Republican Party.

The unemployment of labor to-day is due solely to the Republican administration; of that there is no doubt on earth. When the deflation policy commenced, which was started by a resolution adopted by the Senate which was Republican at that time, as now, the resolution having been submitted by a Republican Senator from Illinois, it so injuriously affected agricultural products that they became a drug upon the market; the purchasing power of the farmer was destroyed; the debt-paying power of the farmers in the South and the West was destroyed; the merchant in the South and West commenced to cancel his orders; and the manufacturer, confronted by a cancellation of orders, saw there was nothing for him to do but shut down his plant, and that is what followed. The farmer was stricken down by this policy. The merchant was stricken down with him by this policy. The local banks could not get the money necessary to carry on the business of the community. A collapse came and the industrial centers felt it. The manufacturing centers felt it. They got in out of the storm by closing their mills and turning the people out into the streets, and they have roamed the country unemployed from that day to this. What caused it? The contraction of the currency and the curtailment of credits. These two are the life-giving forces in the business of the Republic. Withdraw either one of them and you seriously cripple and injure business. Withdraw both of them and you paralyze it; and that is what you have done. These little smelling salts that you want to pass around to these afflicted people will not serve the purpose. They are sick, they will have to have relief, and you will have to go to the root of the evil.

Mr. President, when the money changers of Wall Street used to produce panics in this country—and they are the authors of every one of them that we have ever had—they used to say: "The panic has come because the gold supply of the country has gone abroad. That is what caused the panic." Why, they palmed off one flimsy reason after another on us through the years, but we have gotten our eyes opened. We know what the evil is now. We know what produced this, and we are going to it. We do not expect to be deterred and waved aside by little suggestions of perfume, of bouquets of flowers on the center table, and passing around the smelling salts. Somebody is sick, seriously sick. An operation is necessary. It will have to be performed before physical strength and vigor will return, and we are going to perform that operation. If you will not perform it, the Democratic Party, which has never failed the people, will perform it when it comes back into power.

Did you have any of this trouble when we were in power? When Congress was under Democratic control was anybody out of employment? When Woodrow Wilson—God bless him—was in strength in the White House was anybody out of employment? Was there any idle industry in the land? Were there any hobos roaming the country begging for bread? Not one. We destroyed your hobo army under Democratic rule. Why? Because we unloosed the instrumentalities that affect the vital life of the Republic. We turned loose the money supply and made it flow where it was needed to meet the demands of business. We unloosed the credit supply and made credits flow where they were needed to meet the demands of business, and everybody was employed, and prosperity was here.

Money was flowing freely, credits were in abundance, and we had nation-wide prosperity under Democratic rule, and you have destroyed it. You have destroyed it in three years' time. You have controlled Congress for three years, and now you have control of the White House, and you have to come here with a measure to provide something through the Government to furnish employment to labor, when all that you have to do is to break the jaws of the wicked and pluck the spoil out of their teeth and let the money in the country go where it is needed, and let the credits go to meet the demands of the people.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I beg to remind the Senator from Alabama that under this administration a governmental agency has been destroying the only good paper money in the world, and doing it at the rate of more than $80,000,000 a month, until the entire destruction of that paper money has nearly reached two thousand million dollars.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, that is another evidence of the destructive work that is going on—drawing in this money supply, taking it away from people who need it, and need it more than ever. Instead of sending them more, they are taking away what they have.

What do you do on a firing line, as I said once before, if your ranks are becoming thin? You send more men there to strengthen it, and to fill the gaps, and you keep on sending them until you serve the purpose of the day. Are we going to do that in this case? Money is scarce. Credits can not be had. What is the duty of the Government? To send reinforcements, to send money and credits to the locality, and help tide over the people, when not a hundred thousand or a few hundred thousand, but sixty millions out of our population are actually in distress at this hour.

Senators may not believe that, some of them who are in comfort and ease and in luxury, but there are sixty millions of American people, nearly two-thirds of the population, that are ill at ease, whose business is not prosperous, and many millions in that sixty million are literally ruined in their business.

Mr. President, there is more money in this Republic to-day than has ever been in it in all its history. Our gold supply is greater than we have ever had, and here you are in control of the Government. Every branch of it is in your power, and you are utterly helpless and impotent before the financial lords of Wall Street. They will not let you break the forces that bind the money supply and the credits of this country. You have a Federal Reserve Board that is thoroughly discredited before the business men of the country. The banking interests are intimidated. They are afraid of that power, and yet this board has literally the control of the money supply and credits of 100,000,000 people, and you hug it to your bosom; you will not drive it from power.

Why is it that you will not do that? What is it that holds this board in power when it is doing things that make for the hurt and injury of your country? Why is it that you will not smite these men and drive them out as unworthy public servants? I do not know, but you will not do it. You know when we wanted to put a farmer on the Federal Reserve Board it was rumored around here that Wall Street said that Gov. Harding had to remain on the board, after he had served them so well during your campaign of 1920. He gave his support to the Republican ticket, according to an editorial in the Washington Times of April 12, 1920. How did they get that impression if he did not give it to them? He was flushed then with the idea that he was going to stay in. He had been a sort of a Democrat under the Democratic administration, and when the Republicans came in he was a very clever Republican.

You have heard the story about the bat that wanted to fight when the war was on between the animals and the fowls, and he went on the side of the fowls and fought a while with outspread wings; and then when it looked like the fowls were going to be whipped he folded his little wings and ran with the rats, and so passed off as an animal. That is what this gentleman did, and you kept him in. I pointed out to you here that he supported the Republican ticket, and that that was a part of the plan, and that he bore down with that deflation policy more strongly during the months of September and October than ever before, and that was just prior to the November election. Now he has his reward. You are keeping him in power.

There he sits, serving the interests of Wall Street; and here we are, with that situation upon us, undertaking to pass little soft-soaping measures to relieve some situation temporarily. How much further will this thing go? When will the people rise up in their might and in their majesty and demand that this Government have its independence of Wall Street? When will the people assert themselves and say that the banking institutions of this country shall not be dominated by Wall Street?

That used to be so, Senators. We took away from Wall Street this power. They fought the Federal reserve banking system to the death. They came here and hovered in this gallery, and they said to the Senate: "You will produce a panic when you pass that bill." They warned us of the dangers that would come under its operation, but we passed it in spite of them. We broke the power of Wall Street to control the money supply and credit of the country, and what happened? Prosperity flowed like a river. Localities got money that had never had a sufficient supply before. Localities enjoyed credits that had never had them before, and the country prospered under Democratic rule; but when you got in power, when you carried the House in 1918, just as we are going to carry it in 1922, something happened. Oh, yes; we are going to take the House, Senators. There is nothing in the world that will keep us from carrying the House. We ought to carry it. You carried it in 1918, and that meant that you were going to elect a President in 1920. We are going to carry it in 1922, and that is a fore-runner of the glorious news that will ring like a trumpet call around this afflicted Nation, that we are going to elect a Democratic President in 1924. God speed the day.

What happened when you got in power? The very day that the money changers of Wall Street saw you hungry, willing to fall for almost anything to get complete power, they said: "Here is our opportunity. It is 1918. The war is over. Let us pull down the curtain and start deflation, and we will have our feast time. Here it is. Yonder is the South, with her cotton crop that brings the gold supply of the Nation. Yonder is the great granary of the West, and yonder the cattle feeding upon the plains. We will operate there and operate yonder. This is our feast time. Go to the Republican Party and say, 'Here are all the campaign funds you want, provided you will put the deflation policy on now. We will put it on with you and help you to carry the country. If deflation is started, and its waves sweep the South and West before the election, thousands and hundreds of thousands of votes will turn away from the Democrats, because Wilson happens to be still President'; and there he was, prone upon his back. He did not know what was going on outside, and you had control of the House and the Senate, and then it was that this mischief was begun.

What do we see? We see the very Senators on the other side who fought the Federal reserve system when the law was enacted standing here defending the deflation policy, which proves my position to be correct, that as this board now operates the system it is as satisfactory to Wall Street as the old system was.

Mr. Warburg testified before the committee when this bill was up for consideration that the objections to it being a regional system instead of a central system could be overcome by administration. That is what he said. I never knew what that meant until I saw it done, and I have seen them overcome the regional plan by making it a central system, when they loaned to two banks in New York in November, 1920, $250,000,000 when they were lending to all the agricultural interests of the country only $15,000,000. What more proof do you want? That was the central system, operating under the Federal Reserve Board.

The Republican Party has the Presidency, they have control of this body, and they have control of the House, and they can turn that board out, they can legislate it out of existence, they can get rid of it; but they will not. Why is it that they will not?

I did not expect to say very much, Mr. President, but I do not intend that the country shall get the impression that times of depression in this country are necessary, for they are not. Whenever people in this country are out of employment, whenever industries stand idle, when local banks can not get money and credit to carry on the business of the people, it is the fault of the Government.

Why do I say that? When Mr. Roosevelt was President, the money changers started to produce a panic, and he sent $25,000,000 out of the Treasury up to New York and broke it up, and, I am told, threatened them and told them that he would send $75,000,000 more, and more. How did he break that panic? They said, "We are going to make money scarce, and we will make it so dear that every man who has to have a dollar will have to pay tremendous interest to get it, and we will just have a feast." Roosevelt said, "I will not let that happen. Here are $25,000,000, and I will follow that by more millions." And they said, "He has broken up our game."

Why should not the Government do that? If we sent $20,000,000 to help the starving people of Russia, why can we not compel the banks of this country under the board to send out Federal reserve notes to supply the communities which are literally dying for want of currency and credit?

Mr. President, the American people are getting more and more educated to the fact that this is their Government. I pray God that we will not stay long in the bondage of the old system which used to control this Government. The time was when Wall Street could produce a panic in 48 hours, because she controlled the money supply and credit of the country. Who took that power away? The Democratic Party, under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson. Where is that power now? It has gone back to Wall Street.

They are constructing a building over there to house the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] and I were talking about that to-day. The distressed farmers of his State are borrowing $8,000,000 through the War Finance Corporation, which is less than one-third of the cost of that bank palace, which is to have a swimming pool, gymnasium, cafeteria, and moving-picture show built in the heart of the Wall Street district, costing $25,600,000.

All that is going on under the Republican administration. Then Senators on the other side rise and say, "Let us pass the smelling salts around. Put a bouquet of flowers on the table, so that the hungry laboring man, as he perishes for food, may look upon the flowers."

It is the duty of Senators to cry out against this thing and to point the way to the root of this evil. Do Senators know what the President could do? If he were to compel the Federal Reserve Board to issue Federal reserve notes, send money out, and extend credit to the localities now impoverished, prosperity would blossom like the rose; but Wall Street is not going to consent to that. The money kings will not permit it, and the Congress of the United States, with 24 Republican majority in this body and 169 in the other, is impotent and helpless. It stands helpless before a long-suffering and afflicted people. That is the situation which confronts us.

One of our good friends on the other side said it was wrong to teach the people to look to the Government for aid. Mr. President, we established the Federal reserve banking system—and I helped to create it—for the purpose of giving the Government supervision over the money supply, to take it out of the hands of those who sucked the lifeblood of business like a vampire. We had witnessed that.

I had seen my section tremble beneath the brutal blasts of panic brought on by Wall Street time and time again, and cotton values would tumble down. They got our cotton crop for a song and held it until the price advanced—sat back reveling amongst their profits, clipping their coupons, as they did with the grain growers and the cattlemen of the West. I said that something ought to be done to change that, and so did a majority of the American people, and we changed it—gave the Government supervision of the money supply—and now those who speak for the Government are under the control of the same evil power which we denounced and broke away from.

What are Senators going to do? Somebody has to lead a crusade against the ramparts of Wall Street. Somebody has to sound the trumpet call to Americans whose sons bared their breasts on the battle fields 3,000 miles away to save this Nation from overthrow and save our liberties from being lost.

Somebody has to fight this great evil, Senators, or it will not be long before they will dominate every avenue of this Government for a long time. Let us fight now. Let us summon the men and women of America to battle and fight those interests to the death, surrendering not to those who charged a rate of interest running from 1 per cent to 87½ per cent. Think of charging a man 87½ per cent for the use of a dollar, as they did to a little bank in Alabama. One man borrowed $5,000,000 in New York, as I told the Senate the other day in a lengthy speech I made, and he had to pay a broker who indorsed the paper a commission of a million dollars. He took the other four million and paid it all back in six months' time. One million dollars!

What care they for wrongs and crimes?
Its dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes.

Money is the god of the ghouls of Wall Street. Gold is what they are trying to accumulate, and to-day the Nation has hoarded more gold than ever in all its history. We have more money in this country, I repeat, than ever in the history of the Republic.

What is being done with this gold? It is hoarded. It might just as well be dead and buried. What are they doing with credits? They are withholding them. What are the farmers doing? They are miserable, as I speak to you to-day. They do not know whether they are going to make a crop this year or not. They have little bright-eyed boys and girls around them who just a few years ago, under our administration, were happy, frolicking about in their glee, going to school, romping and playing upon the green, and now many of them are going away to the cotton mills, to overcrowd the cotton factories. The old roof-tree is gone, home is broken up, and the farmer is leaving for town. That is what is going on under this blighting, deadly touch of the Republican administration. Yet Republican Senators get up and suggest a little remedy, which does not go to the root of the evil. It is like spreading pictures on a wall to entertain people who are blind and starving. They are not reaching the trouble. They are not giving relief.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I gladly yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I will state this in connection with the conditions to which the Senator is referring: I went into the room of Judge BRAND the other night for a short talk after supper, Judge BRAND being a Member of the Georgia delegation in the other House. We were speaking of the situation, and he picked up a county paper, the official organ of one county in his district, which, as the Senator knows, embraces the beautiful city of Athens, and he called my attention to the fact that there were 35 different homes being advertised for sale for taxes in that county.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in line with what the Senator from Georgia has said, State Senator Mish, of the State of Maryland, appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry yesterday and told that committee about a small farmer, a man getting up in years, who owned his little farm over there, and owned stock, and when the crash came under the drastic, deadly, deflation policy, his farm was swept from under him, his stock were taken, and the old man brooded over it, broke down, went to bed, and died.

He told of another in the same community who lost his farm in like fashion, and he said, "Now, instead of living on that beautiful little farm he is insane, and is down in West Virginia in an asylum for the insane." There is no reason for that. As God is God in His heaven, there is no reason why that should happen in the United States.

The time will come in this country when the people will not submit, and should not submit, to a few men in Wall Street, or anywhere else, controlling the money supply and credit, and dishing out their favoritism, supplying the stock gamblers, as they do to-day. The stock gamblers of Chicago, I will say to my friend from Georgia, can get every dollar they want with which to speculate and beat down the price of wheat or corn or cattle. The gamblers of New York can get every dollar they want with which to speculate and beat down the price of cotton. So the only sources the Federal Reserve Board is supplying now by its policy, and has been supplying since the spring of 1920, are the people who are employing the money to further afflict the farmers. Is not that an evil indictment? Yet it is true as I speak to you to-day.

Now, Senators, let us try not to deceive ourselves. Here is the root of the evil. It is the money power. It is the way it is being manipulated to-day. What do they do out there in the rice country? They raise the floodgates and let the water come out and flood all the soil, and they do it at different periods. It has to be done in order to make a rice crop. Suppose the rice farmer goes up to the man who has control of the mighty system that holds the water supply and says, "I have come around for my periodical supply of water. I must have it right away. My rice is suffering, and it is just right for it now. If I can not get the water I will not make a crop." He is told, "We have decided not to supply you with any water." "If you do that, do you know what you are doing?" "No." "You will cause me to turn off 500 men, who are working for me, and each one of them has a family. You will cause people that I supply with rice to be hungry and suffer. You will cause the rice mills to shut down, because they have to have rice to work with, and all the products that come from rice, every industry all along the line, will be injuriously affected, and you will destroy my business."

That is exactly what is done with the money supply and credits. The farmer stands in the market place, God bless him, having toiled the year through, oftentimes with his own children and his wife. He comes up with his produce to the market place and says, "Here I am. This is the fruit of my toil." They say, "Well, we are very sorry to tell you, but we have just heard from the market to-day and the price of your produce has gone off, oh, a great deal." He says, "Well, I can not afford to sell at that price. I just can not afford to do it. If I sell at that price I sell below the cost of production. If I sell below the cost of production I have lost on the entire year's crop instead of making anything. I am going backward instead of forward, and yet I am a producer."

The produce with which to feed and clothe mankind is produced by that man, and you confront him with a market where the price does not warrant him in continuing in that business. So he says, "I will not sell it at that figure." They say, "Well, what are you going to do?" He says, "I am going down to the bank, as I used to do under Democratic rule, and I am going to borrow money on my produce and I am going to use my price-fixing power, which I have a right to do, to sustain myself and provide for my family. I am going to hold this stuff off the market until the price will go up to where it will cover the cost of production and give me a little profit. I am entitled to that." "Oh, yes; you are entitled to it, but we are afraid you can not get it at the bank." "Why?" "Because you have agricultural products." "I see where they are borrowing money in Wall Street to speculate with. Why don't you think they will let me have it?" "Because they have liquid assets in Wall Street. They can turn them over very quickly, but you have products of the soil and they are not going to let you have any money. We are afraid you can not get it."

He goes down to the bank under this deflation policy started by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] and says to the banker, "I have some cotton out here and some wheat and I want to borrow a little money on it. Here are my warehouse receipts." The banker says, "I would be delighted to let you have it; I have let you have it all along, but I have heard from the Federal Reserve Board not to loan money to hold cotton for speculative purposes." He says, "I have to hold it until I get a price that will cover the cost of production." The banker tells him, "I would let you have the money, but we can not get it when it is to be loaned on cotton and wheat."

There is the story in a nutshell. The farmer drops his head in the market place and stands sad and despondent in the country where his own boy has gone 3,000 miles away to fight to save the Nation in the hour of its peril. Senators, do you contribute to American patriotism with a process like that? Do you contribute to stalwart manhood through a process like that? Do you, through a process like that, make for a happy, cheerful, noble womanhood—a process that grinds down the women of the country who are to be the mothers of the race?

What happens to that man? He says, "Well, what am I to do?" They say, "We see that cotton and wheat will be lower to-morrow than it is to-day, because as soon as the news is spread abroad that they are not going to let you have money, it will go on down and down." He says, "Yes; I guess that is so, but if I have to sell now, then what I have will not even pay what I owe." They say, "Yes; that is the situation." He says, "But I promised my wife and my children that I would bring some things home to-day. Christmas is approaching, and I have promised them shoes and clothes and hats. I have been doing that every year when I got a fair price for my produce, when I was doing fairly well and was prosperous, and now what I have will not even pay what I owe. How am I going to take those things home to them?"

I see this farmer in his empty wagon going back home, and I can see his children coming out and greeting him as they hear the rattle of the wagon on the hilltop. They go out to meet "daddy" bringing the gifts home to them, and as they approach him a lump comes in his throat, and tears linger on the brink of his eyelids as he looks down upon his children, knowing that he will have to disappoint them.

They look over in the wagon and say, "Daddy, where are our shoes? Where are the things you brought us?" Daddy chokes up and says, "Well, I will get them the next time I go to town." He knows they can not understand the situation. He goes in the house and acquaints his good wife with the awful condition, and she tells the children, "That is all right; daddy will get them for you the next time he goes." The little children go to bed that night with heavy hearts, disappointed because their father had failed to bring the things he had promised. Instead of enabling him to do what he was able to do before, you have reduced him to that awful condition.

This feature is true of the South, it is true of the West, the great grain-growing West, and the cotton-producing South. These people are entitled to money to carry on their business. They produce the products that supply the world. They are entitled to credits. They are not getting those credits, and yet you are in charge of the Government, and the Federal Reserve Board sits right in the hollow of your hand, and Wall Street has a pipe line that leads to it, and it echoes only the sentiments of the gang that is pillaging and plundering your Nation and making bolsheviks and anarchists out of the greatest race of men ever created in the image of God.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I desire to read one paragraph from the letter of the President—

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Arkansas would object to our getting a vote on the amendment on which we have been trying to vote before he reads that letter. I suppose it will start some discussion that will carry us over to-night. We were just about to vote on an amendment which has practically been agreed on.

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he expects to get a vote on the bill to-night?

Mr. KENYON. This is an amendment I am asking to section 2, to meet objections raised by Senators last night.

Mr. DIAL. I understand that; but does the Senator expect to get a vote on the bill to-night?

Mr. KENYON. I would like to have a vote on the bill to-night, but I imagine what the Senator from Arkansas proposes to read from the President's letter will lead to extended discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I ask to have the amendment read for the information of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Substitute for subdivision (a) of section 2, on page 2, the following: "The Secretary of Commerce shall prepare and publish monthly reports as a supplement to the current survey of business of the Bureau of Census or otherwise concerning existing business conditions in order that the President, heads of executive departments, the Congress, the governors of the respective States, mayors of cities, persons engaged in industrial enterprises, and in agriculture may have more adequate, frequent, and reliable information upon the general industrial situation."

The amendment was agreed to.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to read one paragraph of a letter transmitted to-day by the President of the United States to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House [Mr. FORDNEY] in response to a plea, as I understand, that was made by the members of the majority party in the Senate and the House to the President to devise some means to pay the soldiers adjusted compensation. The President in this paragraph said:

I believe the American people will accept the levy of a general sales tax to meet the proposed bonus payments, and we should contribute thereby no added difficulties to the problems of readjustment. If Congress will not adopt such a plan, it would be wise to let the legislation go over until there is a situation which will justify the large outlay.

We were told by the President of the United States when he came to the Senate and made a plea to have recommitted the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill that when we should have made provision for the refunding of the foreign debt then the soldiers should have their just demands against the Government granted. There was to be some means devised to pay the bonus.

It was pointed out by us on the Democratic side of the Chamber when the Republicans in the Senate insisted upon repealing the excess-profits tax and the higher surtaxes and the corporation stock tax that they were destroying the best means of paying the adjusted compensation, but the Republicans charged that we were merely trying to make politics out of it, and that they, the Republicans, were going to devise a means that would meet everybody's objection and pay the soldiers an adjusted compensation.

Now the Republican Members of Congress have abrogated their right to determine what means should be adopted to raise the revenue. The majority party in both the House and the Senate have admitted their incompetency to determine these questions or to devise means of raising revenue, and have appealed to the President, and the President has listened to his advisers, whoever they may be I do not know, and has brought forth this scheme to pay the soldiers an adjusted compensation that would take from the soldiers every dollar the Government paid them.

In other words, he, the President, here presents a scheme under which the soldier would be compelled to pay himself; that the Government would levy upon a consumption tax on everything that he ate, every article of clothes that he bought, on everything he is compelled to purchase for any purpose a tax which would compel him to pay his own adjusted compensation. Under this scheme they are going to hand him an adjusted compensation, and immediately take it out of his pocket with a sales tax. They are going to take from him not only every dollar they give him as adjusted compensation, but in all the years that are to come are going to fasten upon him a scheme whereby he shall be compelled not alone to pay his adjusted compensation, but that he shall be compelled to pay the whole huge debt that this country accumulated in prosecuting the war. They will make him pay for the very uniform he wore in the trenches of France, for the gun that he carried when he fought the enemy of this country. They are going to take from the men who did the fighting the money to pay all the accumulated burdens of Government and to leave in the pockets of the rich, those who grew to be millionaires out of the advantages that came to them during the war, all that they accumulated. That is the scheme.

I know that all kinds of tax dodgers, men who want to keep what they have been permitted to plunder from the people, those who made excess profits, those who have grown rich at the expense of those who were willing to sacrifice for the war, are delighted with this scheme. It will not cost John D. Rockefeller any more under this plan than it will cost the boy who is walking the streets here in Washington looking for a job. It is a rich man's scheme; to enable him to avoid bearing his just share of the burdens of Government. It is the scheme of the crafty to put back upon the backs of the poor, the unprotected soldier boy the burden of paying not only his adjusted compensation, but for all his upkeep while he was a soldier beyond the seas. It is a hideous scheme. If it is accepted by Congress the rich do not pay anything; if it is not accepted the President says we had better let the legislation go over until we can find some other scheme to make the poor bear the burden and let the rich escape. That is all it means.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Arkansas if he is not in error when he says that the President is not within his authority in recommending taxes to Congress?

Mr. CARAWAY. Nobody said that. I said that the Senator's party in the Senate and in the other House admitted that they were impotent, that they had no power of devising a tax scheme, and they put it up to the President, so that the President could take advice of those whom he has been consulting and devise a scheme to put all the burden upon the poor and relieve the rich, and he did it.

RELIEF AGAINST DEPRESSION AND UNEMPLOYMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2749) to prepare for future cyclical periods of depression and unemployment by systems of public works.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, so much has been said about the power of the Secretary of Commerce under the pending bill—and I am sorry that some of the opposition seems to be because of dislike of the Secretary of Commerce—that I am going to move to strike out subdivision (b) of section 2, which reads:

(b) The Secretary of Commerce shall transmit, with his recommendations, copies of such report to the President, to the heads of departments, and to the Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. On line 1, page 3, I think the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has not been adopted. I agreed with him that I would move that amendment. I therefore move, after the words "the Secretary of Commerce," to strike out the word "shall" and to insert the word "may."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, for some months it has been a favorite indoor sport to subject the "agricultural bloc" first to vilification, then ridicule—

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator before he discusses the "agricultural bloc" if he will not let us vote on the pending bill? I think we are ready for a vote.

Mr. ASHURST. Requests which the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] makes can not be refused at my hands. I will be silent if it would pass his bill.

Mr. KENYON. That would be asking entirely too much of any Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President—

Mr. KENYON. If discussion is to continue on the bill, of course I shall not ask the Senator from Arizona to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, before a vote is had on the bill, I should like to submit to those Senators who are present that section 3 contains provisions very much like those in section 2, which were eliminated by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, who introduced the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to say to the Senator from Illinois that I requested the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who had taken the floor to make some remarks, to yield, so that a vote might be taken on the bill, supposing we had about reached that point; but if discussion is to continue on the measure I hope the Senator from Arizona may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. McCORMICK. I would be very happy to allow the Senator from Arizona to proceed. However, I do not feel free to let the bill go to a vote without an attempt to eliminate some of the language in section 3.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator from Arizona will continue his remarks, I shall meanwhile prepare an amendment to section 3.

ADVANCES TO AGRICULTURE BY WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, knowing so much about the subject upon which I intend to speak, I could conclude my remarks in two or three minutes. If it were a subject upon which I knew nothing, I could speak indefinitely; but having my subject fully in hand I could not "string it out" over three or four minutes.

I rose to say, Mr. President, that in the early spring and during the summer, and even until the chill November winds and rains came, a favorite indoor sport was the lampooning of the "agricultural bloc." I am not unfamiliar with the history of my country, and I have never heard nor read more bitter, vindictive things said about public men than have been said about the Senate agricultural bloc. One would think that those Senators were planning an assault on the Republic, rather than planning to try to assist that primal business, agriculture, in which some 45,000,000 people in the United States are engaged and upon which all people depend.

The time has arrived when even the boldest of those who formerly assailed the "agricultural bloc" have concluded that discretion is the better part of valor, and that they would better join the "agricultural bloc," being unable to drive its members from public life. So much for that.

The only standard or test by which a bill, a movement, or man should be judged—by what it or he has done.

There is not a man who would have the temerity to-day and no journal would have the effrontery to criticize the bill which the "agricultural bloc" last August drove through Congress amending the War Finance Corporation act.

Mr. President, I have a letter from Mr. Eugene Meyer, jr., managing director of the War Finance Corporation, in reply to a letter requesting information as to the amount of loans that had been made to agricultural interests in Arizona and loans that had been made to banking and financing organizations for the further stabilization of agriculture, as follows:

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, February 14, 1922.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: Referring to your letter of February 13, I take pleasure in sending you herewith a statement showing the advances approved by the War Finance Corporation from January 4, 1921, up to and including February 11, 1922. You will note from this statement that advances aggregating $2,583,000 for agricultural and live-stock purposes have been granted by the corporation to banking and financing institutions in Arizona, in addition to an advance of $1,200,000 to a cotton cooperative marketing organization.

Very truly, yours,

EUGENE MEYER, JR.,
Managing Director.

And, Mr. President, without going into further details I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a statement showing the amount of money which has been loaned to various fiscal institutions in each State to assist agriculture, and also a statement showing the sums of money that have been loaned to or furnished to farmers' cooperative institutions in each State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

OPERATIONS OF THE WAR FINANCE CORPORATION FROM JANUARY 4, 1921, TO AND INCLUDING FEBRUARY 11, 1922.

I. Advances to assist in financing exports under sections 21, 22, and 24 (Par. 2), approved from Jan. 4, 1921, to Feb. 11, 1922, inclusive.

RELIEF AGAINST DEPRESSION AND UNEMPLOYMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2749) to prepare for future cyclical periods of depression and unemployment by systems of public works.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harrell	McKellar	Smith
Borah	Harris	McKinley	Stanfield
Brandeggee	Harrison	McNary	Sterling
Bursum	Heflin	Moses	Sutherland
Cameron	Hitchcock	Nelson	Swanson
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Trammell
Caraway	Kellogg	Norris	Underwood
Curtis	Kendrick	Oddie	Wadsworth

Edge	Keyes	Page	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	King	Philpps	Williams
France	Ladd	Poindexter	Willis
Glass	Lodge	Pomerene
Hale	McCormick	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I move to amend section 3 so as to read as follows:

That the head of each executive department is authorized, by direction of the President, to postpone the date of the commencement or retard the prosecution of such portions of the public works and projects within his jurisdiction, or to enter upon a maximum program of public works and projects within the appropriation therefor, as in the judgment of the President may serve to mitigate excessive industrial expansion or economic depression and unemployment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is that in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. McCORMICK. I will offer it as a substitute.

Mr. KENYON. Then the last sentence, beginning with the word "Where," on line 8, should be added also.

Mr. McCORMICK. Yes; I desire to add to my amendment the last section of the present paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 3 so as to read:

That the head of each executive department is authorized, by direction of the President, to postpone the date of the commencement or retard the prosecution of such portions of the public works and projects within his jurisdiction, or to enter upon a maximum program of public works and projects within the appropriation therefor, as in the judgment of the President may serve to mitigate excessive industrial expansion or economic depression and unemployment. Where a time limit has been specifically provided within which any such work or project, or any part thereof, is to be commenced or completed, this section shall not be construed to extend or remove such limit.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is that offered as a substitute for the section?

Mr. McCORMICK. It is offered as a substitute.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment to section 3, so that it may be perfected before the vote comes on the substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 3, at line 22, by adding the following paragraph:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any appropriation made by Congress for the improvement and maintenance of rivers and harbors, irrigation projects, or flood control.

Mr. HARRISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of section 3, or in line 22, after the word "limit" and before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any appropriation made by Congress for the improvement and maintenance of rivers and harbors, irrigation projects, or flood control.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this amendment there is a demand for the yeas and nays. Is the demand supported?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi what other kinds of public works would be left?

Mr. HARRISON. Public buildings.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And good roads?

Mr. HARRISON. I think good roads probably should be included in this proviso.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not heard good roads mentioned in the proviso.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask to have my amendment modified so that good roads construction may be included.

Mr. KENYON. Why not include public buildings and make it complete?

Mr. HARRISON. We might delay some public buildings.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why not add "or any other public work?"

Mr. KENYON. Yes; "or any other public work."

Mr. WADSWORTH. My only observation is this: The amendment if adopted practically repeals section 3, to which I do not seriously object.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, of course the amendment destroys the bill. If it is desired to destroy the bill it may as well be done in that way as in any other. Section 3 now provides that where Congress places a time limit on any of these things the bill does not apply. Nobody could interfere then with the work at all, so that Congress can go ahead and decide, in the case of any of these projects, that it shall not be interfered with.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD]. He being absent, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KING. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. Has the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], and vote "yea."

Mr. STANLEY. I have a general pair with my colleague [Mr. ERNST], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on account of illness in his family.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 26—as follows:

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it is quite apparent that the amendment destroys the bill, and I suppose it was supported on that theory. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF DISABLED ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1565) making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

Mr. KING. Is the motion debatable, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is debatable.

Mr. CURTIS. If the bill is made unfinished business, I will ask the Senator in charge of it to lay it aside temporarily in order that we may go into executive session.

Mr. KING. I think the bill is so important that it ought to be debated some time before we determine to enter upon its consideration.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I had no intention of having the bill disposed of to-day, but I think it ought to be taken up for consideration and made the unfinished business. This bill has been on the calendar for nearly six months. It affects 1,900 disabled soldiers, it is a very important measure, and it is certainly entitled to the consideration of the Senate. Opportunity should be given to Senators to consider the bill. All I ask is that it be considered and that we may have a vote on it. I have no desire to attempt to press it to a final vote this evening. I have simply moved that it be taken up for consideration, so that it will be the unfinished business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is not a bill in the interest of the soldiers at all. As I understand it, it is a bill in the interest of certain officers, and a bill against the interests of the privates and other ex-service men. It is a bill in the interest of discrimination in favor of certain men who participated in the World War.

My friend has improperly diagnosed the bill when he labels it a bill in the interest of soldiers. It is a bill to enable a number of individuals who rendered no greater service for the country than millions of soldiers to obtain benefits and emoluments and privileges denied to the great body of the fighting men of the Army.

I am sure the Senate, if they have a chance to examine the bill and ascertain its implications and what it means, will not consent to even consider it. It seems to me we should not take it up to-night. The Senator from Kansas is anxious for an executive session. I do not care to enter into a discussion of the bill, because it would take considerable time to analyze it and point out all its serious defects, which I intend to do preliminary to the adoption or rejection of the motion which is now pending. I suggest, if the Senator from Kansas wants an executive session, that we had better take it before entering upon a discussion of this measure.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I feel very sure that if Senators knew just what the bill proposes to do they would conclude that the time of the Senate could be better occupied in legislation in the interest of the people than in taking days for the consideration of this measure. I shall not take the time now to discuss it at length, but there are a good many Senators present and I want to give them an idea of what the bill would do.

It is intended to change the law with reference to disability compensation for officers. It proposes to give an officer who has a 30 per cent disability a compensation of $3,000 per year, where a private with the same disability will receive $360 a year. It proposes to give a compensation of $3,000 a year to an officer with a 30 per cent disability.

Mr. BURSUM. What class of officers?

Mr. LENROOT. A colonel.

Mr. BURSUM. There are other officers than colonels.

Mr. LENROOT. I am speaking of colonels for the time being. A colonel with a 30 per cent disability will get $3,000 a year, where a private with both feet cut off will get $1,200 per year.

Furthermore, with regard to officers of different grades, the bill proposes to give to a colonel having a 30 per cent disability or more a compensation of $3,000 per year, while a second lieutenant with the same disability, and his disability more usually incurred on the firing line than that of a colonel, because he was usually in a place of greater danger, will have a compensation of $1,275 a year.

Now, for a moment, because I only want to outline what the bill proposes to do, let us take two men coming from the same walk of life, each having the same education, each receiving the same salary in private life. One goes to an officers' training camp and gets a commission, the other enlists as a private. I wish to pause right here to ask which of the two would Senators consider the more patriotic?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand, of course, that the Senator from Wisconsin is opposed to the bill on its merits. The bill has been reported here by a committee of the Senate and has been reported favorably. It is on the calendar. Does not the Senator from Wisconsin believe that it should be taken up and disposed of somehow? Of course, I am not undertaking to express any views regarding the bill itself; I do not think upon this motion it should be done; but it does seem to me that the matter ought to be taken up and disposed of. I think my colleague is quite right in insisting that the measure should be discussed and should be disposed of on its merits.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection in the world to taking up the bill and disposing of it on its merits whenever we do not have on the calendar any bill of greater importance and one that should have particularly the right of consideration. That is my position. There is a bill on the calendar reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] desires to get up, that is of tremendous importance to the country and ought to be considered at the very earliest possible moment. Instead of that, is the time of the Senate to be occupied in the consideration of a bill of this kind so discriminatory, so unjust?

Let me say to the Senator from New Mexico that if the bill should become a law and then we consistently follow in legislation in accordance with the terms of the bill, the bonus bill which will soon come up will be a mere drop in the bucket compared with the expenditures for which this bill will furnish a precedent in the future. That is why I do not believe the Senate ought at this time to enter into the consideration of the bill.

Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was calling attention to the discrimination between officers of the different ranks upon this compensation. A colonel having a 30 per cent disability under the provisions of the bill would get $3,000 a year, and a second lieutenant with a total disability would get $1,275 a year. Is there any Senator who can justify legislation of this character?

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. Is not that the precise rule in the Regular Army at the present time?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURSUM. Is there any reason why there should be one rule for the Regular Army and another rule for the emergency officers? Are they not both constituted of flesh and blood and bone? Having rendered the same service, why should we not give them exactly the same treatment?

Mr. LENROOT. If the junior Senator from New Mexico were a little more familiar with the subject and the reasons that exist for granting retirement pay in the Regular Army, he would not ask that question. What is the reason for retirement pay in the Regular Army? The retirement pay has always been, or at least ever since I have known anything about legislation, one of the inducements to enter into the Regular Army as a profession. It is held out to the young man that if he gives up the thought of private and independent income, if he enters the Regular Army as a profession, at the end of a certain time, or upon reaching a certain age, because of the fact that he will have had no opportunity to secure a competence for himself, he will be retired with three-quarters pay. If in the meantime he is disabled in the military service he will likewise be retired with three-quarters pay.

But there is the broadest distinction in the world between retirement in the Regular Army and the reasons for retirement that exist with reference to officers in the National or Emergency Army. In the first place, one is a matter of pure patriotism, serving the country where all were called upon alike. There is no call for all the young men to serve in the Regular Army; and for the sacrifices made in so serving, that are not required of the young men as a whole, this inducement is held out of retirement pay, both for disability and for service.

I think I have answered the Senator's question. I do not know whether the Senator is familiar with that or not. I will say that if the Senator has read the report of the Secretary of War upon the bill he knows that the Secretary of War is opposed to it and has made a report against the bill and has made very clear the proposition as to the distinction that prevails.

Mr. President, I spoke of two men, each coming from the same walk of life, each having the same education, each receiving the same salary in private life. One enters a training camp and becomes an officer; the other enlists as a private. Both are disabled, we will say totally disabled, if you please. Each has a family, if you please.

Under the present law the officer gets the same disability compensation as does the private, but when this bill passes, as to those two men, each making the same sacrifice, each receiving the same injury, one of them is to receive from his Government three times the compensation that the other receives.

Why, Mr. President, if this bill passes one thing will surely happen. The privates who served in the ranks do not know anything about the bill. If they did they would be against it to a man, unless they might feel that if the bill is passed they themselves could justly ask, as they could justly ask from their Government, an increase of their disability compensation the same as it is proposed to increase the disability compensation of officers.

That is an outline of what the bill does.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, has an estimate been made of how much money it will cost?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. I think the estimate was made that it would cost about $8,000,000.

Mr. BURSUM. One million six hundred thousand dollars will be the total cost under the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator can not refer to any official estimate of that kind?

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Of $1,600,000?

Mr. BURSUM. One million six hundred thousand dollars. It will affect 1,906 officers with an average pay of $1,562. Deduct from that the average compensation which they are now receiving, which will be approximately $700, and it will leave the net increase $1,600,000, not taking into account the vocational training in cases where they take vocational training. One of the strong reasons for the passage of the bill is the fact that the average age of the emergency officer is 10 years more than that of the enlisted man. The average emergency officer is too old to take vocational training and therefore he loses that opportunity which is given to the enlisted man and which would be available to him in case his age were such as to permit of taking it. There is no doubt about that and about the cost, but I submit, Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I must decline to yield further.

Mr. BURSUM. I submit in all fairness that the Senate should be willing to consider the bill. It is really unfair to undertake to debate the merits of the bill before it is brought up for consideration.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it is very proper to debate the merits of the bill before it is taken up for consideration, because otherwise the Senate could not know anything about whether it wants to consider the bill or not unless the merits of it are discussed.

Mr. BURSUM. They will know after it is brought up.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, any Senator would like to have a bill that ought not to pass taken up for consideration without any debate. I readily understand that.

Mr. BURSUM. It seems to me the report of a large majority of the Committee on Military Affairs should be sufficient testimony to show that the bill is entitled to consideration.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to see every bill—

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LENROOT. I am. I do not yield further to the Senator at this time.

I would like to see every bill reported from a committee and upon the calendar taken up for consideration. I hope the time will come when we can so amend the rules of this body that that can be done, but it is impossible now, and so long as a situation does exist where it is impossible to properly consider every bill reported from a committee, the Senate ought to show some discrimination as to the bills to be taken up with reference to their relative importance.

When the bill does come actually before the Senate, I think I shall be able to show that the Senator from New Mexico is utterly mistaken as to the amount of money that will be involved in the bill. In the first place, there were 200,000 officers or more in the late war, and I undertake to say there are more than 1,900 of them suffering a 30 per cent disability.

Mr. BURSUM. The records will not bear out that statement. There are 6,300 officers disabled drawing compensation, but there are only 1,906, as nearly as can be ascertained, who will be benefited by the passage of the bill. It is only those most seriously disabled, with a disability of 30 per cent or over—

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, the Senator from New Mexico, as the Senate ought to know, originally introduced a bill and tried to get the committee to give it favorable consideration, providing that if an officer had any disability, however slight, it would be ground for retirement in the Regular Army. Even though it was 1 per cent disability, even though it did not prevent him from participating in his profession, even though it did not cause him the loss of a dollar in his profession in private life, the Senator from New Mexico proposed to give a colonel in that case $3,000 a year where a private would get $360 a year.

Mr. President, I think the Senate can better occupy its time than in the consideration of such a bill as this, which is so grossly discriminatory, first against the private soldier and secondly against officers of the lower ranks in favor of officers of the higher ranks. I appreciate that our disability compensation law ought to be changed. I have proposed in the committee that I, for one, would be willing to so change it as to make the disability dependent upon loss of earning power, with a given maximum assigned to officers and privates alike, because if a private has made the same sacrifice as an officer, if he has undergone the same loss of earning power, who is there that will say the private under those conditions ought not to have the same compensation as the officer?

When the time comes, if the Senate shall take the bill up, I am going to move to recommit it to the committee, with a view of securing some legislation that will not be grossly discriminatory against the private, but will do justice to both the private and the officer alike.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that the Senator ask for a division.

Mr. BURSUM. Very well; I call for a division.

On a division the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1565) making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I be wrong in my understanding of this bill I desire to be corrected; and if I am correct, the bill proposes that an officer who was injured, say a colonel, shall be paid $3,000 per annum, but the private soldier will receive but one-third of that sum. Upon what theory of morals or justice is this discrimination justified?

I am in favor of a bill to compensate our injured and disabled officers and enlisted men without discrimination.

Mr. LENROOT. The private soldier will be paid less than one-third in a great many cases.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, since the bill has been taken up, and it is now quarter past 5, I am going to take the liberty of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURSUM. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment, so that I may make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to ask the Chair if the bill is now before the Senate, as the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has laid the bill before the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 17, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 16, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, truly Thy love is the greatest and the best thing in all the world! It never grows dim nor loses its freshness. How thankful we are that it has been guaranteed to us by Him whose precepts and examples flowed from the infinite tenderness of the divine heart. But we would not be deceived by its abundance or weary of our responsibility. Thou dost demand of us integrity, rectitude, and humanity. While duty does not always come easy, O help us to accept its compulsion. Bless us with the assurance that righteous duty bravely done brings rich reward with no lasting regrets. Enable us to live on, seeking Thy will, doing our best, and trusting to the end, and unto Thee be the honor and the praise. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10329, the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10329, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10329, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose when this bill was last under consideration a point of order was pending to the proviso on page 69 of the bill, the first paragraph. Is there anything further to be said on that point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the Chairman wishes anything further, I would simply call to his attention that the language in question is only an appropriation of funds to reimburse landowners for improvements on crops destroyed by the Government in connection with the construction of irrigation canals and drains on this project. The language eliminates any question of damage by reason of floods, and so forth, in connection with operation and maintenance. It is simply damages that occur in connection with irrigation canals and drains on this project. The project in question has been authorized, and no point of order would lie in reference to money for the purpose of construction. Furthermore, the act of December 21, 1904, is "an act authorizing the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands in the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington and providing for irrigation of lands upon that reservation."

The CHAIRMAN. What law is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. CRAMTON. Thirty-third Statutes, 595, approved December 21, 1904. The language I was about to read is from section 4 of the act, where it provides:

That the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, including the sums paid for mineral lands, exclusive of the customary fees and commissions, shall, after deducting the expenses incurred from time to time in connection with the appraisements and sales, be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the Yakima Reservation, and shall be expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the construction, completion, and maintenance of irrigation ditches, purchase of wagons, horses, farm implements, materials for houses, and other necessary and useful articles, as may be deemed best to promote their welfare and aid them in the adoption of civilized pursuits and in improving and building homes for themselves on their allotments.

The authorization is plainly for the irrigation work and the use of money for the construction of irrigation ditches. The act of last November also expressly gives full and express authority to administer the funds used for extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems, for the development of water supplies, so that now the only question there can be is as to whether the destruction of these crops is a necessary incident of the construction work. The facts are that this construction work and extension of lateral canals is one that can not be carried on, can not be extended, without the destruction of crops that are upon the land where the canals are to be constructed, and are a necessary incident to the construction work. The construction work is fully authorized and the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman point out in any portion of the language which he has read any authorization for reimbursing the Indians or white men owners for improvements or crops that have been destroyed?

Mr. CRAMTON. The constructions of the reclamation act, which is a kindred proposition, is similar work carried on under another branch of the Government, and have gone a long way in permitting the use of money in the reclamation fund on the theory that the use proposed was incident necessarily to the reclamation work, either of construction or operation and maintenance. It has been held that—

The authority of the Secretary respecting the use of the reclamation fund is to make preliminary investigations to determine the feasibility of any contemplated irrigation project, to construct reservoirs and irrigation works, and operate and maintain those thus constructed, and to acquire "for the United States, by purchase or condemnation under judicial process," rights or property necessary for these purposes. (California Development Co., 33 L. D., 391.)

Now, under that sort of an act the decisions have even gone to the extent of holding that while ordinarily the Government is not liable for the burial expenses of its deceased employees, payment of the reasonable expenses of a decent burial may be authorized when it is necessary for sanitary reasons to remove the remains of a deceased employee from the ground on which other employees are located.

That was sustained simply on the ground that that expenditure was a necessary incident to the work of construction, and it goes even further than the language that we are urging here. I cite another case:

Where a reservoir is being constructed under the reclamation act upon a site remote from civilization and 30 miles from the nearest school and it is difficult, without school facilities, to secure a proper supply of efficient labor for the needs of such construction, particularly bosses and skilled workmen with families, and the erection of a school building will aid in securing more men, induce them to remain longer in the service, and be in the interest of the Government, then the cost of such a building may be paid from the reclamation fund. (Comp. Dec., Sept. 24, 1917, In re Rimrock, Yakima.)

I submit that if it is a proper expenditure of reclamation money to use a part of those moneys for the burial of deceased workmen engaged on such a project or for the education of children of workmen engaged on such a project, it is clearly apparent that when you construct a lateral you take over certain ground to locate the lateral upon it, and when you dig your ditch you destroy growing crops on that land, which is a necessary incident, and the expenditure for it is entirely proper.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any analogy between the incidents cited by the gentleman under the reclamation act and this case. This is based, as I understand it, upon the language in section 4 of the act of 1904 and permits "the proceeds from the sale and disposition of the land to be expended for the benefit of these Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the construction, completion, and maintenance of irrigation ditches, purchase of wagons, horses, and farm implements, materials for houses, and other necessary and useful articles."

Now, there is nothing in that language that permits the reimbursement, not only of the Indians but of the white landowners, for improvements and crops destroyed by the Government in connection with the construction of irrigation canals and drains of that project.

Sometimes that is an incident of the right of condemnation, but this is a reimbursement for these things which they allege, or will allege, have been destroyed in this construction work; and I submit that there is nothing in the contention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Cramton] that the language is susceptible of permitting necessary incidents in the construction work to be included within that authority contained in the act of 1904. That is for the benefit and civilization of the Yakima Indians.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Would it modify the situation if, instead of the two words in the proviso, to which the gentleman has directed his point of order, "reimbursement of," there were substituted the words "payment to"? Then it would be suggested that you were providing that an arrangement be made at once for the purchase and sale of crops or the orchard to be destroyed.

Now, I think the gentleman has in mind that this language carries with it a sort of settlement of claims. That is not intended. This language is the language that has been carried in the bill in the past, and it has seemed advisable to let the settlement sometimes be made after the work shall have been completed and when it can be known what the damage may be. I think the words "payment to" would be just as well as the words "reimbursement of," and they mean exactly the same, except that it might be that the department would need to modify the time of entering into the transaction.

Mr. WALSH. I am not prepared to state that that would cure the objection which I think holds as to this language. I do not think there is any authority under the law for Congress to provide that we can pay money to the Indians or white men to reimburse them for improvements and crops destroyed in this construction work. That is all I care to say.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair, in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Cramton], to the act of June 17, 1902, creating the reclamation fund. It will be found in Thirty-second Statutes, 389, section 7, as follows:

That where in carrying out the provisions of this act it becomes necessary to acquire any rights or property, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire the same for the United States by purchase or by condemnation under judicial process, and to pay from the reclamation fund the sums which may be needed for that purpose, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States upon every application of the Secretary of the Interior, under this act, to cause proceedings to be commenced for condemnation within 30 days from the receipt of the application at the Department of Justice.

That, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, is a clear authorization for the item carried in this bill. And while this applies to the general reclamation fund, the point can not be made that it does not apply to Indian reclamation. It certainly could not be made to so apply in this case, because in this case the reclamation of these lands has been conducted not only by the Indian Reclamation Service but by the regular Reclamation Service of the Interior Department, and out of funds that have been appropriated regularly for that purpose. I think the language, with which the Chairman is surely familiar, is a clear and specific authorization for the item carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on this matter. The proviso which is brought in question by the point of order is, "That the funds hereby appropriated shall be available for the reimbursement of Indian and white landowners for improvements and crops destroyed by the Government in connection with the construction of irrigation canals and drains of this project."

It is stated that this is legislation, and that there is no authority for any such appropriation in existing law.

The act of November 2, 1921, in one clause gives authority to make appropriations for the following purposes:

For extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems, and for development of water supply.

Here is a plain authority to appropriate any sums of money which may be necessary for the extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems. It therefore becomes necessary to inquire somewhat into the powers that were given originally in forming the irrigation project mentioned in this section, which is, as the Chair understands it, a part of the Yakima Indian Reservation, or what was originally the Yakima Reservation.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] has called attention to the act of June 17, 1902, which is an act appropriating the receipts from the sale of certain public lands to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands, including lands within the State of Washington. That act plainly gives to the Department of the Interior the right to condemn, the right of eminent domain, with all the incidents attached to that general right, all of which are familiar to the Members of the House. Whether the project is built under the operation of that act or not is in some doubt, but plainly the right which was given in that statute has been construed by the Interior Department at least as a right which continues in all these projects, and the Chair is informed that the Interior Department is now exercising that right, has been for some years, and does it in almost every reclamation project which comes up. However, be that as it may, the Chair is of the opinion that section 4 of the act of December 21, 1904, is amply sufficient to authorize the appropriation. That act provides in section 4 thereof as follows:

SEC. 4. That the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, including the sums paid for mineral lands, exclusive of the customary fees and commissions, shall, after deducting the expenses incurred from time to time in connection with the appraisements and sales, be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the Yakima Reservation, and shall be expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the construction, completion, and maintenance of irrigation ditches, purchase of wagons, horses, farm implements, material for houses, and other necessary and useful articles, as may be deemed best to promote their welfare and aid them in the adoption of civilized pursuits and in improving and building homes for themselves on their allotments: Provided, That a portion of the proceeds may be paid to the Indians in cash per capita, share and share alike, if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior such payments will further tend to improve the condition and advance the progress of said Indians, but not otherwise.

The Chair is absolutely unable to understand how an irrigation system can be built without the acquisition of a right of way. If the acquisition of the right of way is incident to the building of an irrigation system, it follows as a natural consequence that the reimbursement of people who have lands destroyed in the taking of the right of way must necessarily be a part of the general power for building and constructing that irrigation system. If that is true—and the Chair has not much doubt of it in his own mind, although the matter, I believe, has never been determined before by any ruling in this House—the Chair believes that the authority exists in the law for paying such damages and that under the general authorization contained in the act of November 2, 1921, this appropriation would be in order.

However, the Chair may say that he can see no reason why the proviso is necessary. This may not be necessary in the decision of this particular point, but if the Chair is right about it the general fund of $250,000 embraced in the preceding clause of the section could be properly used for the very purpose that is set forth within this proviso. But the Chair is familiar with the fact that frequently these things are carried in bills because they have been carried in preceding bills, and that fact in itself does not make the provision bad even though the expenditure may be authorized by the preceding portion of the section.

The point of order is overruled.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Chair has just ruled, and rightly ruled, I think, that power is included in general legislation to provide for reimbursement of those who suffer damages in connection with these projects; but that is simply an eloquent illustration of the complexity of this iron circle of the Indian Bureau system. We are providing in this paragraph for reimbursement from Indian funds. We are taking money out of Indian funds without the knowledge or consent of the Indians. We are providing further that if any damage is done the Indians shall be reimbursed for their reimbursements. I submit to you that that is a part of this entire ridiculous system of Indian control, with its endless circle of complexities, which has been becoming more involved for 30 years.

Not only are the Indians already under bureau control enmeshed almost beyond hope but other Indians outside are being brought within the circle.

Some time ago I had a letter from an Arizona citizen asking me concerning the status of the Cocopah Indians. He declared that these Indians are subjects of old Mexico, aliens in this country, and yet are being dealt with under laws dealing with Indians on American reservations.

I wrote to the Indian Office asking for information and received a letter from the commissioner giving me the following statement:

As to the present status of the Cocopah Indians, you are advised that by Executive order of September 27, 1917, a reservation in Arizona, containing approximately 400 acres of land, was withdrawn "for the use and occupancy of the Cocopah Indians."

It was found that there were 17 families, containing 78 persons, all full blood Cocopahs, who had for a number of years resided in the United States. They were a backward band, homeless, and without school facilities and were believed entitled to consideration as American Indians.

We have no approved roll of the Cocopah Indians; but a tentative roll of the Indians who probably have rights on the reservation has been recently made by the superintendent of the Fort Yuma Reservation.

That is the way this wheel starts to revolve. In a few more years the system will be established and then will come irrigation schemes with reimbursables and all the other methods of perpetuation.

These Cocopah Indians should not be brought under the reservation system. They are aliens and should be treated as other aliens, in accordance with the laws of the States where they reside. A vast majority of the American Indians now held on the tribal rolls should be released and given a chance to take their places as citizens in the American community. Millions of dollars can be saved every year, and the Indians would be vastly better off than they are at present.

Of course, I know that the remedy can not be provided through this appropriation bill, but I do believe that the Indian Affairs Committee, which has given careful study to this whole problem, might well bring in a constructive solution for the present spendthrift policy which contains in itself many seeds of injustice. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For operation and maintenance, including repairs, of the Toppenish-Simcoe irrigation system, on the Yakima Reservation, Wash., reimbursable as provided by the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L., p. 28), $4,500.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 69, line 14, strike out the word "for" and insert the words "continuing construction"; and in line 18 strike out the figures "$4,500" and insert "$75,000"; and add "Provided, That the entire cost of the erection of the drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916."

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with much of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just said in regard to the Indians from Mexico to whom we owe no obligations. I also think we should give the Indians their full rights and liberties and withdraw this protectorate that we have held over them for a century. However, my amendment refers to the Yakima Indians, who were among the original owners of this country. They held in their possession millions of acres of land in the Territory of Washington when, in 1855, Gov. Isaac Stevens, the Territorial governor and acting Indian agent, negotiated a treaty by which they relinquished all their claims to millions of acres of land. They agreed to take 1,145,000 acres, upon which they were to have certain rights. They have carried out their part of the contract. They have been peaceful Indians. They testify to this day that the governor stated to them at that time that "as long as the sun shines and the rivers flow these rights are guaranteed to you by the Government." But, nevertheless, the Government rested on the Indian rights and the water was taken away from them, and, as the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] stated the other day, it became necessary on the advice of the joint congressional committee, which made a full investigation for us, to go out and buy a million dollars' worth of water in order to make good the guaranty that we had given these Indians. We are carrying out the provisions of that treaty in regard to what is known as the Wapato project. Not so with the Toppenish-Simcoe project, immediately adjacent to the Wapato project. It is the same land, the same Indians, the same watershed. There are 17,000 acres on the project, and $75,000 was appropriated for beginning the construction in 1918, and in 1919 $75,000 was appropriated; but since that time it has been cut down to operation and maintenance. In good faith white settlers went in there and leased from the Indians or bought from the Indians and proceeded to clear away at great expense and effort the sagebrush, making way for irrigation, which they thought was coming right along from the action of the preceding Congresses. Now, we have absolutely suspended that work.

There are about 1,100 settlers deprived of the means of livelihood; they did not go in there for speculation, but went in intending to establish homes on the land that they had a right to believe, with the policy that we had established and followed, was going to be continued. About 82 per cent of the land is owned by the Indians, and they feel that they are being discriminated against because their brothers are being made rich on the Wapato project while they, with a light fall of rain, are producing crops some years and nothing the next, because the rainfall does not guarantee a crop. There is abundant water there if the storage is completed that has been partly established. There is idle equipment on the project which was used but is now in storage. There is much idle labor on the project. Our obligation to all is apparent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and also for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will this $75,000 complete the project?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It will not. There are 17,000 acres there. The land, however, will be worth at least three times the cost of the construction, and the cost of the construction will be charged up against the land, and this is one of the Indian projects which is repaying.

Mr. R. K. Tiffany, president of the Washington Irrigation Institute, formerly head of the United States Reclamation Service in this section of the country, in a letter to Senator WESLEY L. JONES, writes as follows:

This is one of the very best projects in the Northwest, from which immediate benefits can be derived and where large acreages of fine, fertile land can be brought under cultivation within the next year or two. We have two very forcible reasons for extending reclamation work. The first is to provide an opportunity on the land for the return to it of thousands who drifted into industrial centers. Second, there are thousands of unemployed who need the work. It can be done more efficiently and at less cost than during the years just past, or than it can be done after the present depression has been overcome.

The one lasting cure for unemployment is employment, and to hasten the cure such irrigation work as this should be continued immediately. This is legitimate expenditure of money borrowed from the Government for the purpose of developing land which will furnish food for our people and is neither an extravagance or a form of charity. Eighty-three per cent of this expenditure is for labor, and the wages paid for such work is not a Government donation, but is repaid to the Government from the proceeds of this land.

It is society's duty to insist that the dozen reclamation projects already started by the Federal Government, but stopped last year in reply to the demand for economy, be carried on at once and continued until finished. Work during these times means less money spent for the upkeep of charitable organizations, jails, poorhouses, and the decrease of crime. For it is for protection and the welfare of our citizens of to-morrow we must constructively solve to-day's unemployment problem, and only as this solution is based on justice, decency, and sound economics will the solution of these problems be made as they should be.

The commencement and continuance of work on these irrigation enterprises means that the supplies for these projects comes from mills and plants of various kinds. It will start them, thus making work for thousands of men back in the eastern sections of the United States. Also as the land develops it must be supplied with agricultural implements, fencing, food, and all the various things that people consume. This in turn helps the eastern, or manufacturing sections, of the United States.

Seventeen arid States west of the Mississippi, made fertile through irrigation financed by the Government, produced during the war and now produces the crops on which we depend for our daily food. The men who raise these crops pay large taxes to the Government, and the production of food and the making of upright, honorable citizens of the generation which we are now caring for should be of vital importance to us. Money spent for this work is only a loan, and will be returned to the National Treasury.

There are 1,100 people living in the vicinity of White Swan, Wash., under the Toppenish-Simcoe irrigation project, who expected the continuation of that construction, who are there and must live. Eighty-two per cent of this land belongs to Indians and 18 per cent to the whites. Can there be any basis of justice, equality, or fairness in providing for continuance of construction or other irrigation plans of the United States and depriving these people of what is rightfully due them, as well as due other sections and other people? We feel that this is a grave injustice, and we know that it is causing privation and hardship, which should not be permitted under any Government project or organization in this land.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] has presented the merits of this project with the same intelligence and force that he did before the committee. The committee did not feel justified in increasing the estimates to the amount suggested. The amendment of the gentleman from Washington would involve an increase of $70,000 in the expenditures under the bill, and the committee hopes that the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Page 69, after line 18, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"For continuing construction for irrigation and drainage system on the Yakima Indian Reservation, adjacent to Satus Creek, $75,000: Provided, That the entire cost of said irrigation and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916."

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, here again we have the same Indians and very much the same conditions. Active work has not been begun on this part of the project. The surveys have been made and estimates have been made by the Government, revealing that it will cost about $53 per acre to put this land under irrigation. There is one especial reason why some amount should be appropriated in order that work might be begun and the waters of the Satus Creek protected for these lands. The waters of Satus Creek flow into the Yakima River and all of the water is being utilized and filed on lower down the river, and as time goes by we are going to find ourselves in exactly the same predicament that we did up in the neighborhood of Wapato, when we permitted white landowners to file on and utilize the water, and then it became necessary that we make a very large appropriation in order to provide a water right for the Indian lands. The lands are extremely fertile and productive when watered, and there is a railroad built through this tract of land, and in a general way all that might be said with regard to the Wapato Project, which is the most productive and satisfactory Indian reclamation project in the United States, can be said with regard to this tract of land.

The Secretary of the Interior has made the following favorable report on my bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 24, 1921.

Hon. H. P. SNYDER,
Chairman, Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SNYDER: Reference is made to your letter of June 10, 1921, inclosing for report a copy of H. R. 2433, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, appropriating funds for irrigation work on the Yakima Indian Reservation adjacent to Satus Creek, and reimbursable in accordance with the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stats., 153).

The Satus project is a new one on which practically no work has been done by the Indian Service other than preliminary surveys and investigations, with a view of determining the availability of a water supply and the extent of the irrigable lands under the project. Several private ditches diverting water from Satus Creek are now supplying some 3,500 acres of land in Indian and white ownership. The surveys previously made show the feasibility of initiating a project at this point ultimately designed to irrigate 40,000 acres at an approximate expenditure of $53 per acre. Owing to the fertile character of the soil and the excellent crops produced, it has been impossible to supply water for irrigable lands within the Yakima Reservation as rapidly as the demand therefor arises. The Indians themselves are making excellent use of the facilities furnished, and the white lessees and owners are only too anxious to acquire irrigable lands for development purposes under very favorable terms to the Indians.

The most successful irrigation system in the Indian Service is the Wapato unit of the Yakima project, which is immediately adjacent to the contemplated Satus unit, and comparison with the development under the Wapato project clearly demonstrates the advantages from a financial and industrial standpoint of initiating construction with a view of irrigating the lands within the Satus project. While the total construction cost is estimated at something over $2,000,000, the bill provides sufficient funds for beginning the construction of the project, and additional area to be irrigated annually can be developed as rapidly as appropriations may be available therefor.

In addition to the waters from Satus Creek, this project is so located that the return drainage waters from the Wapato project can be utilized on the Satus project if a canal and distributing system is installed. It is intended to develop this part of the project first, so as to retain and use the return waters from the Wapato project, clearly demonstrating the feasibility of the Satus project. The Indians involved are very desirous of having their lands irrigated, and white interests in the valley are urging early construction of the project, as those areas not actually cultivated by the Indians themselves are in great demand by white farmers endeavoring to obtain irrigable lands, either by purchase or lease, for development purposes.

In view of the existing conditions herein set out, I will be pleased if the bill receives the approval of your committee and the Congress and is enacted into law.

Respectfully,

ALBERT B. FALL, Secretary.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this is again an occasion which appeals to the committee at this time, when expenditures must be kept to the absolute minimum, as not warranting an increase of $75,000, which is proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of subsistence supplies in relieving cases of actual distress and suffering among those needy St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin whose cases are referred to in report of January 30, 1915, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives March 3, 1915, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., pp. 582-605), and printed as House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session, $1,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to the second paragraph under "Wisconsin," on page 70. This relief was granted as the result of a special request from the Department of the Interior submitted in 1915, was it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. 1914.

Mr. WALSH. The act says: "Transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior, March 3, 1915."

Mr. CRAMTON. That was the report.

Mr. WALSH. Was not that a request simply to relieve immediate distress among these Indians?

Mr. CRAMTON. The act of August 1, 1914, reads, in part, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an investigation to be made of the condition and tribal rights of the so-called St. Croix Chippewa Indians now residing in the counties of Polk, Burnett, Washburn, and Douglas, State of Wisconsin, and said to be in a destitute condition. That he shall ascertain and report to Congress at the beginning of the next session thereof whether the said Indians belong to the Lake Superior Chippewa of Wisconsin, or to the Chippewa of Minnesota; what tribal rights, if any, they have with any band or tribe of Chippewa Indians residing in either Minnesota or Wisconsin; what benefits in land and money they would have received had they removed to a reservation in Wisconsin or had not been excluded from enrollment and allotment with the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 642). That he shall cause a census and enrollment to be made of the said St. Croix Chippewa and shall report their actual condition and needs, with such recommendation for their relief as he may deem necessary.

It does not expressly state, but the language is broad enough to contemplate their needs perhaps for a period of years.

Mr. MANN. What was the report?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I understood, had the report at hand and was quoting from the report. I understood he wanted the statute. I have the report here, but I do not want to read all of it.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not true that in the report the Secretary suggested there was immediate need of relief? Of course, this is only $1,000, but if it is in this bill under that authority, it will be in the bill a thousand years from now, whether there are any St. Croix Indians or not. Somebody will be up there who will need $1,000 worth of relief, because they do not care to work as long as Uncle Sam will pass out the $1,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if the gentleman will make his point of order, would state what it is.

Mr. WALSH. Very well. I make the point of order that this appropriation is not authorized by law.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, referring again to the act of November 2, 1921, it authorizes the Bureau of Indian Affairs to direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes—general support and civilization, including education, for relief of distress, and conservation of health, and so forth.

That language is broad enough to sustain this item.

The CHAIRMAN. While that is contained in the general authorization act, is not this section limited to the act of August 1, 1914, and must we not look to that act for any authority?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; as it appeals to me, the act of 1914 is not an authorization for relief of distress.

Independent of that act we could appropriate for the relief of distress among those Indians. The only question is whether they are Indians and within the United States. We can appropriate for the distressed Indians of Wisconsin as well as to relieve the Indians of Oklahoma. We had authority before the act of 1914 for them as much as any other Indians, and we still have that authority. The act of 1914 provided for an investigation of certain questions in order to give the Congress information as to their needs, as to their funds, as to their relationships, but it is not the authorization for an appropriation. It is made to the Congress to aid its judgment, but is not a legal authorization for its action, and hence it does not limit. What was put in then for the purpose of aiding these Indians could not be said now to be a limitation that would prevent the giving aid to them that we might otherwise want to do.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, just briefly referring to the point of order, this is to purchase supplies to relieve certain Indians whose cases are referred to in the report. Here is what the report says:

It is believed that only a small appropriation would be needed to carry these destitute families through the remaining part of the winter and spring and until they could maintain themselves.

Now, by incorporating that reference here and referring to that act we are making this appropriation dependent upon it, and it is not an appropriation under the general law, because the general law does not specify. It is a lump sum carried in the earlier part of the bill, and if they want to use that for this particular purpose, why, under authority of law it is possible they can do so; but it is a specific appropriation for a specific purpose made dependent upon a report and not dependent upon a law, and I submit the authority of that law is not now sufficient to warrant us in appropriating in the winter of 1921-22 for a few Indians who were expected to be taken care of in the winter of 1914-15 so that they could maintain themselves.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the report in question, March 3, 1915, concludes with this language:

It is accordingly recommended that Congress be asked to make an appropriation of not to exceed $1,000 for the purpose of purchasing subsistence supplies for these Indians.

Above that, the preceding paragraph:

It is believed that only a small appropriation would be needed to carry these destitute families through the remaining part of the winter and spring and until they could maintain themselves.

Now, if we were discussing the merits of the appropriation, then, of course, I might argue that the $1,000 was what they might need that year, and that there is nothing to show that they might not need a similar amount the next year. But we are not now discussing the merits of the question as to whether these Indians really need what is proposed. There are certain Indian cases referred to in the report of January 30, 1915, and so forth. Now, that is only for the purpose of identification and not for authorization or limitation. The report in question, if the Chair pleases, he will note gives a final roll of those Indians—names, bands or tribes, age, sex, residence, and county. If this Congress wishes to make an appropriation for those particular Indians, the best way to do it and to make sure these Indians are the ones to get the relief is to refer to the list that is in this report, and that is all that the pending section proposes to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The section to which objection is made is included within lines 9 to 17, inclusive, page 70 of the bill, and reads as follows:

For the purchase of subsistence supplies in relieving cases of actual distress and suffering among those needy St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin whose cases are referred to in report of January 30, 1915, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives March 3, 1915, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats. L., pp. 582-605), and printed as House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session, $1,000.

This seems to be an appropriation of $1,000 for a specific purpose, namely, the relief of needy and distressed St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin. When the Chair first had his attention called to this he was of the opinion that the authority for the appropriation would be found in the statute referred to in the section. However, on a closer reading of the section, it is evident that this is not the meaning of the section. One thousand dollars is appropriated for the relief of certain Indians. What Indians? The Indians whose cases are referred to in a certain report of January 30, 1915, mentioned in the section. On reference to the report, which has been handed the Chair by the chairman of the committee, the Chair finds a list entitled, "A final roll of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin," giving the names of the individuals. The language in the latter part of this section, in the opinion of the Chair, is identifying language—that is, it identifies certain Indians who are to be the recipients of this gratuity from the Government.

If that is true, then surely the authority for making this appropriation exists in the section of the act of November 2, 1921, which provides "for relief of distress and conservation of health." The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken, and it will be overruled.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. This item is just an illustration of the Indian Service. I remember when the item came up under a report made in January, 1915. The only suggestion in the report was that a small appropriation be made to take care of those needy Indians for the balance of that winter. That is all they recommended. Congress made an appropriation of $1,000.

They are not wards of the Government. They are Indians with citizenship. They are not on Indian land controlled by the Government. Congress was asked to make an appropriation of a thousand dollars to take care of a few of these Indians for the balance of the winter of 1915. So we continue to do it forever. They do not need it if they will work; but, of course, Indians are like white people; if they can get the money without earning it, they will take it, and I suppose we shall have this item in the appropriation bill for the next hundred years, just because there was distress among a few of these Indians in the cold winter of 1915.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to amend by striking out the paragraph. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary additional employees in the Bureau of Pensions, District of Columbia, at salaries to be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, such employees to serve without annual leave allowance and to be appointed as far as available under the provisions of civil service laws, rules, and regulations, for the purpose of making current the work of the bureau, $291,800; and for the additional furniture and equipment, stationery, other supplies, and printing required for such purpose, $15,000; in all, $306,800, to be immediately available: Provided, That not more than 10 persons now on the statutory roll of employees of said bureau may be transferred to this temporary roll or paid from this appropriation: Provided further, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,500 per annum, except the following: Not more than 11 at not exceeding $2,000 each, not more than 29 at not exceeding $1,800 each, and not more than 34 at not exceeding $1,600 each.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if these temporary additional employees are for the purpose of taking care of the additional work put upon the department on account of the pension bill for Spanish War veterans that we recently passed?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. I think the gentleman refers to the act that has just passed the House?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. No. That is not contemplated. But the gentleman will remember that on May 5, 1920, we passed an act giving all Civil War veterans a minimum of $50 a month, and if it can be shown that a pensioner under the act requires the regular care and attendance, as I think the language is—

Mr. SNELL. I understand that—

Mr. CRAMTON. Of another person, they may receive $72 per month. Now, those pensioners are from 75 to 80 years old, and it is very natural that at that period they pretty generally feel that they are entitled to the $72 rate, so that under that act there are quite a number of new applications coming in.

Then June 1, 1920, after the passage of the Civil War act, we passed what is known as the Sells bill, for the relief of the Spanish-American War veterans, and that has resulted in a great increase of applications; so that while they had been having about 40,000 or 50,000 applications pending at the time those acts were passed, and in the year since those acts were passed they have increased the number of applications disposed of per year, as I recall, as much as 50 per cent, still the congestion of claims pending has grown until the number pending on the 1st of July last was 99,000 plus—an immense increase in the number of applications. Now, I do not know if the gentleman wants me to take further time now, but—

Mr. SNELL. I wanted to find out what was the situation in regard to this monthly payment of pensions.

Mr. CRAMTON. That bill has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate, according to my information. The statement of the Bureau of Pensions is that their organization, so far as the payment of pensions is concerned, is in such good running order that the change from the quarterly to the monthly basis can be brought about without any great increase in expenditure.

Mr. SNELL. Are they going to be able to take care of the work under the new general Spanish-American War pension act with the present employees?

Mr. CRAMTON. At the time of our investigation and hearing that act had not passed the House.

Mr. SNELL. That takes effect in the next fiscal year.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not made a close study of it, but I do not understand that it will make any very great increase in the work of the bureau. It may increase the number of claims allowed, but is not likely to increase the number of claims filed. It liberalizes the allowance of the claims. I do not think there is anything in the bill which the committee went into more carefully than this provision to take care of the old soldiers, because we felt the needs of those old people. We realized that if they are going to have the pension at all they must have it allowed speedily in order to have it while they live.

Mr. SNELL. Yes. If it is not to be allowed in their lifetime, there is no use in their making application for it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The situation now is this, that with respect to the Civil War claims, which, of course, are the more urgent because the age of the claimants is greater, they are more nearly up on them; but a claim that was filed last November just now gets its first consideration in the bureau, and that consideration is a more or less perfunctory one, because very few of these claims have the evidence with them. The office takes them up to see what is necessary and calls for the evidence. Then there is a delay, and when the evidence is submitted there is an order for a medical examination and a further delay. As to them, undue delay would be very serious. As to the Spanish-American War cases, they are just now taking up applications that were filed last April.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have five minutes more, so that I can use some of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Those filed last April are just getting consideration. That is only perfunctory, because the evidence must be called for, and then there is the order for medical examination, and delay, and there is further examination and further delay.

The gentleman no doubt has had cases, as I have, of men who, while their age was not as great and their distress may not have been as great, still they were worthy of pensions and they were destitute and sick and helpless, and their applications ran on for a couple of years, and the man died before he got his relief. Now, that appealed to the committee. Still, on the other hand, we did not want at this time to increase the roll of employees of the Government. So we went over this with more care, perhaps, than anything else in the bill, and finally we availed ourselves of the services of the Bureau of Efficiency, and got them to go into the Bureau of Pensions and make a study of this particular question. They have made their report, which appears on page 935 of the hearings.

Mr. SNELL. I have read that report.

Mr. CRAMTON. And we felt that we could follow their recommendation and cut the appropriation about $130,000 below the estimates and still accomplish in next year what we want to accomplish—that is, to be sure that at the end of the year the work will be current. They have been making some progress. While there were 99,000 cases pending on the 1st of January, the number is now reduced to 93,000, and we believe that at the end of the year the number of cases pending will be down to 35,000 or 40,000 cases.

Mr. SNELL. I have had an experience somewhat similar to that which the gentleman relates, and I was met by the statement by the department that they could not do the work unless they had the help to do it with. I am glad there is provision in this bill to bring the work practically up to date by the end of this year.

Mr. CRAMTON. At the time we passed those acts we had just been reducing the personnel quite materially, and when we passed those acts we gave them no increase to take care of this increased work.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The current appropriation for pensions is, I believe, $265,000,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is that the largest amount that has ever been appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it is the largest amount appropriated. In any event the expenditure for this year, however, will not be quite as large as in 1921. In 1921 the expenditure was something like $258,000,000, which was the highest in any past year, and probably will remain the highest figure.

Mr. MANN. In 1921 or 1922, more than 50 years after the Civil War ended, after most of the men who suffered and needed the money had died, our expenditures for pensions on account of that war are greater than they ever were before. If we take the same ratio with reference to the World War veterans, the expenditures of this Government 50 years from now will be several billion dollars a year.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield there, he will remember that 10 or 20 years after the Civil War men who were suffering from wounds and disability incurred in the Civil War got as much as $2 a month pension.

Mr. SNELL. The first pension was 10 years after the war, was it not, and that was a disability pension, and it was 40 years after the Civil War before they received a service pension.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES.

Commissioner, $5,000; first assistant commissioner, $4,500; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk (who shall be qualified to act as principal examiner), $3,000; five law examiners, at $2,750 each; examiner of classification, $3,600; five examiners in chief, at $3,500 each; two examiners of interferences, at $2,700 each; examiners of trade-marks and designs—one $2,700; first assistant, $2,400; eight assistants, at $1,500 each; examiners—forty-eight principals, at $2,700 each; ninety-four first assistants, at $2,400 each; ninety-four second assistants, at $2,100 each; ninety-four third assistants, at $1,800 each; ninety-four fourth assistants, at $1,500 each; financial clerk, who shall give bond in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,250; librarian, who shall be qualified to act as an assistant examiner, $2,000; eight chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; eight assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the commissioner, $1,800; translator of languages, $1,800; clerks—eleven of class 4, seventeen of class 3, nineteen of class 2, one hundred and thirty-seven of class 1, ninety-three at $1,000 each; draftsmen—one $1,600, one $1,400, three at $1,200 each, four at $1,000 each; ninety-two copyists, at $1,000 each; thirty copyists, at $720 each; three messengers at $840 each; thirty-three assistant messengers, at $720 each; thirteen laborers at $600 each; forty-five examiners' aids (who shall be selected without regard to apportionment), at $600 each; thirty-nine copy pullers (who shall be selected without regard to apportionment), at $480 each; in all, $1,500,200.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: On page 77, line 15, strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$900."

Mr. CRAMTON. This is simply to correct a clerical error in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all expenditures authorized by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, known as the reclamation law and all other acts under which expenditures from said fund are authorized, including salaries in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; examination of estimates for appropriations in the field; refunds for overcollections hereafter received on account of water-right charges, rentals, and deposits for other purposes; printing and binding, including a publication called the Reclamation Record; law books, books of reference, periodicals, engineering and statistical publications, not exceeding $1,500; purchase, maintenance, and operation of horse-drawn or motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; payment of damages caused to the owners of lands or private property of any kind by reason of the operations of the United States, its officers or employees, in the survey, construction, operation, or maintenance of irrigation works, and which may be compromised by agreement between the claimant and the Secretary of the Interior; and payment for official telephone service in the field hereafter incurred in case of official telephones installed in private houses when authorized under regulations established by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language on page 83, lines 9 and 10—

Including a publication called the Reclamation Record.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. The item in question is subject to a point of order and I will not argue against it. I simply want to make an explanation to the House as to the circumstances surrounding this particular publication.

The Reclamation Service has a great many projects scattered over the West, and on each project are a great number of water users, using water from that project and paying the Government for it. They pay their proportionate share of all the expenses of operation and maintenance of the project, including such an item as this. This publication is sent to these water users. There are a few paid subscribers who are not located on the reclamation projects, but almost entirely the publication is sent to the water users who pay for it through their contributions to operation and maintenance of the service.

Now, the best information the committee could get from Director Davis, of the Reclamation Service, and Members of Congress from the West having reclamation projects in their districts was that the water users really want this publication and are willing to pay for it as they have in the past. Hence we have inserted this language; but I think there is no specific authorization for it. I think it probably is not even a necessary incident to the operation of the projects, and I will not argue against the point of order.

Mr. MANN. There is a law specifically forbidding it so far as that is concerned.

Mr. CRAMTON. I concede the point of order if it is made.

Mr. MANN. How is the cost of this charged in any way against the users of the water?

Mr. CRAMTON. The cost of the Reclamation Record is something like $11,000 a year, and that is pro rated to the various projects, the share of the cost of the operation and maintenance of the particular project, and anyone who is a water user on that project pays his pro rata share of that along with the other expenses.

Mr. MANN. I understand from the gentleman then that this $11,000 is divided up $50 to this one, $100 to that one, and so much to another.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The cost of assessing it against the different property owners would be more than the $11,000. Of course, there is no authority of law for charging it against the water users. It is no part of the irrigation project, and if it is charged against the water users it is in violation of law.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it is well understood, and if they did not want it there would be a protest.

Mr. MANN. They think they are getting it for nothing, and, of course, there is no protest against getting something for nothing.

Mr. CRAMTON. Our information was that they knew of the situation.

Mr. MANN. I guarantee that there is not one of them that knows that he is paying anything for it. The Reclamation Record does not dare publish the fact that they charge the cost of it to the water users.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If the gentleman will yield, I may say in this connection that while perhaps the water users do not know that they are being charged for the cost of publication of the Reclamation Record, the water users' associations, the officers of the irrigation districts, and all the officials connected with local organizations know that the Record is being charged up against the various projects. I personally think it would be a mistake to insist on the point of order, because it is a valuable publication to the people living upon the irrigated lands.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have examined the Reclamation Record, and I think it is as valueless as any Government document that I have ever seen. It is full of worthless stuff. Usually and frequently it is puffing some officer of the service. However, that is not the reason that I make the point of order. If it is meritorious it is not the only meritorious publication. For years we have tried to stop the miscellaneous printing of these publications by the Government. Two years ago, in a moment of inspiration or something else of the sort, we inserted in the sundry civil bill a provision stopping all of them unless it should be provided thereafter that it should be continued. We continued for a while permitting them to run on. Now, last December we passed a law stopping it. The Senate passed a resolution continuing them again. That was reported to the House and went back to the Joint Committee on Printing. I think some of them ought to be stopped. I think some ought to be continued. I do not think that this is the way to do it. Of course, two of these items have gotten by in this bill because some of us, thinking the bill was not going to be read immediately after general debate, went to the Senate to hear President Harding on the peace treaties. Otherwise those would have been eliminated. Let the Joint Committee on Printing report on these publications. I am perfectly willing that they should. A great many of them ought to be stopped, and a considerable number ought to be continued.

Among the worthless ones I would place the Reclamation Record. For years I used to examine it, hoping that at some time I might find something in it which would be useful to a legislator. I never found anything of any value to me as a legislator; it may be useful to help pass away the time. It is not a good magazine, it is not valuable from any point of view that I can see, but I am not a user of an irrigation project and do not pretend to be qualified to judge from that point of view.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order, for I think I may recognize at once that the item is subject to a point of order. But I want to speak upon the matter from two standpoints. First, from the standpoint of the pro rata expenditure among the settlers as being rather an expensive item within itself. I would say that the item of $11,000 is from the standpoint of the administration added to the total of the general expenses of reclamation service in maintaining the Washington office. Of course, the item becomes an $11,000 item in the column and does not take any amount of time whatever in the apportionment among the various projects. That is, it does not add anything whatever in time or work to the apportionment of the sum total for maintaining the Washington office.

Now, in regard to the value of the publication itself. The settlers on the reclamation projects are largely people who have gone to the West from the Eastern, Southern, and Central States. Often they are not people acquainted with the process of reclamation, with the matter of farming. Suppose they have been farmers in one section of the country referred to, the method of farming under irrigation is wholly different, and from the standpoint of helpfulness to the settlers themselves I think the publication has a justification. If you will run through the publication you will find many items of immediate interest to settlers upon the projects. The question, for instance, of leveling land so as to best care for the distribution of water, the question of removing obnoxious plants and weeds that grow along the canal and within the canal, the question of new crops that can be grown profitably on these projects—these and other subjects will be discussed; the question of marketing and market facilities will be discussed; the beneficial use of water upon an acre of land will be discussed. All these questions are of vital interest to the farmers themselves who are farming by means of reclamation. My judgment is that the farmers themselves on these projects would be glad to see the publication continued. I think the publication is serving a useful purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The water users now pay for it.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would they pay for it if it were sold to them at subscription rates?

Mr. FRENCH. What percentage of them would or would not I could not tell.

Mr. MANN. How many subscribers do they have now; how many do they have who actually pay as subscribers?

Mr. FRENCH. Manifestly as long as it is sent to them as a part of what they have bought—

Mr. MANN. Oh, they do not know that. Of course, I do not blame them for not sending money in for a thing that they can get for nothing, but if they want it sent, the test is whether they are willing to pay for it, knowing they pay for it. Under the present arrangement they pay for it without knowing it. Would they pay for it if they knew it?

Mr. FRENCH. I think unquestionably a very large percentage of them would.

Mr. MANN. Suppose we try them, then.

Mr. FRENCH. But the gentleman would not give them an opportunity to try that, if his point of order is sustained. He would cut them off entirely.

Mr. MANN. I say, suppose we try it.

Mr. FRENCH. But you are not trying it. You are cutting it out entirely. When the hearings were going on the committee made inquiry of the Director of the Reclamation Service in respect to the attitude of the settlers on the project about this matter, and here is what Mr. Davis said:

Mr. FRENCH. What is the attitude of the water users themselves who, in the end, pay for the Reclamation Record toward its continuance?

Mr. DAVIS. To learn that about two months ago we issued a circular, putting the question without any leading features to them, to ascertain the wishes of the water users on that point, and we have a large number of letters in reply, which are practically unanimous in indorsing the publication and saying that it is of value to the water users, and wishing it continued. The only suggestion that I now recall of importance concerning it was that it would not be furnished free, and that was only from one project, it would only be furnished to those who pay a subscription price equal to the cost. The directorate on one project made the suggestion and we have adopted that plan or purpose to adopt it, if the continuation is authorized, on that particular project, and then not charge to that project any part of the cost of publication other than the part of the individuals paying it.

So, from the point of view of the Director of the Reclamation Service, as well as from the point of view of the Members of Congress from the West, the Reclamation Record is of service, and is desired by the settlers themselves.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The statement is made that a circular was sent to these people asking if they desired to continue to receive it. That information would be valuable if the gentleman could give us the number of circulars that they sent out and the number of replies received.

Mr. FRENCH. The director did not indicate that.

Mr. MANN. You may be very sure that he did not. All of those who wanted it replied, and I guarantee that not 25 per cent of them replied.

Mr. FRENCH. But I think that the cross section obtained by the replies would represent the cross section of public opinion on the various projects as estimated by the Members of Congress from the States having reclamation projects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have looked over the hearings as carefully as I could in regard to these various reclamation projects, and it does not seem to me that the committee has furnished the House with enough information to aid it to act intelligently upon the individual items. I notice in most cases they simply asked Mr. Davis, the Director of the Reclamation Service, how much money he wanted, and if he thought that would carry on the projects for the present year and produce the results desired. In two-thirds of them they gave him the full amount that he suggested and the balance of the items they cut just a little. I notice in several places they were unable to spend during the past year the amount of money that was appropriated for these various projects.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. The reason why the Reclamation Service was unable to expend the amount appropriated was because we overestimated the available reclamation funds last year.

Mr. SNELL. That is exactly what I am coming to and what I want to bring out. They always overestimate the receipts from these projects.

Mr. FRENCH. And the gentleman will notice that in this bill we have framed it upon the basis not of the first report made as to the estimates for the next fiscal year but rather upon estimates that were made six months later on, just at the time the hearings were on, of the anticipated returns to the funds.

Mr. SNELL. What information has the gentleman got that would tell him anything about the amount of the receipts? I tried to get that information from the department and could not get it. Mr. Davis told me that information was not available at present for the operation and maintenance account, but he would furnish it as soon as possible, and up to the present time I have not received it.

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, the gentleman must understand that a great deal of information here is of a kind that is in the nature of estimates. We can not look into the future; we are anticipating the receipts.

Mr. SNELL. I am asking about the past, about what has happened, not estimates for the future, and all the information that I could get was that it was very disappointing, the way the receipts were coming in.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just what the gentleman has reference to. If the gentleman has reference to the reimbursement for operation and maintenance, I will say to him—

Mr. SNELL. That was the specific question that I asked; the results of maintenance and operation for the last year.

Mr. CRAMTON. For the year 1922 they would not be available.

Mr. SNELL. I asked him for any year that was available, and I could not get either. The gentleman could not give me the information the other day, and the department could not.

Mr. CRAMTON. The other day we were not talking about this service. We were talking about the irrigation on Indian reservations, which is entirely different.

Mr. SNELL. Certainly; but he did not have the information on that, either.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I admitted that much of that would be deferred, but this service, it is expected, the money is coming back.

Mr. SNELL. And the only thing I ask is what percentage comes back, and I took up an individual project and asked him to tell me the results last year or the year before, and Mr. Davis told me yesterday over the phone that he could not give it to me at that time.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Has the gentleman been at his office this morning?

Mr. SNELL. I was there until 12 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The data was sent to the gentleman about noon.

Mr. SNELL. It was not there when I left at 12 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. I suppose he sent a copy of it to another Member before it reached the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Idaho seems to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It was furnished to the gentleman from New York about 12 o'clock, and I have a copy of it.

Mr. MANN. Yes; it was sent to the gentleman and it got to him before it got to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It was sent to my office and my secretary sent it over to me, and the gentleman from New York has been furnished with the same information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Is the point the gentleman is making that the Indians are not the only wards this Government is now supporting?

Mr. SNELL. I think you will find there are some white men we are appropriating for pretty generously on this proposition, and there is little information in the hearings in regard to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman, without taking too much of his time, that if there is any statement that has been sent to any Member of the House it has not been sent to the committee in charge of this bill, and hence I am not going to take the responsibility in indulging in any guesswork for the benefit of the Reclamation Service. However, the general rule is the money comes back promptly, and it has to come back promptly or otherwise the reclamation fund suffers from it; that is, the operation and maintenance. Do not confuse that with construction work.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that. I understand that from operation and maintenance they are coming in very slowly, and that it was generally disappointing to the department.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand on the Orland project, California, none of them have ever been delinquent but have come in promptly. As the gentleman understands, the people on these reclamation projects now are possibly suffering from the same condition the farmers everywhere are suffering. They put a lot of money into seed and labor and find the commodities can not be sold.

Mr. SNELL. Two years ago they sold commodities at a good price.

Mr. CRAMTON. I only want to give this further suggestion to the gentleman. The question originally, as I understand, was the failure to expend last year the amount of the appropriation, and that refers not to operation and maintenance—

Mr. SNELL. I understand.

Mr. CRAMTON. But for construction. They did not expend for the reason the reservation fund did not contain enough. The appropriations for 1923 are to be paid out of the accretions of the reclamation funds that are not yet in the funds but expected to come in in 1923.

Mr. SNELL. It is an expectation.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a question, an estimate, or a guess, and heretofore they have been overhopeful, especially in reference to how much was coming in on the oil leases, and so forth, and their estimate overran. The committee this year called the attention of Director Davis to this, and in January he submitted this estimate on what we considered conservative lines, and by reason of that we cut the appropriations for construction $1,500,000.

Mr. SNELL. As a general proposition it has been cut very little, considering we are trying to economize. Now take it item by item—

Mr. CRAMTON. We have accepted the items of the service except we have made a deduction of $1,500,000 in accordance with the estimate.

Mr. SNELL. But as a general thing, one project after another, you have given them the amount they asked for.

Mr. CRAMTON. We have reduced it $1,500,000, and that cut is distributed among nine different projects.

Mr. SNELL. Another question. What is the policy of the department with regard to establishing new projects at the present time?

Mr. CRAMTON. We have only established one new project in this bill—that is, really only made an appropriation for one new project—and the policy is to finish up what we have got.

Mr. SNELL. I understood they were not to establish new projects until the old projects were more fully developed or proven up. I think there are two new projects in this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. The only new project is really a transfer of an item, that Oregon item, where last year we appropriated $400,000, which was the Deschutes project, and which encountered difficulties which have led to the substitution of the Baker project at $400,000, which is in that same section of Oregon.

Mr. SNELL. What does the gentleman say about the American Falls project? Is not that a new project?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is an extension.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is only an addition, that is my information—that is, where they are removing a town—

Mr. SNELL. Removing a town and building a new one.

Mr. CRAMTON. But the project exists, and this is an extension of it. It is a large project.

Mr. SNELL. Was it an extension or an entirely new project right along an old project?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am going to yield to the gentleman from Idaho, who can perhaps give more exact information, but my idea is that it is a large extension.

Mr. SNELL. My information leads me to believe it is an entirely new project.

Mr. FRENCH. What is a new project?

Mr. SNELL. I claim the American Falls project is an entirely new project right alongside the Minidoka project.

Mr. FRENCH. It is regarded as an extension of and a continuation of the project.

Mr. SNELL. They would not tell me so yesterday. I asked them definitely about this proposition. They said it was doubtful whether it was an extension or a new project.

Mr. FRENCH. It has the same source.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; the Mississippi has the same water its entire length, but St. Paul and St. Louis are not the same cities because they are on the same river. It is not the same land. It covers an entirely new lot of land. It is a new project, but happens to be situated right beside the Minidoka.

Mr. FRENCH. The Minidoka project at this time is not made up of a single unit but of three units.

Mr. SNELL. That is true.

Mr. FRENCH. And it has always been the policy to reclaim and put under ditch that which could be put under water with a given unit.

Mr. SNELL. Yes. But the Minidoka project is entirely developed, and they have all the water they need on it, and all the land that was in the project when the construction was first started is now taken care of. The first undertaking and authorization is completed. Is that not so?

Mr. FRENCH. There is no question that the units developed are supplied by water practically to the extent necessary. But here is land adjacent, and the system for all the units will be an interlocking system.

Mr. SNELL. This is a new project, but it is situated near that old project, and so you call it "an extension." I want that to be laid before the House just as it is, and not have any misunderstanding as to what we are doing. We are starting a new project right beside an old one, but do not call it so.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The land this water from the American Falls is to irrigate lies contiguous to and joins the Minidoka project on the north.

Mr. SNELL. By that same reasoning you could go clear to St. Paul, Minn., under the same authorization as long as one project would border on another.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The land to be reclaimed is an extension of the Minidoka project and is a portion of a block of land containing over 250,000 acres.

Mr. SNELL. It might be a part of it only because it adjoins it, but you or no one else can make me or the Members of the House believe it was a part of the original authorized construction.

Mr. FRENCH. You will get the water from the same stream, and the land withdrawal, I understand, was made at the same time.

Mr. SNELL. You would get the water from the same stream at St. Paul and at St. Louis, but you do not undertake to say it is the same water system in both places. If you can give us any information later on I will be glad to get it any time, for this certainly needs some explanation, if the policy of the committee is against starting new projects.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of gentlemen who are really interested in this question as to whether payment is being made and whether these projects are a success or not, I wish to call attention to this chart, which was made by the Irrigation Service and was used yesterday before the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

This [indicating on a chart] represents the total cost of that project, starting from zero and running all through. Also, starting from zero and running through is the amount that has fallen due. The red is the amount that has not been paid.

Here we have the relative value of crop production in 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921. The crop production given for a single year very much exceeded in value the total cost of developing the land.

If you come down here to Yuma, Ariz., here [indicating] we have the cost of construction and here we have the amount that has fallen due, and the slight red line, which perhaps you can not see from where you are sitting, represents the amount that is due and unpaid.

Under maintenance and operation, which is a separate charge from construction, this represents the amount that has fallen due, and the little red line represents the proportion that has not yet been paid; and you understand that the assessments fell due in December, so that includes assessments that fell due only a short time ago.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. Perhaps those figures there do not represent definitely to the Members what per cent of the amount due has been paid. Could the gentleman give us an idea?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. This represents millions of dollars. There [indicating] is a million, and there is $2,000,000; about one and one-fourth millions has fallen due on that one. This [indicating] represents a quarter of a million. All but a small amount has been paid.

On the Boise project there has fallen due about $900,000, of which over $800,000 has already been paid. Under operation and maintenance about $800,000 has already been paid, and $700,000 unpaid.

Taking the North Platte project here [indicating] is the amount of construction. This represents the amount that has fallen due, and the red represents the amount unpaid.

Mr. MONDELL. The blue represents the amount that has fallen due and has been paid, and the red the amount that is unpaid?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes. The blue represents the amount that has fallen due and has been paid, and the red the amount that remains unpaid. In other words, the red and the blue represent the total amount that has fallen due, of which the blue has been paid and the red has not been paid.

In the Rio Grande project nothing is marked as having been found due, because they do not know yet what the charge will be per acre.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SNELL. How many years has that been under construction?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I do not know, but a part of this has been under cultivation four or five years. Take the Yakima project. Here is the cost of construction, something over $10,000,000. This shows about $2,500,000 paid. They were short on their December payments, two months ago, about $100,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Gladly.

Mr. RAKER. The record shows that they are able to present to the committee the exact amount that it has cost for the whole construction, and then the amount per year for maintenance and upkeep.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. This represents the maintenance and operation charges down here, and that much has been paid and this much remains due.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes. Make it as short as you can.

Mr. RAKER. What I want to know is, Is it not a fact that the Reclamation Service is able to present to the committee the exact amount paid and the exact amount due for maintenance and upkeep?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes. Of course, these figures are changing, and I wish to invite the special attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who has asked the question, to the fact that this is a running account. Payments are being made every day. So it is difficult at any hour without figuring it up to answer the question offhand, because it is changing all the time.

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Take the Yakima project. Will the gentleman state how much that land was worth before it had this money expended upon it and what it is worth now?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. This was sagebrush, dry pasture land with very scant rainfall, possibly 7 inches per annum, and was worth, we will say, $10 an acre. It is usually considered as being worth from $3 to $10 an acre, but with the water added the very cheapest price at which you could buy any land on this Yakima project without any improvement on it, I think, would be $200 an acre; and from that it runs up to $500 and $1,000 and $1,500 and $2,000 an acre, according to the orchard and other improvements that are put on it.

Mr. RAKER. That is per acre?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is the price per acre, and all of that value stands behind the amount that is yet owing to the Government.

I should like to say that in this revolving fund which we are appropriating from to-day for the continuation of this work, there was during the last year collected something over $2,000,000, and in addition to that $1,000,000 was paid into the Federal Treasury as a payment on a loan of $20,000,000 to this fund made about 11 years ago, which provided that after 10 years repayment should be made at the rate of $1,000,000 per annum, and that is now being paid at the rate of $1,000,000 per annum.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. What is the cost of this improvement per acre? Has the gentleman the figures showing the average?

Mr. SNELL. That is all given in the hearings.

Mr. BRIGGS. In general.

Mr. SNELL. The average runs from $75 to $100, I think, according to these hearings.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think it is $63 an acre, if I recall.

Mr. RAKER. As an average.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. As an average on all the irrigation that has been done, I think it is $63.

Mr. BRIGGS. What is the amount now in the revolving fund?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The amount now in the revolving fund is the amount that we are appropriating here, which, of course, comes from the sale of public lands, from these repayments, and from the operation of the gas and oil leasing bill. Perhaps the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] can state the total amount carried by this bill for reclamation.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is this a reappropriation every year of the revolving fund?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is an appropriation from the revolving fund. It is taking nothing whatever out of any other fund.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understand that, but as far as this investment is concerned, I supposed that the appropriation was a continuing one.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Perhaps this will answer the gentleman's question. All of these 25 projects here represent at this time an investment of about $130,000,000. There has been, in round numbers, $160,000,000 put into these projects, of which about $30,000,000 has been repaid, and the investment represented at this time is about $130,000,000. Gentlemen can see by the chart here the amount which this investment is producing annually in the way of crops.

Mr. BRIGGS. How much additional is carried in this bill?

Mr. FRENCH. We are appropriating this year $14,211,000 for the Reclamation Service.

Mr. BRIGGS. That makes nearly $175,000,000 all told.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. EVANS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Washington be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object—and I have no intention of objecting—does the gentleman hope he can conclude in five minutes?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes. I am only bringing this to the attention of the committee at this time for the purpose of giving the information that has been sought here.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no objection to the gentleman's time being extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. If I understood the gentleman's statement, the various projects shown on the chart here represent an expenditure of $160,000,000, of which I understood him to say $30,000,000 had been repaid.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; in round numbers.

Mr. EVANS. What does the gentleman mean by the repayment of $30,000,000—repayment to the Federal Treasury, or repayment to the reclamation project fund?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. In 1902 there was a reclamation fund created. Does the gentleman know what went into that? There was no appropriation out of the Federal Treasury, except the receipts from public lands for the preceding 12 months. Now, that is where we got the money with which to start the work. Then it provided that money accruing from the sale of public lands year after year should be added to that fund. Year after year it has been added to, until it has reached the sum that I have mentioned, and that is being reappropriated year after year, and there has never been anything added from the Federal Treasury except the $20,000,000 which was loaned, and on which we are making payment at the rate of $1,000,000 a year now.

Mr. EVANS. How many million dollars have been paid on that $20,000,000?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It was not to be repaid until after the lapse of a 10-year period. The first payment fell due only two years ago, and I think that $2,000,000 is the amount that has been paid at this time.

There was an extra sum appropriated at one time to take care of an international claim that arose on account of some controversy with Mexico where we had guaranteed them a certain amount of water. In order to effect a settlement it cost the reclamation fund a million dollars. That not being strictly chargeable to reclamation but something that arose in the way of an international controversy, the amount was taken care of out of the Federal Treasury.

These are funds appropriated year after year, and the crop yield, as you see, equals from 25 to 30 per cent up to 200 per cent of the total cost of the project annually.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman as to the Uncompahgre project. How many years has that been completed?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. As I understood yesterday from the director, it is just being completed now.

Mr. SNELL. I understood that it had been completed five years, but never had paid anything.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That was not the statement of the Director of Reclamation. He spoke of that specifically as not being yet completed.

Mr. SNELL. It has been in operation five years.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman will understand that if they are going to put 50,000 acres under water they will put 5,000 under this year and so many next year, and so on, and that 5,000 is in operation while the rest is being completed.

Mr. SNELL. Five thousand has been completed, but has not paid anything.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. You can not make the levy until the project is completed.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman will understand that they pay rent for the water used and their proportional share of the use of the system.

Mr. SNELL. But this has been in operation at least five years, and, as I understand, they have not paid anything for the actual operation or maintenance.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, yes; they have been paying their share for the maintenance of the water used.

Mr. SNELL. I do not understand so.

The Clerk read as follows:

Uncompahgre project, Colorado: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $215,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in the hearings on this project that all Mr. Davis asked for was $90,000 for operation and maintenance and $50,000 for extension, and the committee allows him $215,000. I wonder why they increased it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman has overlooked something, because the estimate was $235,000.

Mr. SNELL. I was reading Mr. Davis's testimony on page 635 of the hearings, and this is certainly all he asks for here.

Mr. CRAMTON. Ninety thousand dollars for operation and maintenance and $50,000 for one extension.

Mr. SNELL. That is the only extension that he speaks of.

Mr. CRAMTON. The estimate was $235,000. That estimate was cut $20,000 in his revision of estimates and in connection with which he says that this project is virtually completed and on an operation and maintenance basis. Mr. Davis says:

This project is virtually completed and on an operation and maintenance basis. The principal reduction therefore would be in the year's program of maintenance work. There is a certain amount of such work that can be postponed without fatal effect, such as the program of canal cleaning and similar items that are more or less a continuous process, but can be speeded up or retarded at times. My suggestion therefore is that if the $20,000 reduction be made, $15,000 be regarded as for maintenance, and $5,000 for minor items on the lateral system where we are finishing the work with numerous small jobs, such as structures, short extensions here and there, etc.

Mr. SNELL. The printed testimony in the hearings only calls for $140,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is only one construction.

Mr. SNELL. That is all there is in the hearings and all I had to go by.

Mr. FRENCH. If I may be allowed, the gentleman will notice that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] directed the attention of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota to the estimates in the amount of $235,000.

Mr. SNELL. That is the item I was directing attention to; he only calls for $140,000 and you give him $215,000.

Mr. FRENCH. Those estimates were cut down $20,000 by supplemental estimates.

Mr. SNELL. That is not in the hearings.

Mr. FRENCH. I think it is.

Mr. CRAMTON. I just read it. The gentleman asked for the supplemental estimates and asked if they were in the hearings. I want to say to him that they are not, but I just read it to him.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] said the project was not completed, but according to the hearings, on page 634—

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will allow me and will turn to page 668, he will find the supplemental estimates that the chairman has referred to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. On page 668 the gentleman will find the amount called for $215,000 for the Uncompahgre project.

Mr. SNELL. That is just a summary of the whole proposition.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. But that has nothing to do with the original hearings before the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think the $90,000 is a misprint.

Mr. SNELL. If that is a misprint, I am willing to accept it as such.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not account for a misprint in the hearings. The appropriation requested in the project for 1923 is for net construction $75,000, for operation and maintenance $160,000, making a total of $235,000. The figures in the hearings manifestly are erroneous.

Mr. SNELL. Very well. According to this statement on page 634, the whole project has been completed for at least two years. The gentleman from Washington said they had not yet completed the project.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will look at the table on page 634, he will find that the probable area when completed is 100,000 acres.

Mr. SNELL. That is just what I am looking at. In 1921 the area was 100,000 acres, so that that must be completed, and that was two years ago.

Mr. CRAMTON. They said that it is practically completed.

Mr. SNELL. It has been completed for two years, according to statement in hearings.

Mr. CRAMTON. But there are some laterals yet to be completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boise project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations: Provided, That the expenditure for drainage shall not exceed the amount paid by the water users pursuant to the provisions of the Boise public notice dated February 15, 1921, $1,220,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman explain to the committee the purpose of the proviso?

Mr. FRENCH. That language is to bring the item into harmony with a court decree that has been entered into by stipulation on the part of the settlers themselves and the Government.

Mr. RAKER. What is the estimated cost of this drainage? I just want to know how they arranged it.

Mr. FRENCH. I do not have the details of that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I may say to the gentleman that there was some objection on the part of the settlers to paying for this drainage, and this was placed in the bill by the committee in order to require them to sign a contract that they would pay for the drainage in the event the Government undertook it.

Mr. RAKER. Is not this the situation, that the drainage may cost $400,000, and the notice provides that they shall only pay $300,000?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; I do not think there is any such controversy as that.

Mr. RAKER. What is the purpose of it?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The purpose is to require the settlers to sign a contract to pay for the drainage before the Government undertakes the work.

Mr. RAKER. They would have to agree to pay for it before the Reclamation Service started in to do the work.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And they said if the Reclamation Service will do that, they would agree to pay so much an acre and no more?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And if it costs more, who is going to pay for that?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. But it is not going to cost more. This provision is that they shall agree to pay for the cost of the drainage.

Mr. RAKER. That adds to the construction charges?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes. The necessity for drainage, of course, developed after the land was put under irrigation.

Mr. RAKER. If it costs more than the public notice provides, who will pay for it?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is not expected to cost more.

Mr. RAKER. That does not answer the question.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I am not answering hypothetical questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Minidoka project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, with authority in connection with the construction of American Falls Reservoir, to purchase or condemn and to improve suitable land for a new town site to replace the portion of the town of American Falls which will be flooded by the reservoir, and to provide for the removal of buildings to such new site, and to plat and to provide for appraisal of lots in such new town site and to exchange and convey such lots in full or part payment for property to be flooded by the reservoir and to sell for not less than the appraised valuation any lots not used for such exchange, $1,200,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. I call attention especially to the language beginning at the end of line 25, on page 84—

To purchase or condemn and to improve suitable land for a new town site to replace the portion of the town of American Falls which will be flooded by the reservoir, and to provide for the removal of buildings to such new site and to plat and to provide for appraisal of lots in such new town site and to exchange and convey such lots in full or part payment for property to be flooded by the reservoir and to sell for not less than the appraised valuation any lots not used for such exchange, $1,200,000.

I appreciate that the original act in creating this service is rather broad, but reading from section 4 of the original act of 1902 I find the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to acquire the same for the United States by purchase or condemnation proceedings.

The same above referred to reservoir sites.

The CHAIRMAN. What statute is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. SNELL. I am reading from volume 32, part 1, page 390. I claim there is nothing in the act which gives them power to improve suitable land for a new town site, no matter where it is located, or to replace the old buildings with new buildings. This means that they are practically tearing down one town and removing the town and building it up again. I claim that this authorization is going much further than was intended in the legislation creating the department.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the point made by the gentleman, it has narrowed down to the question of authority to supply the new town site. I understand the gentleman from New York does not question the authority to condemn the old town site and to use it for a reservoir. He questions only their authority to purchase or condemn and improve land for a new site to replace the old one.

Mr. SNELL. And the general proposition of removing old buildings and constructing new ones to take their place.

Mr. CRAMTON. There the matter would be only the latter part of the gentleman's statement. There will be no question as to their authority to condemn the buildings or to remove those which were upon the land to be used for the project. The only question is as to the construction of new buildings. That narrows it down to this question. It is admitted that here is a town upon a site that it is desired to use for a reservoir. There is ample authority to condemn that site and use it for that purpose. There would be ample authority to appropriate money to turn over to John Jones and John Smith the owners of the land in that site to pay them for their property. The question is whether instead of turning over to John Jones and John Smith the money for the land condemned we can make an arrangement by which we secure other land, a new town site, improve it and replace the conditions that we have taken away from the other, in so far as we can. I submit that if there is authority to do one there is authority to do the other; that is, the activity must be necessarily connected with the project. They can not acquire a town site unless they actually need it in their operations, and if that is admitted then they can give lands they have as well as give money to the owner of the lands taken away.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, let me say this further. The Government at the present time owns the land, or much of the land, that will constitute the new town site. Under the general law there can be no question but that the Reclamation Service has a right to develop new towns and to sell the lands within the town for the benefit of the reclamation funds. As I said, the Government to-day owns much or all of the lands where this new town will be.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, why does the bill provide that the Government shall have the right to purchase or condemn land for the new town site?

Mr. FRENCH. That is continuation of the language heretofore carried and would take care of any additional land that might be needed. Under general law the Government has the right to purchase land for reservoir sites, and here we shall need to purchase a very large part or possibly all of it. Now since that is so it would seem then that the Reclamation Service would have the right to dispose of land it may own within the new town site in exchange for damages that the Reclamation Service might occasion in the old. As has already been stated by the chairman, the law itself provides that the Reclamation Service may have the right either to purchase or condemn land in the development of an irrigation project. So then the proposition seems to be a simple one, reading these two laws together and administering the two together. The Reclamation Service has the right on the one hand to sell lands on the town site. It has the right on the other hand to condemn or purchase land necessary for a project. In the carrying out of those two provisions of law I can see nothing incongruous if the arrangement were to take the form of an exchange of land from one town site for land in the other town site. This seems to me absolutely within the provisions of the law, the authority already existing. If so, the point of order made by the gentleman can not be sustained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly state the authority for the statement that the Reclamation Service has the right to purchase land for town-site purposes?

Mr. FRENCH. I said it has the right to purchase land in connection with the reclamation project.

Mr. STAFFORD. This provision goes far beyond, as I read it, the original enactment of law authorizing the Reclamation Service. This goes to the extent of authorizing the department to purchase or condemn and to improve suitable land for a new town site. As the gentleman from Illinois suggested, if there is authority of law what is the need of it here? The fact it is here is presumptive evidence that there is no authority of law, otherwise it would not be here.

Mr. FRENCH. This is a continuation of the law carried for one or two years, under which, if the gentleman will let me continue, the Government purchased the land in whole or in part, which will be necessary to purchase for the town site in connection with the project.

Mr. STAFFORD. The argument of the gentleman is that the warrant for this authority is not substantive law, but is an appropriation bill law. The gentleman states that this language has been carried in prior bills. That language is only effective for the fiscal year, and is not permanent law.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will turn to the law itself providing for the reclamation fund he would find that the Government has the right to purchase or condemn land in connection with the development of irrigation projects.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have the original law before me, and I find nothing in it that authorizes the Reclamation Service to purchase land for a town site.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman understands that there is to be a reservoir on the old town site?

Mr. STAFFORD. Assuming that, that does not give the department the right to buy a new town site unless there is authority of law.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will admit there was authority of law to condemn the old town site for reservoir purposes and to pay money to those from whom they took the land. The gentleman admits that, does he not?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not acquainted with the actual project.

Mr. CRAMTON. That makes a whole lot of difference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Assuming that that is the fact—

Mr. CRAMTON. The situation is that there was a town where they want to put a reservoir. They moved a portion of the town, and instead of paying the money to those people they put them on a different site.

Mr. STAFFORD. The logic of that argument would be that where it will be necessary for the Reclamation Service to purchase the property for a town site, then the Reclamation Service would have the authority to go 10, 20, or 100 miles and purchase a new town site in lieu of it. There is no warrant of law in the original enactment giving the Reclamation Service any such authority.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, there is this point at issue, that on land taken up for a reservoir in one existing town site, instead of paying the money, they can go and put these people on a different site, of course, with their consent; but there is this additional point, Mr. Chairman: The current law carries this same provision, and under this same provision they have entered upon this project. As the gentleman from Idaho states, they have acquired most, if not all, of the land that they will need under this same language. They have certainly acquired a portion of the land they need, and they are in process of working out this project, so that it is further to be sustained, Mr. Chairman, as an appropriation for the continuation of an existing project, which would make it clearly in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman states that there was authority to purchase new land which they have not acquired at present. That is a new proposal for which there is no authorization in law.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, that is not quite the situation. They have not only acquired the old town site in whole or in part, but they have acquired in part new land that is to be turned over to the inhabitants of the old town site.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully contend that, assuming that they have acquired the new land, it would not give them the authority of law to move buildings to that new town site without this language.

Mr. CRAMTON. That work is now under way. It is a continuing project which we wish to appropriate for.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, following the logic of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], if they had gone beyond their power in one particular, they would be authorized to go beyond their power in a thousand particulars.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, it is not quite that proposition, either. The Reclamation Service have not gone beyond their power. They have the act for the current year, an appropriation act, which contained certain language which authorized them to purchase and condemn and improve certain land for a new town site. They have that authorization, even if it be conceded—and I do not concede—that that would have been subject to a point of order last year. But the point was not made. The law was passed.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Would it be in order this year just because it was carried last year?

Mr. CRAMTON. They had authority given them last year, and having done it, or having perhaps nine-tenths done it, having nearly completed it, the parliamentary rule comes to their aid, to the effect that we can appropriate to complete an existing project.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman says that the land for the new town site has been purchased at the present time?

Mr. CRAMTON. In whole or in great part. I will not say just how much, but my information is that a considerable part has been acquired.

Mr. SNELL. To show you that you had the same idea that I have, I want to call your attention to a question which you asked of Mr. Davis in the hearings, where he replied:

There might be a question as to whether it would apply or not.

That shows that the committee itself thought it was going beyond the original law.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman's question is not a parliamentary proposition, but a question of fact. If, as a matter of fact, they had fully acquired all the land they wanted and completed the improvements upon it, then that language could be dropped out, and that explains my question as to the necessity of repeating it.

Mr. SNELL. The same question has come to my mind, that it is going beyond the intent of Congress in the legislation establishing the service.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not learned that language that is unnecessary is subject to a point of order on account of that fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, let me say just a word. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is confusing the principle of the continuation of an existing project, which has been held to be applicable in case of navy-yard constructions, with this reclamation project. The Reclamation Service might have authority to continue and improve a project which in itself was reclamation, but here they are attempting to go beyond the project and purchase a new town site and develop that new town site, and that is not in continuation of an existing irrigation project.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin if this is a continuation of a public work that is already begun? The Chair asks that question in order to get light on this proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. That rule as to the continuation of a public work applies to public works in such a way as to give authority to that branch of the public service which initiated it to complete it, but here they are going beyond their original power and trying to complete something for which they have no authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman another question. Suppose a public work has been begun without actual authority of law, but for which an appropriation has been made, and the next year the question is raised, as it is raised here, that it is in continuation of a public work that has already begun, even though it was not authorized by law?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, that is a very nice question that has been propounded by the Chair. I would not offhand want to say if a department launches into a development by the use of funds which have not directly been authorized by law that that would be a basis of the extension of that development ad infinitum so far as Congress appropriated for it. I would say that there had to be some substantive authorization in law beyond merely carrying it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the appropriation carries a provision that might have been objected to, but is included in the appropriation bill which becomes a law with that provision in it, does the gentleman question the authority of the Reclamation Service, the authority having been expressly given to the Reclamation Service in the appropriation bill? Does the gentleman question the authority of the Reclamation Service to do the work under that authority and direction?

Mr. STAFFORD. Only so far as the appropriation is available for that fiscal year, and no further.

Mr. CRAMTON. But I will say to the Chair that there is no such distinction in the precedents. The work has been entered upon with full authority. It was not without authority. It was with full authority that they entered upon it. It is only partially completed, and it is the logic of that rule that the Government should not suffer a loss by reason of leaving the work half completed; that must sustain this item as in completion of a work that was authorized last year and partially completed under due authority.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make this suggestion about this public-works matter. A public work has always been considered, with one exception, as an actual work, not a plan. The only exception to that is in reference to the Navy, where long ago a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union arbitrarily ruled that the construction of a new battleship was in continuation of the work of building up the Navy. I think that is the only exception. I will not undertake to apply that to this case, because I am not familiar enough with the case to apply it; but this is very sure: Suppose the commission recommends the acquirement of a lot of land for a public park and Congress appropriates money for the purchase of a particular part of that land. That purchase can be made, but that would not authorize an appropriation for the purchase of the remainder of the land as a part of the public work at all. The distinction is not hard to make, and the public work has to be an actual work, not a plan.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is a very simple proposition. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase land. Now, he may purchase this original town site outright and pay for it in cash, or as a part of the purchase price, and reducing the purchase price by that much, he may give other land that may be used as a town site; and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there has been a decision upon this question, or a very similar one, by the Supreme Court of the United States. I call the attention of the Chair to the compilation of Federal Reclamation Laws, on page 45 of which is set out the statute (32 Stat., 389) giving the right to purchase and condemn. I think the chairman is familiar with that statute there set out. Under that is this citation from Henkel v. The United States (237 U. S., 43):

Property that may be acquired: Under the provisions of the reclamation act the Secretary of the Interior has power to acquire the rights and property necessary therefor, including those of allottee Indians, by paying for their improvements and giving them the right of selecting other lands.

Now, that is the effect of this provision in the present bill. They are giving the people living upon this town site the right to select another town site, or supplying them with another town site, and that is all it amounts to.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, if it will be helpful in considering the question that has been discussed, I will say that I have some general information showing that moneys have actually been expended upon this general work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. FRENCH. Something like $175,556 was expended in 1921. At the time we had our hearings a month ago the department estimated that they would expend during the present fiscal year $700,000; and apart from any of the printed reports that I have touching expenditures my information is that approximately $400,000, or something in excess of that amount, has been expended on this particular work, divided in part between purchasing land for the new town site and purchasing property within the old.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This paragraph provides:

For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, with authority in connection with the construction of American Falls Reservoir, to purchase or condemn and to improve suitable land for a new town site to replace the portion of the town of American Falls which will be flooded by the reservoir, and to provide for the removal of buildings to such new site and to plat and to provide for appraisal of lots in such new town site and to exchange and convey such lots in full or part payment for property to be flooded by the reservoir and to sell for not less than the appraised valuation any lots not used for such exchange, $1,200,000.

The point of order is made that the provision relative to the acquisition of lands for a new town site, for the removal of buildings to the new town site, and the platting and appraisal of lots there is not authorized by existing law.

The section of the reclamation act which has been referred to several times already in the discussion of this bill, section 7, provides:

That where in carrying out the provisions of this act it becomes necessary to acquire any rights or property, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire the same for the United States by purchase or by condemnation—and so on; giving to the Secretary of the Interior the right to purchase or condemn sites for reclamation projects.

On reflection, and without any direct precedents to guide the Chair, he is inclined to recur to the ordinary rules of interpretation of such matters. For instance, if a municipality is authorized by law to condemn certain sites for purposes of public buildings, and is given by law the right of eminent domain, it does not follow as a consequence that the municipality can condemn other lands to give some one in exchange for the lands that have been thus taken. The same thing is true as to a public service corporation which is given the right of eminent domain. The fact that the corporation agrees to give another piece of land in exchange for one taken does not give the right to condemn the other piece of land which it might exchange for the one the corporation has taken.

Mr. CRAMTON. But, Mr. Chairman, the Chair will make a distinction between the right to condemn and the right to pay for lands that the owner is willing to sell.

The CHAIRMAN. There is some distinction, but none in principle so far as the act that we rely on here is concerned. It seems to me the power given to the Secretary of the Interior is the right to condemn or to pay and to settle for such lands as are taken and are injured by the proposed improvement.

The Chair does not believe that it follows as an incident of that power that the Secretary of the Interior has the right to buy other lands or to condemn, if you please, other lands, and give them to persons injured in the settlement of claim for damages. The power is restricted, and a strict interpretation of the authority must be made. The power is to condemn or purchase such lands as the Government finds necessary for the actual construction of the proposed improvement.

One other question remains, and that is whether this is to be considered as a continuation of a public work. The rule of the House on that subject is as follows, and is familiar, I have no doubt, to all Members:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public work and objects as are already in progress.

There is a remarkable scarcity of direct precedents on this subject. The Chair is obliged largely to rely upon his impressions as to what a public work is as meant by this rule. In the current law there is a similar appropriation for this purpose, and I am advised that that work is already in progress. But a public work, it seems to the Chair, must necessarily mean some distinct work, such as building a ditch, a dam, a building, something that is tangible and is distinct and separate from other things. This is a proposition to build a town, a broad general proposition, including streets and alleys and buildings and transporting the buildings—how many buildings no one knows. It does not appear to the Chair that that can be considered a public work that is in progress. The power is too broad. The proposition of building a town necessarily is so extensive that if the Chair were to construe that as a public work it seems the power given to department heads would be almost as extensive as they desire to have it.

Mr. FRENCH. Would it modify the Chair's opinion if it appeared that the Reclamation Service had gone ahead with survey work, made borings on the site of the proposed dam, and, in other words, is carrying forward right now the preliminary and basic work that must be carried forward in order to make a successful dam? That represents the situation at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say that if the authorization here was for the continuation of a dam or of a building or of a particular irrigation canal, the Chair would agree with the gentleman that it might be construed as an appropriation in continuation of a public work already in progress. But the language of this section is:

To purchase or condemn and to improve suitable land for a new town site to replace the portion of the town of American Falls which will be flooded by the reservoir, and to provide for the removal of buildings to such new site and to plat and to provide for appraisal of lots in such new town site and to exchange and convey such lots in full or part payment for property to be flooded by the reservoir—

And so forth, which goes far beyond an appropriation for any specific public work.

Mr. FRENCH. The Chair does not question the authority of any existing law for the Reclamation Service to go ahead and purchase land in the old town site in connection with the building of a dam if that shall be necessary?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no doubt about the authority of the Reclamation Service to purchase or condemn all lands necessary for the construction of an irrigation system. But this is not for an irrigation system. It is for a town site, not for irrigation, but to house settlers who have been removed from the irrigation project.

Mr. FRENCH. In one sense it is to accommodate the workmen who are necessarily employed on the project. I will say further as a matter of economy it will be for the advantage of the Government unquestionably if the arrangements were to be made in such a way that the lands can be exchanged other than by paying money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt that is true, but that is neither here nor there, and the Chair must decide the point presented. The point of order is sustained. Inasmuch as the point of order was made to the whole paragraph, it will have to be sustained to the whole paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 84 I offer lines 22, 23, and 24, and the words "American Falls Reservoir" in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 84, after line 21, insert:
"Minidoka project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, with authority in connection with the construction of American Falls Reservoir, $1,200,000."

Mr. MANN. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that the words "with authority" relates to the part that is gone out?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the words "with authority," in line 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take any more time of the committee on this proposition, but I call attention to the fact that this is a new proposition and that we are starting, and with an appropriation of $1,200,000, when the committee itself has said that it is the policy of the department not to start new propositions at this time. The Minidoka proposition is entirely completed at the present time, as much as was intended when the project was originally started, but this happens to be right near by, and so it is added on to that proposition and they call it a part of it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the reiteration by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that this is a new project can be taken for what it is worth. As a matter of fact, it is simply an extension of the present project. It is within the boundaries of the original project. There are three sections of the Minidoka project, one section lying south of the river, which is supplied with water by a pumping system; one section lying north of the river, which is supplied with water from the Minidoka Dam by gravity; and the north side extension, which it is proposed to irrigate, amounting to over 100,000 acres, lying immediately north of the middle section, joining into it, to be supplied with water from the American Falls Reservoir, which is a few miles above the Minidoka Dam.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman mean to leave the impression with the House that this is a part of the original Minidoka project as was originally authorized and intended to be constructed?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The land has been withdrawn for 14 years, the withdrawal being made shortly after the other portion of the project was withdrawn from settlement.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that when it was originally started by this House this was a part of it?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This land was withdrawn from settlement to form a part of the Minidoka project, and is not in any sense a new project.

Mr. SNELL. You admit the land was withdrawn afterwards, still you claim that this is a part of the original project as started by this House and by the Reclamation Service.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; that has always been my understanding.

Mr. SNELL. It is, the gentleman says, much larger than the original or completed part.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; it is a part of the project, but does not contain as many acres as the portion under the gravity system and the portion south of the river.

Mr. SNELL. It covers more land?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The project embraces withdrawals aggregating nearly 200,000 acres, including the last withdrawal in 1908, being the land it is proposed to irrigate by storage water from American Falls.

Mr. SNELL. I do not want to dispute the gentleman, because I think he has pretty good information in regard to these propositions, but I got it direct from the department yesterday, and they would not say that that was a part of the original project.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. We have always understood that this was a part of the original project. It was withdrawn from settlement about the same time the other land was withdrawn. It has never been entered, all applications being rejected, as it has not been open to entry since 1908. The land is desert in character.

Mr. SNELL. I grant that it is practically desert, but I still maintain that the project is right alongside the other and is practically a new one.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; it is a part of the original project. Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, even if it were a new project, it is in order in the bill. It is, however, an extension of one of the most successful irrigation projects in the country. It was the Minidoka project to which I referred in my opening statement to the House, and pointed out how extremely successful it had been. It now has an irrigation area that will take care of 2,400 farms. When completed it is expected that there will be 4,500 farms, and as fast as it is completed the public lands are taken up by settlers, who at the present time are all World War veterans, because they have the preferential right, and there are always more applications from them than can be cared for.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, earlier in the debate the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] referred to some data that he called for and which was furnished by the Director of the Reclamation Service. I may say that yesterday the Director of the Reclamation Service was before the Committee on Irrigation, and at that time I asked him for the identical data that was furnished the gentleman from New York. I learned on telephoning him that he supplied me with a copy because he had compiled the same data for the gentleman from New York, in response to his verbal request yesterday, and in response to my request when he was before the Committee on Irrigation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement to the reclamation fund the proportionate expense of operation and maintenance of the reservoirs for furnishing stored water to the lands in Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., in accordance with the provisions of section 22 of the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 604), there is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $11,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having inserted therein in 8-point type the following letter from the Director of the Reclamation Service explaining the cuts made in the various items for this service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1922.

HON. L. C. CRAMTON,
Chairman Committee on Interior Department
Appropriations, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: When I appeared before your committee you indicated that the committee might want to make some reduction under the Budget items for the reclamation projects and kindly gave me opportunity to suggest where reductions might best be made in case they were to be made.

By letter of January 3 I submitted such suggestions. I now understand that you wish these carried out in more detail so as to indicate what reduction of work on the projects my suggestions contemplate. These may be stated briefly as follows:

UNCOMPAHGRE PROJECT, COLORADO.

This project is virtually completed and on an operation and maintenance basis. The principal reduction, therefore, would be in the year's program of maintenance work. There is a certain amount of such work that can be postponed without fatal effect, such as the program of canal cleaning and similar items that are more or less a continuous process, but can be speeded up or retarded at times. My suggestion, therefore, is that if the $20,000 reduction be made, $15,000 be regarded as for maintenance and $5,000 for minor items on the lateral system, where we are finishing the work, with numerous small jobs, such as structures, short extensions here and there, etc.

It is understood, of course, that all of these estimates as to detailed expenditures are subject to contingencies that may arise between the time of estimate and the time of expenditure. I suppose that is so regarding all estimates made so far in advance, but perhaps it is particularly so respecting our work, because we are dealing with running water in natural as well as artificial channels, and emergencies are certain to arise. Floods will occasionally surprise us and canal breaks are almost inevitable. There are also many arrangements to be made with the users of water as conditions precedent to certain work.

It is doubtless due to such considerations that in all of the bills Congress has made the appropriations for the reclamation work simply by projects and amounts, leaving discretion in the department to depart from the program of details submitted with the estimates where subsequent developments made this seem necessary or wise.

Boise project, Idaho: It is believed that part of this reduction can be made first in the operation and maintenance estimates, and any balance a reduction of the funds available for the Black Canyon Dam.

Minidoka project, Idaho: The $50,000 reduction suggested would be in the work at American Falls, simply curtailing slightly the program there for expensive purchase and improvement of right of way.

Milk River project, Montana: The reduction suggested would eliminate work on the proposed Connolly dam at the Chain Lakes Reservoir site.

North Platte project, Nebraska-Wyoming: The construction on the canals would simply be adapted to the lesser funds, such as we have to do in any event from time to time as the state of the reclamation fund dictates.

Rio Grande project, New Mexico-Texas: The same thing applies here as to the North Platte, except that some of the most important ditches under way are for drainage purposes.

North Dakota pumping project, North Dakota: This project is on an operating basis, and any reduction would necessarily be in the expense for maintenance or operation.

Belle Fourche project, South Dakota: Here, too, the reduction suggested would probably best be absorbed by adapting the maintenance program.

Riverton project, Wyoming: Here the principal work under way is the excavation of the main canal, and a reduction would mean a reduced program on such work.

To give a general view of the suggestions that have been made in the most convenient way we have taken a copy of the table at page 11 of the pamphlet explaining our appropriation estimates and indicated in red ink the various suggestions that I have made. This is sent herewith.

Again thanking you for your courtesies in this connection, I am,

Very truly, yours,

A. P. DAVIS, Director.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.
SALARIES.

Office of director: Director, $6,000; chief clerk, $2,500; librarian, $2,000; photographer, $2,000; assistant photographer, $900; clerks—3 of class 1, 1 $1,000, 2 at $900 each; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; in all, $20,760.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call attention to the preceding page, to the item providing for reimbursement to the reclamation fund of the proportion of expense of operation and maintenance of the reservoirs for furnishing stored water to the lands in Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash. Is not the expense of the Yakima Indian Reservation irrigation project paid out of the Indian money or reimbursable to the Government?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Yakima proposition is very complicated, and I admit that I do not fully understand it. I do understand that there was some question as to whether other projects were taking water that belonged to the Indians, and so forth, and the particular item is for the purpose of reimbursing the reclamation fund for waters that are furnished to the Indians.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but the money appropriated for the Yakima irrigation project is to be reimbursed to the United States under certain provisions. This money is expended for the Yakima Indian irrigation project. The Reclamation Service furnishes in the first instance a part of the cost of maintenance. We reimburse the reclamation project not out of the Indian money but out of the Treasury of the United States. We require the Indians to pay out of their funds eventually the cost of the irrigation projects. The portion which they contribute for these reservoirs comes out of the Indian funds eventually, but the portion which the reclamation project is reimbursed for comes out of the Federal Treasury. I hope my friend from Michigan will think of that hereafter, because that is one of those things that is slipped in by the Reclamation Service and which is, I think, unfair to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Reclamation Service, as I understand, is hoping to get a further amount of several hundred thousand dollars, growing out of this Yakima proposition. There is a controversy existing there, and they are claiming it.

Mr. MANN. The controversy is between the Reclamation Service and the Indian irrigation service?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course, they can compromise very quickly if the money is spent out of the Federal Treasury. We pay for the Yakima irrigation project and we have that cost reimbursed by the Indians.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The reclamation project does certain work in connection with it, and we reimburse the reclamation project out of the Federal Treasury without any reimbursement by the Indians.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The old controversy passed on by the joint congressional committee decided in favor of the Indians, that they were entitled to certain water, and there was an appropriation made to provide for it, which appropriation has since proved not to be ample. Is that what the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. MANN. This bill carries a provision which has been carried for years in an appropriation for the Yakima irrigation project, and that is that the entire cost of said irrigation and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916. But this item is not reimbursable.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will freely admit that I do not understand the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, including lands in national forests, $275,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 90, line 2, after the word "forests," strike out "$275,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$425,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the object of my amendment is to restore this appropriation to the amount carried for the same purpose during the current fiscal year. The report on this bill shows that only $330,000 was appropriated for topographic surveys last year, but the sundry civil bill also carried $75,000 for such surveys within national forests, so that $425,000 was actually available. That is the minimum sum absolutely necessary if this work is to be carried on.

Many gentlemen are, no doubt, familiar with the bill introduced in this and previous Congresses by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE], proposing to complete the topographic mapping of the United States within the next 20 years. A topographic map is a relief map, which not only shows the shapes and elevations of land and water features by contour lines, but also pictures the artificial features, such as railroads, highways, and buildings in their true relation to one another and to the land and water features.

The Temple bill has been indorsed by all the engineering societies of America, and by everyone else who realizes the necessity for an accurate mapping of the country. The total cost to the Federal Government of the program will be about $37,000,000 spread over a period of 20 years. At the annual rate proposed in the amendment which I have offered it will take 50 years to completely map the continental United States, and if only $275,000 is appropriated each year for this purpose, almost a century will be consumed in carrying out this most important work.

Topographic maps are essential for almost every kind of extensive engineering work undertaken in the United States. Every department and bureau of the Government having to do with public works is constantly calling upon the Geological Survey for this kind of assistance. For example, a good topographic map is essential to an intelligent and businesslike administration of the vast tracts of land embraced in the national forests. For the successful direction of forest-fire protection and especially for the work of fire suppression maps showing accurately the location of telephone lines, roads, trails, and other means of communication and transportation, as well as the relief and character of the country in the forest area, are as necessary as elaborate military maps for the effective handling of troops. Topographic maps are needed, too, in connection with the sale of timber and the management of the extensive grazing business.

The Bureau of Public Roads is handicapped in its administration of the Federal highways act by the lack of accurate maps. Over $500,000,000 is available annually for road construction by the States, the counties, and the Nation. The expenditure of this vast sum of money must be safeguarded in every possible way, for errors in the selection of routes due to lack of knowledge of other shorter, better, and cheaper routes may easily involve the unnecessary expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

What I have said of public highways is also true of railroad construction. The railroad companies are vitally interested when new construction is proposed, because they find accurate topographic maps to be absolutely essential. No man, unless he rides high in an airship, can see on both sides of a mountain range. A topographic map showing the contour of the country enables anyone to know what the actual conditions are, no matter how rough and rugged the country may be.

Mr. REED of New York. Is not that true of all roads?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; there is demand for these maps from all over the country where the States are cooperating in the construction of good roads.

The national park service considers topographic maps essential in the administration of national parks and national monuments. They are needed not only to guide the people who visit these great national playgrounds but for proper administration, particularly in connection with fire protection and in planning new road and trail work. Thousands of people ask for maps of the national park areas and are willing to pay for them, but no adequate maps are available.

I found in connection with the preparation of the bill to create the Grand Canyon National Park that there was an error of 6 miles on the map showing the location of the mouth of Cataract Creek. I am glad to say the Geological Survey now has a field party at work in that park and accurate maps of its entire area will be made available.

The existence of a base map, such as the standard topographic map prepared by the Geological Survey, covering the entire arid and semiarid region of the United States, would eliminate a large part of the expense of all preliminary surveys made to determine the feasibility of reservoir sites and diversion schemes and to compute the area of irrigable lands. A brief office study of such maps would frequently show that a proposed project was impracticable, and the entire cost of field investigation could be saved for investigation of other projects.

The greatest advantage to the Reclamation Service to be derived from a complete topographic map of the United States would lie in the broader and more definite grasp of water-supply and storage possibilities and the consequent greater ability to coordinate these resources and to select the most meritorious projects.

The Indian Service needs topographic maps of all the Indian reservations and is often compelled to organize a topographic survey to map some particular area where construction is proposed. This work is expensive, for the reason that the engineering organization is primarily a construction section, and its men are most familiar with construction problems. Such areas as are mapped by the Indian Service to meet its construction needs will at some future date be again covered by the regular topographic mapping, thereby causing a duplication of work and expense, as was the case when the topographic map of the Papago country was made some years ago.

The Bureau of Soils of the Department of Agriculture needs base maps on which to indicate its soil classification. The topographic maps of the Geological Survey fulfill this need and are used whenever available. In areas for which these maps do not exist plain base maps are used, if adequate for the purpose, which they rarely are. There are no adequate base maps for a large part of the areas selected for soil investigations, and the soil expert is compelled to make base-map surveys in conjunction with classifying the soil. The work of this bureau is greatly retarded by the lack of topographic maps, and the cost of the soil classification for areas not covered by these maps is increased by about 20 per cent.

The completion of the topographic map of the United States would be of great value to the Post Office Department in that it would serve as a standard source of information for the compilation of post-route maps, which are prepared exclusively for departmental administration of the service, for scheme study by 20,000 railway mail clerks, and for the determination of parcel-post unit numbers of post offices in conjunction with their publication in the Official Postal Guide. It would serve as a base for the rural-delivery county maps, facilitate extension and investigation of service by post-office inspectors, and promote efficiency and accuracy in the dispatch of mail.

The Federal Power Commission is intrusted with the duty of licensing water-power sites on the public domain and navigable rivers of the United States and of requiring that every project licensed shall be so located and designed as to provide for the most economical development of the site and to be consistent with a general scheme of development of the resources of the region in the interests of water power, navigation, irrigation, and other public uses. To carry out its functions properly the commission must have full knowledge of the water resources and of the topography of the territory involved, with particular reference to reservoir sites and to the nature of the terrain as affecting location and character of structures. For these reasons topographic maps and river surveys will be of great value to that commission.

The Corps of Engineers of the Army performs both civil and military engineering work. Its most important civil engineering work is that done in river and harbor improvement. It is charged by Congress with preliminary examinations, followed by surveys to determine the feasibility of any scheme of improvement and the best means of putting it into effect. In making these examinations and surveys the first requirement is a good map of the territory drained by the river system, and in those parts of the country where basic topographic mapping has not yet been done the Corps of Engineers must organize survey parties and make maps covering at least the stream valleys. A large part of the money expended for these purposes could be saved by completing as soon as possible the general mapping of the country, and the maps would serve many other purposes as well.

One of the special military functions of the Corps of Engineers is the procurement and distribution of all the maps needed by the military forces in times of both peace and war and the making of maps of the territory not mapped by other agencies. Owing to the many other demands on the personnel of the Army engineers, a project to map the essential strategic areas with military personnel would drag on for an indefinite number of years. Moreover, the great military value of the topographic map being made by the Geological Survey has been recognized by the War Department, and upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers this map has been adopted as the map for general use by the Army.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not a fact that the Army sent an organization of map makers across to France almost in the first year of the war?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; and a large part of its personnel was made up of men who had received their training while employed by the Geological Survey. They were quickly gathered together and sent to Europe, where they did most excellent work.

It developed during the time of the Mexican border trouble that there were no accurate maps of the territory along a large part of the southern border. Among other things, it was extremely important for those in command of the American troops to know where water could be found in that desert country. I assisted in securing an appropriation of $200,000 in the Army appropriation bill, a large part of which was supposed to be used for map making, to be carried on jointly by the War Department and the Geological Survey in areas near Mexico. The United States entered the World War shortly after this money became available, and, unfortunately, some one in authority thought that the Germans might land an army on the south Atlantic coast, the country back of which up to that time had not been topographically mapped. It was thought to be dangerous to delay making maps which would aid in repelling the German invaders, so the work along the Mexican border was stopped, and there are considerable areas in southern Arizona which have not been mapped as yet.

There is no better way to teach geography than from a map of the locality in which the children attending school reside. There is nothing theoretical about a map upon which the pupils can easily recognize the features of a landscape with which they are familiar. The topographic maps issued by the Geological Survey are widely used for this purpose, and the demand for them is increasing each year.

For all of the reasons that I have given, everyone who has studied the question believes that a definite and well-coordinated program should be adopted at once and that this program should provide for completely mapping the unsurveyed and inadequately mapped portions of the United States within the next 20 years. The cost of the entire project will not be much more than the cost of building one battleship, which admittedly would be out of date in a very few years. The cost of this mapping will be spread over a period of years, so that the burden upon the taxpayers will be light. There are few other investments that Congress could make which promise such relatively large and quick returns, benefiting this generation as well as generations to come.

I shall include as a part of my remarks the following table showing the estimated cost of completing the topographic mapping of the United States and the sums that should be appropriated by Congress each year for that purpose:

Fiscal year.	Control.	Mapping.	Total Federal cost.
1922-23.....	$200,000	$750,000	$950,000
1923-24.....	300,000	1,000,000	1,300,000
1924-25.....	400,000	1,250,000	1,650,000
1925-26.....	400,000	1,500,000	1,900,000
1926-27.....	400,000	2,000,000	2,400,000
1927-28.....	400,000	2,000,000	2,400,000
1928-29.....	400,000	2,000,000	2,400,000
1929-30.....	400,000	2,000,000	2,400,000
1930-31.....	400,000	2,000,000	2,400,000
1931-32.....	300,000	2,000,000	2,300,000
1932-33.....	200,000	2,000,000	2,200,000
1933-34.....	100,000	2,000,000	2,100,000
1934-35.....	100,000	2,000,000	2,100,000
1935-36.....	100,000	2,000,000	2,100,000
1936-37.....	100,000	2,000,000	2,100,000
1937-38.....		2,000,000	2,000,000
1938-39.....		1,500,000	1,500,000
1939-40.....		1,250,000	1,250,000
1940-41.....		1,000,000	1,000,000
1941-42.....		750,000	750,000
Total.....	4,200,000	33,000,000	37,200,000

Now, gentlemen, this work must be done some time, and it should be completed within the next 20 years. The time to begin is now, and the surveys should be pushed forward as rapidly as possible. But instead of looking to any such desirable end the Committee on Appropriations proposes to cut the amount appropriated this year for topographical surveys to $275,000. If the Temple bill were passed, Congress would be called upon to appropriate $950,000 at this time. That committee is not justified in recommending such a drastic cut in this appropriation. It is poor economy and will result in depriving our people of information that is essential and which they should have. I sincerely trust that the committee will see fit to adopt my amendment, which will at least restore the amount to the sum appropriated by Congress last year for topographic surveys, if not to increase it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the hope of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to complete the topographic mapping of the United States in 20 years, so that the Post Office Department may have use of those topographical maps in laying out the free rural delivery routes and star routes in Michigan and in Indiana and Arizona and elsewhere, and in order that invading armies may be repelled through the use of these maps to guide our own troops, and on the ground that they are necessary for the purposes that the gentleman has emphasized, I appreciate the economy of the gentleman from Arizona in asking for only $425,000. The Geological Survey, which appreciates the need even more keenly than does the gentleman from Arizona, and whose idea of what will be needed next year is $730,000—

Mr. HAYDEN. Which is the exact amount carried in the Temple bill—

Mr. CRAMTON. The amount proposed to be carried in the beginning in the Temple bill, although I am told it would be gradually increased during that 20 years to $2,000,000 annually—and that is what the gentleman's program really means—I say, I appreciate his spirit of economy in asking for only $425,000 this year.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] has been referred to our committee, and its whole authorization of appropriations to carry out 20 years' work is $42,000,000, I think.

Mr. CRAMTON. Can the gentleman state what provision, if any, there is for cooperation by the States?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There is a general provision that the States may cooperate.

Mr. HAYDEN. I can give the gentleman that information. The Federal appropriation under the Temple bill for this work would be $33,000,000, and the cooperation by the States would be $12,000,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; and that $12,000,000 will be furnished mostly by States in the East, while the Western States, including the State of Arizona, will get their work done largely by the Federal Government. The policy is that the Federal Government shall get the work done in cooperation with the States, and the reason why the committee has suggested a reduction to $270,000 instead of $425,000, as the gentleman from Arizona would like it, or of $750,000, as the Geological Survey would like it, is that this is a time when we have got to retrench wherever possible, and those things that may be desirable to be done at some time can wait and must wait now.

This work can wait and nobody will suffer from it. The farmers will get their rural mail and the armies will march just the same, whether we have the work done or not. In the gentleman's State the work is done entirely by the Federal Government. In my State and other States it is done in cooperation with the State. There are only 14 States in the whole Union that have promised to cooperate next year. My prophecy to the Director of the Geological Survey was that by next January the spirit of economy, the wave of economy going over the country, would reach even the State legislatures, and mighty few of the States would appropriate next winter to cooperate with this work. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct a statement made by the chairman of the committee. A great deal of cooperative work is being done to-day between the Geological Survey and the several States. But it is not limited by any means to the States of the East. On the other hand, the cooperative work is carried forward by the Federal Government in the Western States as much as in the Eastern States. Of course, where the public lands are, there must necessarily be a large amount of Federal money expended. I am speaking of lands that have been patented. And when it comes to cooperative work, last year the State of California spent $14,000; the State of Arizona, represented by my colleague [Mr. HAYDEN], expended $3,000; the State I represent in part upon this floor expended $3,500; Missouri expended $16,500; while the State of Pennsylvania expended $25,000 and the State of New York $15,000. Oregon expended $5,500. I mention these merely to suggest that the cooperative work is not apportioned on the basis of population, but represents in large part the demand of the several States, the States indicating variously in the East and the West whether they desire to cooperate, and in that way showing that they are interested in the carrying forward of this work.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. The figures of next year to match the pending payments show that Arizona has dropped out, Idaho has dropped out, and only three public-land States are promising cooperation next year—California, Oregon, and Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the examination and classification of lands requisite to the determination of their suitability for enlarged homesteads, stock-raising homesteads, public watering places, and stock driveways, or other uses, as required by the public land laws, $150,000, to be immediately available:

Total United States Geological Survey, $1,325,940.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAYDEN: Page 91, line 9, strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$300,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment proposes to restore the amount of this appropriation to the sum that was made available last year. I am merely seeking to have appropriated $300,000 for the examination and classification of lands, the amount recommended by the Director of the Budget. The hearings show that in 1918, $350,000 was expended for this purpose. In 1919 it was $200,000, and since that time it has been $300,000 annually.

I can find no justification in the hearings for this drastic reduction. Congress has passed the enlarged homestead act, the stock raising homestead act, the law relating to the segregation of public watering places, and for the establishment of stock driveways. Public land can not be disposed of to settlers under these laws until it is classified by the Geological Survey to be as of the character described in these several acts. If this reduction is made in the appropriation for classification the inevitable result will be that settlers who desire to obtain homes upon the public domain under the laws that I have mentioned must wait until such time as the Geological Survey, with the limited force allowed it, can make the necessary classification.

It seems to me that some consideration should be given to recommendations made by the Director General of the Budget. When the Budget measure was under consideration in the House we were told that Congress was creating something like the sacred cow of India, worthy of being worshiped, but apparently the Committee on Appropriations is without reverence. A careful study is supposed to have been made by the Budget Bureau of the needs of the various branches of the Government. Wherever the Budget Bureau has recommended a drastic cut the committee has not hesitated at all to accept the judgment of the Director General of the Budget; but whenever the Director General of the Budget has recommended a reasonable amount, in this case the same amount as that allowed for the same purpose last year, the committee on its own motion, without any evidence, at least none appearing in the record, arbitrarily and drastically cuts the sum in half. To do so can have no other effect in this instance than to make it impossible for settlers desiring to go upon the public domain to obtain homes under these various laws within any reasonable time, because they must wait to find out whether or not the land which they propose to enter is of the character described in the acts. Either Congress should not have passed laws allowing settlement on the public domain under the enlarged and 640-acre homestead act and the other laws to which I have referred, which require a classification of the land, or, having passed such laws, Congress should appropriate the necessary funds to properly carry them out.

Cutting this appropriation in two has no warrant in the amount of urgent work which the Geological Survey faces. Of applications for classification of enlarged and stock-raising homestead lands about 8,000 are pending, and the 600 or 700 received each month makes it difficult to cut down this accumulation as fast as the public interests require. Under the mineral leasing acts, although more than 11,000 oil and gas applications alone have been acted on in the past two years, the incoming stream of new applications about balances the outgoing reports. There is neither any indication of diminution of rate of incoming applications nor promise of practical decrease in number of pending cases. Under such circumstances any reduction in this appropriation can mean nothing but delayed service to the public where prompt performance on the survey's part in the administration of the public land laws is a duty not to be shirked without actual loss to the Nation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, all these several acts were passed in response to definite demands. We passed the enlarged homestead act, the stock raising homestead act, and so on, and, of course, there was an immediate demand for lands under them. This item was appropriated for at the start at $150,000 and went up to $300,000. Like all activities that are once started, they never want to let up on them; but the information of the committee, fortified, I think, by the statements in the hearings as to the number of cases pending under all of these items, is that the pressure is moderating somewhat, and that this item is one which we could commence to cut down again a little. It is not a permanent expenditure. It does not have to be carried at that amount permanently, and we thought this was a good time to retrench somewhat.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is not an activity that can be increased or diminished by the bureau itself. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] did not intend to convey that idea, because it is dependent entirely upon the number of applications for enlarged homesteads and for stock-raising homesteads, and also the number of water-power applications and cooperative reports; also on the gas and oil substructures, and mineral permits, leases, and patents.

Under the enlarged homestead law there are 953 applications pending. This means that there are that many men unable to get their filings on their lands. They must wait from a year to a year and a half, or maybe longer. At this time there are 7,122 stock-raising homestead applications pending and 106 Nevada current water reclamation applications pending. These people are entitled to some recognition. Under the water power act there are some 56 outstanding permits undisposed of, some 14 applications, and they take a great deal of work and a great deal of time to get the data together. These people all have to wait. The Government provides that certain things must be done. These surveys must be had. The examination must be made by the Geological Survey before your application on file will be disposed of. The Government at one time or another must provide this means of information. It does not want to hold up its citizens. It wants them to get the stock-raising homesteads and the enlarged homesteads. It wants the water-power applications disposed of.

Mr. HAYDEN. And the same way with the oil and gas.

Mr. RAKER. And the same way with oil and gas. There are many of these applications, and it will help the resources of the country. The applications in regard to wells on desert homesteads are to be disposed of. It is not an expenditure of money that can be dispensed with. If there are 10,000 applications pending now, and you give a qualified amount of money, appropriate for 5,000, you will have 5,000 the next fiscal year. You will have 5,000 undisposed of, and you have 5,000 American citizens dissatisfied with the way you are conducting business. You will then have the same amount of examination and the extra 5,000 applications in the next year, whereas if you make the necessary appropriation which the department requires now you will have the 10,000 applications already disposed of, and during the next fiscal year you will be prepared to handle the new ones as they come in. It creates a better feeling; it gives a man some satisfaction with the work that is being done, because he is not delayed; he is not held up in regard to improving his home and his property. If he has some money, if he has performed some work in regard to gas and oil or other minerals, he wants to know whether he is going to get a permit. He is entitled to it. The Government is repaid for the gas and oil, because if he gets a permit and gets a producing well the Government gets a certain percentage on the production. So, as a matter of fact, you are not losing anything. And the water-power development is the same way; nothing lost. What we want is that the present work be so handled as not to create dissatisfaction and unpleasant feelings among so many American citizens scattered all over the West who want to develop the country and want to make their homes and are willing to put what they own on the tax roll so that they can bear their share of the burden of the local government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances, with a view to improving health conditions and increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries; and including all equipment, supplies, expenses of travel, and subsistence: Provided, That no part thereof may be used for investigation in behalf of any private party, $125,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 93, lines 1 and 2, after the word "subsistence," before the colon, insert a comma and the figures "$125,000," and in line 3, after the word "party," strike out the comma and the amount "$125,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Persons employed during the fiscal year 1923 in field work outside of the District of Columbia under the Bureau of Mines may be detailed temporarily for service in the District of Columbia for purposes of preparing results of their field work; all persons so detailed shall be paid in addition to their regular compensation only their actual traveling expenses or per diem in lieu of subsistence in going to and returning therefrom: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the payment to employees of the Bureau of Mines of their necessary expenses, or per diem in lieu of subsistence while on temporary detail in the District of Columbia, for purposes only of consultation or investigations on behalf of the United States. All details made hereunder, and the purposes of each, during the preceding fiscal year shall be reported in the annual estimates of appropriations to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the idea of authorizing these men in the field to be brought into the district preparing to do this field work? Can not they do that where they are and use the mails or other means of communication?

Mr. CRAMTON. This is a continuation of the practice heretofore. There are seasons of the year when they can not well do their work in the field and that time is utilized in preparing the notes, and so forth.

I am advised by the Director of the Bureau of Mines that there is no great number of these people here for any length of time. In the hearings I called the attention of Dr. Bain to this, and I quote from the hearings, at page 758:

Have you anything to suggest under that item?

Dr. BAIN. We have found it very necessary legislation, and all that language is necessary on account of the auditor. We have to call field men here from time to time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Are they kept here for any extended periods?

Dr. BAIN. No. A list of the men detailed during the last year, with length of detail in Washington, is shown on page 667 of the Book of Estimates for 1923. For example, when I sent the chief mining engineer to Alaska this summer, I called in a coal-mining engineer, who served in the office while he was gone.

There is the need of occasionally bringing these people in, but there is no great number of them in at any time.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that coal-mining engineer who was brought in was not brought in under the authority of this paragraph. If he came in to perform work for somebody else, he would not come in under this authorization. The only authorization for bringing them in under this paragraph would be to prepare the results of their own field work.

Mr. CRAMTON. I agree with the gentleman in that, but neither the gentleman from Massachusetts nor myself knows that this coal-mining engineer was not preparing the results of his own field work.

Mr. WALSH. As I caught the reading of the testimony of this official, he came in because they sent another engineer to Alaska, and it was evidently to fulfill the duties of the absent engineer.

Mr. CRAMTON. It may be that Dr. Bain was not particularly happy in the illustration that he used, but the gentleman will see the need of a little elasticity as long as the authority is not abused.

Mr. WALSH. I do not mean to insinuate that the authority is abused, but I can not understand why it is necessary that we should have to pay their traveling expenses and subsistence in order that they might prepare results of their own field work here in Washington. If it is only a matter of computation in going over their notes, that can all be done where the investigation is made. It looks to me as if it is just adding to the expense of this inquiry under the bureau.

However, Mr. Chairman, in view of the explanation given by the gentleman, which is to the effect, as I understand it, that this practice is not indulged in to any great extent, and that it is not intended to do it on any large scale, and with the instance cited, I shall not insist upon the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter section 3711 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, and the act of March 15, 1898, providing for the inspection of fuel in the District of Columbia, and section 3713 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to certificates of inspection, shall not apply to wood or coal purchased by the Secretary of the Interior for the distribution in the District of Columbia through the Government fuel yards of the Bureau of Mines, and purchases of fuel for the Government fuel yards may be made on a commercial basis or on railroad car weights free on board mines or other destination, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior the circumstances may warrant.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Pages 96 and 97, beginning with line 20 on page 96, strike out the paragraph ending in line 6, page 97.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask why that is done?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph is of a legislative character, but the committee felt justified in reporting it, feeling that it did not involve anything in the way of controversy, but simply was meant to effect a saving to the Government to do away with certain switching charges, and so forth, that did not seem to be necessary.

Mr. MANN. Oh, a good deal more than that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; if the gentleman will permit. But the Bureau of Mines have been in consultation with the representatives of the comptroller's office, and they thought they had it in shape satisfactory to that official. On that theory the committee passed upon it, and it is in the bill. Further investigation has developed, as the gentleman from Illinois says, that there is more involved than that, and while part of it seemed desirable to accomplish and the other seemed in question, and there was some controversy, it finally developed, between the comptroller and the Bureau of Mines, that they were not entirely in accord, the committee felt that as a legislative item we would better drop it out of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I am not going to oppose that, but under the existing law all coal that is bought, sold, or delivered in the District of Columbia has to have the certificate of a weighmaster, for which he receives, I believe, 25 cents a ton, and all wood that is bought, sold, or delivered has to have the certificate of somebody, for which, I believe, he receives 7 cents a cord. It is perfectly ridiculous to say that the Government of the United States, buying this coal in large quantities and delivering it to the departments, shall have to have every wagonload of this coal accompanied with a certificate from a weighmaster and pay 25 cents a ton for the weighing of that coal. I supposed this was to do away with that.

Mr. CRAMTON. That was it in part, but we have had the comptroller and the Bureau of Mines trying to get together on this, and as it is a legislative item, the committee felt less free to go ahead with anything that had any controversy in it than as if we had been a legislative committee.

Mr. MANN. Of course, you can employ a man to weigh this coal and pay him a salary and save four-fifths of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of land, approximately 125 feet frontage on Forbes Street, by 150 feet deep, together with buildings thereon, directly east of and adjoining the Bureau of Mines Experimental Station at 4800 Forbes Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., $28,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman to get beyond hope and to give us some facts.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I think the Chair will be convinced that it is in order, even as it is in the bill, and I would not want to see my good friend in opposition to a meritorious proposition.

Mr. MANN. Why is it in order?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am sure the Chair will be convinced that it is in order as a continuing project, a public improvement which has been established in Pittsburgh for a number of years. Under this provision it is proposed to continue the project by the purchase of certain adjoining land, a hundred and twenty-five feet fronting on Forbes Street, Pittsburgh.

Mr. MANN. In order that the gentleman may argue it, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I was saying that I hoped the gentleman from Illinois would not make it, for however certain I might be, I should hesitate to enter the lists with him on a parliamentary question.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In order that I may say that the land in question immediately joins the land the Government now has in its experimental station, there are precedents, as I understand it, to the effect that being adjacent land the item for its purchase would be in order.

If the gentleman intends to make it, I think he had better make it now.

Mr. MANN. I do not know I shall. I thought perhaps the gentleman wanted to discuss the point of order. I think it is subject to the point of order, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The proposal is meritorious, and I am sure the gentleman from Illinois is vitally interested in the work which is being done. The Bureau of Mines now has its chief laboratory and experiment station in the center of a great public building plaza in Pittsburgh. Included in these buildings are the Carnegie Technological Institute, the University of Pittsburgh, the Margaret Morrison School, Carnegie Museum and Library, and the Soldiers' Memorial Hall. It is a very fine situation, and the Bureau of Mines has been doing there a great work in the way of experimentation rescue work. Now there is a tract of land of 125 feet frontage immediately adjoining the present large building there. It is occupied in part by a brick building. It is part of an estate which has been in the orphans court, and an offer has been made by the official in charge to sell this tract at once to the Government for about $28,000. That would make a price of $200 a foot or thereabouts, a remarkable low price for this property. I have no doubt that this lot will command a much higher price very soon. The property is worth more than the price asked for it. It is now within the power of the Government to secure it. A large apartment building put there in that section will shut off the light from the laboratories and handicap the work extremely. The Director of the Bureau of Mines and the local officials desire very much to have the right to protect the present institution. They are as much interested in economy in Pittsburgh as we are, but they desire to purchase this land so that nobody else will get it and interfere with the development of a splendid work.

Mr. MANN. Does my friend mean to say that the Bureau of Mines is interested in economy?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am inclined to believe they are, since they did not ask for an additional building for which there is real need.

Mr. MANN. I have never seen any evidence of it. Why did not they construct this building which they did construct in such a way that light would not be shut off by adjacent property being built upon it? Any man of brains ought to know better than that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That ought to have been taken into consideration, but perhaps there was no thought of the present situation, which is due to the settlement of an estate. If it is not bought by the Government, it will be sold to private parties, who, of course, will try to make a profit out of it. We are now in a position where by spending $28,000 we can obtain what will cost a great deal more later.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure that if we do pay $28,000 we can not buy it next year at $20,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If my friend had been with me last Friday and had gone past this building and had seen its key position and the crowds of people on every side he would have been brought to the conclusion that $200 a foot was a low price for the property.

Mr. MANN. I have not seen any great evidence in recent years of practically vacant property rapidly rising in value.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This property is improved with a brick building, and if it was bought by private interests they would probably put up an apartment building.

Mr. MANN. It is practically vacant property, because this brick building is practically of no value.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is true. One hundred and twenty-five feet frontage on a great street in Pittsburgh does not need any building on it to mean a value of the sum involved. In view of the work being done by the Bureau of Mines in Pittsburgh, this $28,000 can be expended to splendid advantage and be an economical investment at this time.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I certainly thank the gentleman for this latest act added to the innumerable actions he has performed for the efficient advancement of the public service. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Lassen Volcanic National Park, Calif.: For protection and improvement, $3,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 102, line 2, strike out the figures "$3,000" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the law creating this park limits it to $5,000. The superintendent or director of the park is unable to do what ought to be done, and we ask now that you give $5,000. The Secretary of the Interior has asked that the limitation be raised entirely for this park so that a sufficient amount may be used to improve it as it ought to be. There are many reasons why this should be granted and the $5,000 allowed instead of $3,000, and I ask to extend my remarks, as I feel satisfied that the committee will raise it to $5,000, so I will not take any more time at the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sequoia National Park, California: For administration, protection, and maintenance, including not exceeding $2,000 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $32,000; for construction of storehouse, bunkhouse, two quarters for employees at permanent headquarters on Middle Fork at Alder Creek, and miscellaneous new construction, $5,500; in all, $62,500.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, line 15, after the amount "$22,000" insert "for continuing construction, Middle Fork Road, $25,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is simply proposed to correct the text. That item was intended to be included in the bill, and is included in the total of the appropriation. It is simply to correct the text.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF.

For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, books and illustrative apparatus, and general repairs and improvements, $95,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. RAKER. I ask that only the first amendment of the three I offer be read now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: On page 107, line 4, strike out "$95,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in the next section I will have another amendment pending, to strike out the "$9,000" and insert "$10,000," and then a new paragraph to add $12,000. That was estimated by the Budget Bureau after a personal investigation. The trustees of the institution went over the matter personally in regard to all of these items and approved them. Fair consideration ought to be given to the teachers in the institution. Certain improvements on the real estate ought to be allowed and a small amount of land purchased, so as to square up the tract, in all so that the school buildings and grounds will be properly provided for.

Sometimes it is not exactly understood, but as a matter of fact this is the only deaf college as a college in the world under Government supervision, and we ought to provide at least the same amount of salary for the professors in that institution, who have given 15 or 20 years of their lives to the work, as you give a young school teacher leaving the normal school and commencing on her first year in the public schools in the District of Columbia.

Now, as covering the whole matter and as part of my statement, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the president of the college may be inserted as part of my remarks.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman—which I do not intend to do—does the gentleman writing the letter refer to the fact that the gentleman has recommended some students for admission that have been admitted?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no objection.

Mr. RAKER. This letter covers the three amendments:

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1922.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My DEAR Mr. RAKER: I have a copy of the new bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior, which now carries our main appropriations item. This is House bill 10329.

It provides for the support of the institution, including general expenses, $95,000. The board of directors agreed to ask for $100,000 for the coming year, and the Budget Bureau agreed to this amount. The bill provides $9,000 for repairs. The sum of $10,000 was asked for by our board and agreed to by the Budget Bureau. Our request also included, with the approval of the Budget authorities, an item of $12,000 for the purchase of 6.2 acres of land at the northeast corner of our institution, which are most desirable as institution property.

If you believe it wise, I would like to have you introduce the enclosed amendments to the bill.

It can be pointed out, in connection with our current expenses, that our employees are badly underpaid in many instances, 11 of our skilled teachers receiving less than $1,500 per year. Domestic, lawn hands, farm hands, and the office force receive less than the current wages paid in such institutions as the Government Hospital for the Insane and the Soldiers' Home. Our people do not receive the bonus of $240 per year, nor will their salaries be increased by any reclassification bill, as such bills provide only for the civil employees of the Government, while our employees are not classed as Government employees at all.

In connection with the item for repairs for our institution, it can be well said that efficiency and economy call for slightly additional expenses now to maintain the buildings and grounds in proper condition and to make up for many repairs neglected during the war time. The value of our buildings is at least $600,000, and most of them are old. They are 23 in number and many date back between 1870 and 1880. Our grounds comprise 103 acres, with thousands of feet of drive-ways and walks. Anyone used to the handling of real estate will agree that $10,000 is really too little for keeping in repair such a plant as ours.

The parcel of land for which the institution asks appropriation is a most desirable addition to our grounds and will complete them to streets as boundaries. The land will no doubt increase in value in the future. If there is any serious objection to buying the land for the institution, it would be possible to add a provision that in case the land is sold the Government should be reimbursed to the extent of the appropriation made for the purchase.

Very truly, yours,

PERCIVAL HALL, President.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a peculiar institution. I understand it is very well managed, and is a worthy institution. But it is peculiar in this, that it belongs to a private corporation, and the Federal Government is maintaining and supporting it when it belongs to a private corporation. The Federal Government has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in constructing buildings on land that does not belong to it, and when the institution ceases to be used for its present purposes those buildings will become the property of a private corporation.

In the committee it seemed that if at this time of economy and depression we gave to that institution the amount that it has for the current fiscal year, they ought to be satisfied. But instead of being satisfied that institution, having been petted and pampered for years and the Government having made donations of buildings to this private corporation, it sends a particularly invidious form of lobbying circular to Congress. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] said he did not get one. I did not get one, because I have not asked or been given any favors from that institution. But the head of that institution thinks apparently that whenever they grant the admission of a student from a State on the recommendation of a Congressman it is a favor to that Congressman that should chain him to the chariot wheel. So a letter is sent out like this to those Members of Congress that the doctor thinks are under obligation to that institution:

Knowing of your interest in our institution through your recommendation of one of our deaf students, -----, from -----, I am writing to you to ask support in our request for a small increase in appropriations for our institution as carried in the Interior Department appropriation bill, known as H. R. 10329. Sixty-seventh Congress, second session. This increase will be provided for in amendments to the above bill, offered by Congressman RAKER, of California, a member of our board of directors.

We have three Members of Congress, I think, on a board of directors of 15. The Government furnishes the buildings and the money to run it, and they let us have three very distinguished Congressmen upon the board, a board of 15, so that the Government's representation is entirely in a minority.

I hope that this amendment will be decisively voted down. I am sure it would have been anyway. It ought to be, and further because that institution should learn not to circularize Members of Congress that they think they hold under obligations or under a form of obligation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the Columbia Institution for the Deaf is a great institution and it does exceedingly good work. I received one of the letters to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has referred, and although I have no recollection whatever of having recommended the person named in the letter to the institution, it is more than likely that I did so. However, I did not do it on the basis of a trade. Because the Government is practically supporting this institution and because in order for an applicant to get into that institution they sometimes require a letter from a Member of Congress, I have assumed that it was perfectly proper to give such a letter in a suitable case. I have never understood that by doing that sort of thing I pledged myself to vote for an increase in the appropriation regardless of the merits of the proposition. I think the distinguished gentleman who is at the head of that institution makes a grave mistake and misunderstands the position of Members of Congress when he assumes in his letters that because a Member of Congress may feel under some obligation to the institution for admitting an inmate he regards that as a trade on the basis of which a Member of Congress is required to vote for a larger sum than he thinks is appropriate. I am always quite willing to have any of these people send me communications explaining the merits of a proposition. I am quite willing to consider on its merits any claim for an increase. I do not assume because I speak to somebody or attend his dinner or recommend somebody that I am obliged to vote money without regard to the merits of the proposition.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SEARS. No doubt Dr. Hall knows my colleague as well as I do.

Mr. MANN. He does not.

Mr. SEARS. And he would not send any such letter to my friend—

Mr. MANN. He did send the letter. What is the use of saying he did not. He did send the letter and I received it.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman, who is very good-natured, might allow me to finish my sentence. I say he would not send any such letter, believing he could purchase the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, who is not purchasable. I will take upon myself the responsibility of saying that such is not the case.

Mr. MANN. I do not ask the gentleman to say that I am not purchasable. I do not need the gentleman's indorsement on that subject.

Mr. SEARS. But I say this college has been working for years, and had long hearings, and did not get anywhere, and I doubt if the head of this institution thought there was any impropriety in simply suggesting some of the work he had done.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing at any time to consider the merits of any of these propositions; but the only purpose of this letter was to get gentlemen whom they thought were under obligations to them to vote regardless of the merits of the proposition. That is a mighty poor misunderstanding of the position of Members of Congress, and I make these remarks only because I hope the gentleman in charge of this institution will know better in the future. What would we think if the head of West Point or Annapolis should send a letter to Members of Congress saying, "Because you have got an appointee in this institution you must pay us more money, regardless of its merits." That might appeal to my friend from Florida, but it would not appeal to me.

Mr. RAKER. I move to strike out the last three words. When this report was made to the House the trustees of the institution met, and we observed that there was a less amount provided for the work of the institution next year than was requested by the directors when they met last fall. The fact is that the Director of the Budget sent two men to the institution to investigate it, the cost and all, and they made a report to the Director of the Budget, and he recommended the amount we are asking for here to-day. It was suggested that many of the Members of the House did not realize that people from their States were getting results, and that unfortunate deaf people were being sent out into the world well equipped to meet the necessities and exigencies of life because of going through this institution, and this letter to them is nothing more than calling their attention to the fact that the institution in which they and their constituents are interested should have full and due care when the matter came before the House. Clearly the president of the institution never intimated in his letter, never intended and does not intend even to suggest to anybody to vote for this appropriation. The calling of their attention to it is only what is done every day. Every Member gets letters from different organizations and different departments calling attention to their needs and necessities. These officers recommended it, and it seems nothing more than right and proper—clearly nothing improper. The president calls attention to the fact that the institution needed this assistance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 107, line 7, strike out "$9,000" and insert "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 107, after line 7, insert the following: "For the purchase of 6.2 acres of land between Mount Olivet Road, West Virginia Avenue, and the northeast boundary of the institution grounds, at present belonging to Richard E. Palro, $12,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOWARD UNIVERSITY.

For maintenance, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, ice and stationery, the balance of which shall be paid from donations and other sources, of which sum not less than $2,200 shall be used for normal instruction, $100,000.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$100,000" and make it "$90,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SEARS: Page 107, line 14, amend by striking out "$100,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$90,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

Governor, $10,000; secretary, $5,400; in all, $15,400.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What has been the salary of the Governor of Hawaii prior to this?

Mr. CRAMTON. Seven thousand dollars.

Mr. WALSH. Why is it increased to $10,000 in this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Congress recently passed the Hawaiian homes commission act, an important measure, and that included among other provisions an increase of the salary for the governor and also for the secretary. That is now the law.

Mr. WALSH. Was that increase made because of additional duties imposed under that act, or what was the reason for it?

Mr. CRAMTON. The act is the act approved July 9, 1921. I have examined the report, and I have examined the debates in the House and in the Senate. There is no discussion or explanation of this particular increase.

Mr. WALSH. That simply authorizes the increase. It does not make it necessary that it should be voted by the House. I wondered why it is that they are increasing the salary of the governor of that Territory so much above that of the salary of the Governor of the Territory of Alaska, where there is much more important work being done. A railroad is being built there, and there are resources there that are very large, which are sought to be opened up and made available to the people. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out $10,000 and inserting $7,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 109, line 11, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,000."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the chairman of the subcommittee, this will restore the salary to what it was prior to this Hawaiian homes commission law, which was passed, and it also restores it to the same basis as that provided for the Governor of Alaska, in which Territory, as I have already stated, there are many more governmental activities. I do not think there is any justification for making this preference in favor of the Governor of Hawaii.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, your subcommittee was somewhat surprised by this estimate, and we sought the occasion for it. Inasmuch as the legislative committee has so recently reported this increase in salary, and Congress has within a few months authorized it, the Committee on Appropriations did not feel it was our function to overrule the legislation enacted by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DOWELL) there were—ayes 23, noes 21.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers, and pending that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. DOWELL (interrupting the count). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum and ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twelve gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, was the total amended?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is authorized to correct the total.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for completion of the construction and equipment of railroad between Seward and Fairbanks, in the Territory of Alaska, together with necessary sidings, spurs, and lateral branches, to be immediately available, $3,110,210: Provided, That no individual shall be paid an annual salary out of this fund of more than $10,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 110, after line 12, insert: "Authority is granted to purchase during the fiscal year 1923, from the appropriation made for the construction and operation of railroads in Alaska, articles and supplies for sale to employees and contractors, the appropriation to be reimbursed by the proceeds of such sales.

"During the fiscal year 1923 there shall be covered into the appropriation established from time to time under the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes,' approved March 12, 1914, as amended, the proceeds of the sale of material utilized for temporary work and structures in connection with the operations under said act, as well as the sales of all other condemned property which has been purchased or constructed under the provisions thereof, also any moneys refunded in connection with the construction and operations under said act, and a report hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of its next session."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order for just a minute?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will state that the language is the same that is carried at the present time. It is only through an error that it was omitted from this bill. I am advised that this language is essential to their operations.

Mr. BLANTON. It is the identical language that has been carried once or twice in an appropriation act, but there is no substantive law authorizing it. I make the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman from Texas will yield, I am not arguing the merits of the point of order but simply stating the merits of the matter. But it is the same language as in the current law, and I was in hopes the gentleman would not object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made; what does the gentleman say?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman from Texas make the point as to both paragraphs or as to one?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I make it as to both, because it contains legislation that is unauthorized by law. Simply because it has been carried in an appropriation bill does not make it substantive law.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand that perfectly, but we have authorized the construction of this railroad in Alaska. The first paragraph is for the purchase from the appropriation of articles and supplies for sale to employees and contractors, the appropriation to be reimbursed by the proceeds of such sales. In the absence of the statute of the original act for the construction of the road, I assume that there is nothing to authorize it, and in that case it is legislation and is subject to the point of order, although the language is very necessary, but in the absence of more definite information about the act, I will concede that point of order. The other is a paragraph which provides that during the year there shall be covered into the appropriation established from time to time under the authority for the construction of the railroad in Alaska the proceeds of the sale of material utilized for temporary work and structures in connection with the operation under said act, as well as the sales of all other condemned property which has been purchased or constructed under the provisions thereof, and also any moneys refunded in connection with the construction and operations under said act. The only effect of that—it does not authorize them to sell this material.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman tell us how many million dollars more this railroad has cost us than was contemplated at the time it was first suggested it should be built?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I do not understand that would affect the point of order. I do not think it would have any bearing on it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's amendment provides that extra money can be put into the plant without action of Congress or having any supervision over it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, that would not affect the point of order, but it is pertinent to the merits of the item. As I understand, they have the authority to sell this property. The question now is whether it shall go into miscellaneous receipts in the Treasury or whether it shall be used for the purpose of this railroad, and the question, of course, is properly a matter of real economy in the construction of the work. Sometimes some worn-out material may be disposed of and new machinery put in place of it, and under this provision they would be permitted to use the proceeds toward the purchase of the new, so that the question becomes one of an additional appropriation of an additional sum. This proposes to appropriate not only a definite sum before mentioned, but a further indefinite sum—namely, the amount that is realized from the surplus of certain property in connection with the construction and operation, and I submit that paragraph would not be subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from Michigan. Under the Alaska act of March 12, 1914, what was to be done with the proceeds of the sale of material sold under that act?

Mr. CRAMTON. Without this language it would go, I assume, into miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. BLANTON. Just like all other.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Further reserving the point of order, I would like to ask my colleague if the $3,110,210 is the limit of cost in the form of appropriations? Was that in addition?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; the authorization was recently raised from $52,000,000 to $56,000,000, an increase of $4,000,000, and the present appropriation of $3,110,000 plus is part of the $4,000,000, leaving between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars yet to be appropriated within the authorized cost.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas raise the point of order to both sections?

Mr. BLANTON. Against the whole amendment, because it is legislation the effect of which makes the whole amendment obnoxious.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if unanimous consent is necessary I will ask that the two paragraphs be separated. I had not anticipated objection. I concede the point of order as to the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be separated into two paragraphs. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object. I think we are going in the dark.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, that being so, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CRAMTON. I offer another amendment, it being the exact paragraph which the Clerk has.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 110, after line 12, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"During the fiscal year 1923 there shall be covered into the appropriation established from time to time under the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes,' approved March 12, 1914, as amended, the proceeds of the sale of material utilized for temporary work and structures in connection with the operations under said act, as well as the sales of all other condemned property which has been purchased or constructed under the provisions thereof, also any moneys refunded in connection with the construction and operations under said act, and a report hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of its next session."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment contains legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that under the language of this bill, which leaves it absolutely open without any limitation whatever, there could be property condemned to the value of $56,000,000, the whole total appropriation authorized for the building of this road. There is nothing here to control the amount. It could be any amount. It is just a question of how much property there is that could be condemned, and that is left to the discretion of individuals concerning whom we know nothing at all. I submit to the Chair that it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee just on that point, what property can be sold up there without any authority of law, and who suggested it? It seems to me that is a vital thing.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I suppose some machinery that is worn out, which can be sold and new machinery bought, and junk of different kinds.

Mr. BEGG. If we were to put that language in the law and a man wanted to be disreputable and dishonorable, could he go on and sell valuable assets?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, you put into the hands of one man better than $50,000,000 to construct that railroad, and if he were the kind who would try to fool Congress on this, he would have had a good share of that $50,000,000 long ere this.

Mr. BEGG. Well, some one has gotten away with a good deal of it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not in a dishonest way.

Mr. BEGG. Then your answer is no answer at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is not the slightest suspicion of any lack of integrity in the construction of this railroad. We have used the same language that has been used before.

Mr. BEGG. You think we should trust anybody to sell all the property he wanted for what he saw fit, and do what he please with it?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not said that.

Mr. BEGG. That is practically what the gentleman said.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment, in substance, provides that the proceeds of the sale of certain property sold by virtue of an act of Congress approved March 12, 1914, together with the sales of other condemned property that may have been purchased or constructed under the provisions of that act, together with any moneys refunded in connection with the construction and operation of that act, may be collected in a fund and may be used from time to time for the purposes provided in this section.

It seems to the Chair that this creates a revolving fund. It is not the appropriation of an unexpended balance, which could be done, but it is the creation of a fund which is revolving in its nature. It seems to the Chair that this must be subject to the point of order as legislation in an appropriation bill. The concluding language in the amendment is: "And a report hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of its next session." That is plainly legislation, and as such legislation would invalidate the whole section, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to detain the Chair, but I want to be sure as to the exact nature of his ruling. Is the Chair's ruling based entirely upon the language in connection with making the report?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair believes the first part of the section also constitutes legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Very well.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Oklahoma opposed to the bill?

Mr. CARTER. I am opposed to these items in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the gentleman's motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CARTER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendments: On page 13 strike out lines 8, 9, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, and 25, said lines providing appropriations for the surveyors general in the States of Colorado, Oregon, Washington, and Wyoming.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 56.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is it the purpose of the gentleman from Michigan to have the roll call now, or to move to adjourn?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am about to move that the House adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the pending question is the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]?

The SPEAKER. That is the pending question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That will be the unfinished business in the morning?

The SPEAKER. That will be the unfinished business in the morning.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, February 17, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

4132. Also, petition of William Close, of Kulm, N. Dak., and 13 others, urging the revival of the United States Grain Corporation, together with the fixing of a guaranteed price for wheat sufficient to cover the cost of production plus a reasonable profit; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 17, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we want this morning to recognize that goodness and mercy have been our portion thus far along the pathway of life. We want to show forth in our daily conduct our appreciation of Thy constant favor and seek constantly in all that we think and say and do to honor Thy great and holy name. The Lord be with us this day amid its duties and its cares, and grant that with the evening's shadows we may be able to feel that we have fulfilled the high obligations of service agreeable to Thy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhues, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the bill just received from the House may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution adopted by the board of county commissioners of Burleigh County, N. Dak., favoring retention of the Fort Lincoln Military Reservation as a permanent part of the Military Establishment of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petitions of Carl H. Nelson and 51 others, of Maddock; Otto Olson and 5 others, of Oriska; W. C. Nettum and 2 others, of Kindred; Edwin Stoa and 2 others, of Buxton; Sam Kahler and 5 others, of Tuttle and vicinity; Jake Ritter and 13 others, of Clyde; and Olaf Brenden and 48 others, of Sheyenne, all in the State of North Dakota, and Gomer Lewis and 49 others, of McIntosh, Morristown, and Watauga, in the State of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Kanapolis, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called soldiers' bonus bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Benjamin Franklin Council, American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, of Topeka, Kans., protesting against the United States entering into any treaty or "gentlemen's agreement" with foreign nations which might, even to a slight degree, impair the sovereign independence of the Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Lost Springs, Ramona, Herrington, Hope, Tampa, Pawnee Rock, and Dodge City, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

LANDS OF FORT PECK AND BLACKFEET RESERVATIONS, MONT.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, the bill (H. R. 8010) to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont., and I submit a report (No. 502) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. I do not think there will be any opposition to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not object to the bill, but I do not think we should transact any business with so few Senators present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Gooding	McKellar	Simmons
Brandeege	Hale	McKinley	Smith
Bursum	Harrell	McNary	Spencer
Cameron	Harris	Moses	Stanfield
Capper	Harrison	Myers	Stanley
Caraway	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Culberson	Hitchcock	New	Swanson
Cummins	Johnson	Newberry	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Underwood
Dial	Kellogg	Oddie	Wadsworth
Edge	Kendrick	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	Keyes	Page	Warren
Fernald	King	Pepper	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	Ladd	Phipps	Williams
France	Lenroot	Poin Dexter	Willis
Gerry	Lodge	Pomeroy
Glass	McCormick	Sheppard

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FREELINGHUYSEN], who are detained at a hearing before the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8010) to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think there will be the slightest objection to the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. In November last the Senate passed a bill, at the instance of the department, giving the Indians the right to lease for mining purposes certain unallotted lands in the Fort Peck Reservation and in the Blackfeet Reservation, and the bill is now in the House. Since then the House passed practically the identical bill, but it refers only to the Fort Peck Reservation. My own judgment is that it was an inadvertence. The committee thought that if we substituted the bill which the Senate had already passed and sent it back to the House it would work out most expeditiously and desirably. I ask that the amendment of the committee may be read and agreed to.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That lands reserved for school and agency purposes and all other unallotted lands on the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Indian Reservations, in the State of Montana, reserved from allotment or other disposition, may be leased for mining purposes under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Indian Reservations, in the State of Montana."

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 10267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 503) thereon.

I desire to give notice that I expect to ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 3164) to amend the Judicial Code, further to define the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of appeals and of the Supreme Court, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3165) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Elisha L. Bennett, jr.; and

A bill (S. 3166) for the relief of Michael Sweeney; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3167) granting an increase of pension to Jane N. Brown; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3168) granting a pension to Mary Mullen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 3169) to equalize pensions of retired policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3170) regulating corporations doing a banking business in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MYERS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) relating to terms and conditions of payment for the tuition of Indian pupils enrolled in the State public schools of Montana; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. McNARY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 3017, the Senate river and harbor bill, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 8, after line 19, insert:

"Siletz Bay, with a view to improving channel and securing a depth of 15 feet, at average tide, across Siletz Bar, by the construction of a jetty or otherwise."

and—

"Tillamook Bay and Harbor, Oreg., including consideration of modification and change of location of the existing 16-foot project channel to Bay City, with a view to securing usable channels commensurate with depth of water on bar to accommodate present and future commerce."

INVESTIGATION OF FERTILIZER INDUSTRY.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 241), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas it has been charged that the fertilizer industry is controlled by a combination of corporations and that such combination of corporations, or the individual members thereof, has employed agents, attorneys, and lobbyists to influence Congress against the acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford to buy Muscle Shoals: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to investigate the charge that the fertilizer industry is controlled by a corporation or corporations which is in fact a monopoly and has employed agents, attorneys, and lobbyists to lobby against the resolution accepting the offer of said Henry Ford to purchase said Muscle Shoals project, and to investigate whether there is a fertilizer trust.

Resolved further, That the committee is authorized to subpoena witnesses, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ the necessary clerical assistance in the prosecution of such investigation, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF FOREIGN POSTAGE AND REVENUE STAMPS.

Mr. EDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 2703, which was introduced by my colleague [Mr. FREELINGHUYSEN]. I am quite sure the bill will not lead to any opposition whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be reported.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill may be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2703) amending an act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. EDGE. I shall be very glad briefly to explain the object of the bill if I may secure unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will not the Senator allow the bill to be read at length? We can not understand the object of the measure until it shall have been read.

Mr. EDGE. I ask that the bill may be read by the Secretary.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY read the bill.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, undoubtedly, as a majority of Senators well know, my colleague is a very enthusiastic stamp collector. This bill simply provides an amendment to the Penal Code in order that defaced dies may be used for the purpose of reproducing stamps of foreign countries. The bill has the approval of the Attorney General's Department and also of the Treasury officials who are in charge of matters relating to the printing of stamps. I trust the bill may receive the approval of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey whether the Post Office authorities are willing that this measure shall pass?

Mr. EDGE. The Treasury officials have announced to the Committee on the Judiciary that they have no objection whatever to the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, in the following words:

That sections 161, 172, and 220 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, are hereby amended by adding the following: "Provided, That nothing in said sections shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing or publishing illustrations of postage or revenue stamps from plates so defaced as to indicate that the illustrations are not adapted or intended for use as stamps, or to prevent or forbid the making of necessary plates therefor for use in philatelic or historical articles, books, journals, or albums, or the circulars of legitimate publishers or dealers in such stamps, books, journals, or albums: And provided further, That no such illustration shall be made in colors, and that no such illustration or plate shall be of a stamp of the United States."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That nothing in sections 161, 172, and 220 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stats. L., pp. 1118, 1121, and 1132), shall be construed to forbid or prevent the printing or publishing of illustrations of postage or revenue stamps from plates so defaced as to indicate that the illustrations are not adapted or intended for use as stamps, or to prevent or forbid the making of necessary plates therefor for use in philatelic or historical articles, books, journals, or albums, or the circulars of legitimate publishers or dealers in such stamps, books, journals, or albums; but no such illustration shall be made in colors, and no such illustration or plate shall be of a stamp of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to allow the printing and publishing of illustrations of foreign postage and revenue stamps from defaced plates."

VALUATION OF RAILROAD PROPERTIES.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of order of business 494, being Senate bill 539.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the bill be reported in order that we may know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill (S. 539) to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not like to object to the Senator's request, but I was giving some consideration to the matter involved in the bill for which he now asks consideration when I had to be absent from the Senate for some months on account of attendance on the Conference on Limitation of Armament which has recently adjourned. I think the subject matter of the bill is very important and that it should be considered with great care. I will, therefore, ask the Senator not to call the bill up in the morning hour. I think it should come up for consideration in its regular order on the calendar or be called up when it may be made the unfinished business, so that we may give it full consideration. I myself wish to look into it further before I give consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Alabama that the bill is very important. I think it is a bill which demands consideration before very long.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had no thought of interrupting or preventing the consideration of the unfinished business, although I really think the bill for which I now ask consideration ought to take the place of the bill which has been made the unfinished business. I do not ask for the mere formal consideration of the bill, but I think it ought to be carefully considered and debated. However, I wish to present it to the Senate just as soon as possible.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is exactly my viewpoint. We have, of course, spent a great many million dollars in the past few years in the effort to ascertain the value of the railroads of this country. Although I may be mistaken about it, I am apprehensive that a change of existing law might scrap a great deal of work that has already been done in ascertaining the railroad valuations; and I do not think that we ought to pass a bill of this importance in a perfunctory way and during the morning hour.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assure the Senator from Alabama that a change of existing law will not scrap any considerable part of the work which has been done by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the valuation of railroads.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to have that made clear. I do not think a bill of this importance should be hastily considered in the morning hour. I shall not at all resist the Senator's desire to have the bill taken up as the unfinished business when it may be fully and carefully discussed at the proper time. I think the Senator in a matter of this importance should give a full explanation of the proposed legislation to the Senate. I therefore hope the Senator will not insist on the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. CUMMINS. In view of the Senator's suggestion, in lieu of asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill during the morning hour, I now give notice that immediately upon the disposition of the bill which is now the unfinished business, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this measure.

ACQUISITION OF REAL ESTATE BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of business is the consideration of the calendar of bills and resolutions under Rule VIII.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is it in order for me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7158) to amend the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, so as to release appropriations for the completion of the acquisition of real estate in certain cases and making additional appropriations therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York for the immediate consideration of the bill named by him?

Mr. OVERMAN. Before consent is given, I ask that the bill may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the reading of the bill, I desire to say that this bill was taken up on a former occasion, which, as I recall, was the day before the Christmas recess, when it was reached upon the calendar; but it was very late in the session of that day, and the question of a quorum being raised the matter was put over. I think the present occupant of the chair was in the chair at that time.

The bill is designed to enable the War Department to clean up the title to various pieces of real estate upon which the Government now owns very valuable buildings. The projects are listed in the bill, and the amount of money necessary to acquire title to the remaining small parcels or tracts of real estate is set forth in connection with each project. As a matter of fact, while the bill proposed to appropriate $4,000,000, it will put the Government in a position where it can save large amounts of money in the future, either by selling these properties, in which the Government has invested such immense sums, or, in some instances, by leasing them to industrial concerns. The items of the bill were discussed upon the former occasion, with the exception of one or two, in connection with which, and in accordance with instructions of the Committee on Military Affairs, I desire to offer amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator the cost that will result to the Government from carrying out the provisions of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill shows that upon its face. The total cost to the Government will be $4,100,000, as I recall, although I have not the figures immediately before me, and it is divided in appropriations made for several different projects in connection with which at present the hands of the War Department are absolutely tied.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether this was the bill in connection with which it appeared that the Government had now some holdings within which there were small private holdings to which it was desired to secure title?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; this is the bill which the Senator has in mind. On those holdings are immensely valuable buildings which can not be disposed of, the hands of the Secretary of War being absolutely tied, as there is on the statute books an act which forbids the Secretary of War to purchase any real estate, even if it be 10 feet square.

Mr. KING. Were steps initiated to condemn these properties before the law was passed forbidding the acquisition of further property by the War Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In some instances, yes; while in others the land is held by leases, and in others the land was about to be purchased when the Congress intervened—and I think properly so—and stopped all purchases until the Congress should look over the different projects and decide which ones the War Department should be permitted to complete. This bill represents the first list of projects passed upon by the House of Representatives, in connection with which it is urged strenuously by the House committee that these little parcels of land be acquired so that the Government will be in a position to deal as one business man would with another in the disposition of these properties.

Mr. KING. The passage of this bill and the carrying out of the plan which the bill contemplates will not lead to a continuation of the camps which are unnecessary, but will be in the interest of the diminution of the number of camps and forts and barracks, and so forth, now owned by the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is most decidedly in that direction. Incidentally none of these projects are camps; most of them are great storage depots.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think it was very unwise to expend millions of dollars upon land the title to which was not in the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was done during the war, and we have no choice in the matter now. Buildings have already been erected, and many of them are permanent buildings.

Mr. KING. Is it the intention of the Government to keep all the buildings that have been erected upon the tracts referred to in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should hope that it was the intention of the Government to sell most of these places, but they can not do so until they own finally the parcels of land underneath the buildings.

Mr. KING. Does the testimony indicate that the Government will recoup much more than this bill carries?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it indicates that it will recoup much more.

Mr. KING. The committee are unanimous in the view that the $4,000,000 proposed to be appropriated should be expended?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; in order to save a much larger sum, in the discretion of Congress, later on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7158) to amend the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, so as to release appropriations for the completion of the acquisition of real estate in certain cases and making additional appropriations therefor, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer three amendments.

The first amendment is, on page 2, line 20, after the numerals "$100,000," to strike out the remainder of line 20, lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, and on line 25 to and including the word "payments."

The language relates to a project in the city of Baltimore, in connection with which the Government, on the leasing of some land, built some exceedingly valuable storehouses. The House bill carries an authorization to the Secretary of War to sell these buildings to the owner of the land, the Canton Co., for $300,000. Since the passage of the bill by the House, the Secretary of War indicates that he may make a better disposition of it than that, and one more to the advantage of the Government. Therefore it is proposed to strike out that language and leave it in his discretion. If the language remains in, the inference drawn by the owners of the land will be to the effect that $300,000 is all they will have to pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, lines 22 to 25, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Or the Secretary of War is authorized to sell to the Canton Co., of Baltimore, the improvements erected upon the site within 90 days from the enactment of this law for the sum of $300,000, plus interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on all deferred payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 3, commencing on line 20, after the word "owners," I move to strike out the balance of the page, all of page 4, all of page 5, and on page 6 down to and including the word "land" on line 19. That amendment relates to but one project—Camp Grant, in Illinois.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator state the object of the amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The object of the amendment is not to compel the Secretary of War to withdraw or dismiss actions now pending in court looking to the condemnation of the land described on these two pages. The land is not very extensive, but it is land upon which in large measure the very center of the camp is built.

Mr. KING. It leaves it optional instead of compulsory?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It leaves it optional with him instead of compulsory.

Mr. KING. It is a long amendment for so small a subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On behalf of the committee, I present another amendment, which the Secretary may read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, after line 10, it is proposed to insert the following new section at the end of the bill:

SEC. 3. That approximately 44 acres of land in Norfolk County, Va., adjacent to the Norfolk Army supply base heretofore transferred by the War Department to the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service, pursuant to an act of Congress, March 3, 1919 (40 Stat., 1303), is hereby retransferred to the War Department, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered in making settlement with the Country Club of Norfolk, Va., and the New Glencove Links Corporation, from the appropriation hereinabove provided, of their claims for their properties taken by the United States of America subsequent to April 6, 1917, to transfer and convey to said Country Club of Norfolk, Va., and said Glencove Links Corporation such portions of their properties so taken and such other properties or portions thereof otherwise acquired by the War Department in the vicinity of the Norfolk Army supply base as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary and desirable in effecting such a settlement: Provided, however, That in the judgment of the Secretary of War said property so to be conveyed is no longer required by the United States for military purposes.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator state the object of the amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can best state the object by reading a portion of a letter from the Secretary of War:

Of the properties for which payment is yet to be made, the parcel containing approximately 55 acres—

This is in connection with the Norfolk base—was requisitioned in 1918 from the Norfolk Country Club and the new Glencove Links Corporation, on which no Government improvements have been constructed except a railroad yard across the southerly portion thereof.

The country club has been without the use of its property without compensation since 1917. In the spring of 1921, however, a revocable lease was granted to the club by the War Department for the use of a portion of its former golf course, and the department has recently received a proposition which involves the conveyance to the club of certain other Government-owned land, together with a portion of the area formerly requisitioned and the payment to the club of a cash consideration, in return for which the United States is to receive title to that portion of the requisitioned area on which the railroad yard is constructed and is to be released from payment for the use of the club's property since 1917.

In other words, it effects a transfer to the advantage of the Government and to the relief of this country club, which since 1917 has never had a penny for the use of its property.

Mr. KING. Is the maintenance of the yard necessary?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To reach the Norfolk base it is necessary that those tracks be maintained where they are. It so happens that I visited the Norfolk base, and it is an immense project, built of concrete and steel—perfectly enormous. It is difficult to conceive the size of some of these projects; and we want to get it into shape where we can direct, by act of Congress, its sale or its lease by the department to commercial concerns.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question a little along the same line with the question I asked him before.

As I understand, this bill does not take care of those pieces of land that were condemned and are now in use, where the people have been driven from their lands and the lands have been taken by the Government and have been condemned by the courts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are several instances of that kind in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. But there are many cases that are not in this bill. Does the Senator know that those cases are going to be taken care of?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. The House Committee on Military Affairs has made this winter and is still making a very exhaustive study of the whole real estate problem as now remaining upon the hands of the War Department; and it is to make a report, which it hopes will clean up the whole thing and incidentally do justice to a lot of people who have suffered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thank the Senator for the information. That is all that I desire. A lot of people are writing and asking that certain lands be paid for. I think the subject ought to come up in the general bill, where it can be investigated, and full consideration given to the whole matter. I think it can be taken care of there better than in this bill. That is the reason why I asked the Senator the question, and I am glad that he has given me the information he has.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? As I understand, the object of this bill is to appropriate sufficient money to complete the purchase and therefore complete the title of the Government to these different projects, so that hereafter they can make such disposition of the property as they see fit?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It frees the hands of the Government. There is over $130,000,000 invested by the Government in permanent construction in these projects. If we will spend $4,000,000 now, we will get title to the last parcel that underlies those buildings. Then we can do what we please with them. Until we get title, our hands are tied.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee what plans are being formulated for the disposition of many of these forts and camps that were acquired during the war, and many before the war, and which it is apparent the Government does not need? Is there any comprehensive plan for the disposition of all these unnecessary military reservations?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is; and that is the plan which the House Committee on Military Affairs is studying.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that unless something is done in regard to that, appeals will be made from municipalities and States and charitable organizations for grants by the Government of many of these unused and unnecessary military forts and reservations and camps. It seems to me the Government ought to formulate a plan, and dispose of them as soon as possible.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I agree with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is one committee amendment printed in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "authorized to be appropriated" and to insert "appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that amendment is a matter of policy for the Senate. The House Committee on Military Affairs reported this bill to the House. Under the House rules, the House Committee on Military Affairs may not appropriate; they may merely authorize appropriations. The House language is:

The following amounts are hereby authorized to be appropriated.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs thus far has not been deprived, under the Senate rules, of its power of appropriation; and when the Senate committee encountered this language, which is merely an authorization of an appropriation, the Senate committee, in accordance with the custom of Senate committees, struck out the phrase "authorized to be appropriated," and submitted for it the language which makes the direct appropriation. It is a question of policy whether the Senate shall adhere to its old custom or whether it shall accede to the House custom and concentrate all appropriations in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether it would not be wiser to carry the appropriation in the military bill? I want the military part of the Government to be charged with everything that is legitimately chargeable to the Army and to the Navy. As far as I am concerned, I do not want expenses for the Army or for the Navy to be charged in some other category on the books of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator realizes, of course, that the Appropriations Committee of the House handles all appropriations, and no other committee may do anything of the sort.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from New York that the Committee on Rules has reported back to the Senate an amendment to the rules, proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], which places all the appropriation bills in the hands of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. It is provided, however, that in the case of appropriations coming from the Military Affairs Committee, three members of that committee shall be ex officio members of the Committee on Appropriations, and the same provision is made with regard to the other committees now handling appropriation bills.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is one thing that might be said: This committee amendment never will be agreed to by the House conferees. Under their own rules they can not accept a direct appropriation from the Military Affairs Committee; but the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate believed that the Senate should understand what the situation is, and therefore we adopted this amendment, intending, as has now happened, that it should be laid before the Senate as a matter of policy. Eventually the conferees of the Senate will be compelled to recede.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, until the war upset the rules of the House all purchases of land were in the hands of the general Appropriations Committee. During the war the committee did not insist on those rules, and by common consent the Committee on Military Affairs was permitted to appropriate, and that condition still exists. As the Senator says, however, if we leave it in it will simply go out in conference; and it seems to me it would be better to conform to the rules as they exist on the other side and cut it out now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply make this statement. I have no objection to the Senate rejecting this particular committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to have read from the Secretary's desk an article which appeared in the New York World of yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

[From the New York World, Feb. 16, 1922.]

SENATORS BLOCK ECONOMY SCHEME—REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENTS WILL NOT BE CONSIDERED AT THIS SESSION.
(Special to the World.)

WASHINGTON, February 15.

Senate leaders have decided to sidetrack the scheme for reorganizing the Federal departments until some future session of Congress. The amount of work necessary before the prospective adjournment in June will block consideration of the recommendations submitted to the President by Walter F. Brown, chairman of the Joint Committee on Reorganization.

The intention to defer the reorganization work was made known by Senators visiting the White House. It was pointed out a number of the suggestions, such as the merger of the War and Navy Departments into a Department of National Defense, would be contested hotly and speedy action would be impossible. In addition, the joint committee will require much time in taking testimony and investigation.

The recommendations are now held up at the White House. Mr. Brown submitted them three weeks ago, but the Arms Conference treaties and the bonus have occupied the time of the President and Cabinet. The next step, according to Mr. Brown, is for the President and the Cabinet to approve or return the plans with suggestions for alterations.

Mr. Brown does not believe hope for their adoption this session is lost. He said if the administration and joint committee can agree on a program, Congress is so committed to reorganizing the departments that the bill will go through quickly.

Mr. Brown indicated to-day that his recommendations provide creation of a bureau of transportation in the Commerce Department.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have had this article read to the Senate in the hope that if it is the policy, as revealed there, to do nothing at this session of Congress toward coordinating and reorganizing the departments of the Government, that policy will be changed. I have not had the article read in a spirit of criticism, but merely to recall the history of this legislation. About a year ago, in March, 1921, we passed a joint resolution creating this commission. Three Senators were appointed, three Members of the House were appointed, and then the joint resolution was amended so that the President might have a personal representative. We had thought at that time that there would be speedy action, that the commission would take up these questions immediately and consider them and make a report forthwith to Congress, so that if reforms should be recommended—thereby creating efficiency as well as a saving—that proper legislation carrying the recommendations into effect would be enacted.

We have waited a year, and nothing has as yet been done. As I stated before to the Senate, the commission had its last meeting on April 6, 1921, practically 11 months ago. I had a letter some days ago from the President, as every other member of the commission did, saying that a report had been laid before him by Mr. Brown, and that he hoped we might get to work at a very early date. So I was surprised when I read this article to find that it was now the policy of the administration to lay over this work until a future Congress. I hope it is not true. I trust the commission may be called together at an early date, begin hearings, and try to smooth out the differences between these departments, so that some saving may be effected. If the differences can not be smoothed out, then let the commission or the Congress assume the responsibility.

I desire to say, as a minority member of this commission, that I shall be ready at any time to meet with the commission and to assist in expediting the work, so that a report may be made at an early date. No delay has come from this side. We have welcomed an invitation for a meeting of the commission, and we still hope it will come, and I am sure that I voice the sentiments on this side, at least, when I say that we hope the policy revealed in that article will not be carried out, but that the plans for coordination and reorganization will be presented to this Congress soon. I know of no opportunity that furnishes a way to render more real service than as is presented to this commission. And certainly the people are anxious for it to begin work and make its report speedily to the Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it not quite apparent that unless the reorganization plans shall be submitted to Congress at an early date, prior to the passage of the appropriation bills, it will mean that we shall be compelled to go on with the same old machinery for the coming fiscal year and that it will postpone effective reorganization, operative reorganization, until the next fiscal year?

Mr. HARRISON. I think so. The whole trouble about this is that we amended the original resolution, which clothed the Congress with full power to investigate these departments and to make a report, as Members of the House and of the Senate, to the Congress of the United States. We amended that by placing a representative of the executive departments on the commission, and now it is tied up. They will never unravel all their difference in the departments. The matter must come before the commission in the end anyhow, and we must assume responsibility, together with Congress.

Mr. KING. In view of the well known fact that the executive departments are always jealous of their authority, that they are very seldom willing to abate any of their authority and prerogatives, why does not the committee appointed by Congress, charged with the duty of forming a plan of reorganization, do its duty? We will have to discharge them and get somebody else who will.

Mr. HARRISON. They should be discharged if they do not do something; but the trouble about it was that the Congress amended the resolution and created this place for Mr. Brown.

Mr. KING. Is he the one who it is said is to run for the Senate from Ohio in the coming election?

Mr. HARRISON. I think he did run for the Senate in one of the primary elections in Ohio, and there is some talk of his running for the Senate again. I do not know about that. He is a very excellent gentleman, and a very competent man, I am sure. Anyway, when the commission met they elected Mr. Brown chairman of the commission, and I might say it was over the protest of the minority Member from the House and myself that that was done. I thought one of the members of the commission representing the majority in Congress, either a House or Senate Member should have been made chairman, so that meetings could be called and hearings might be begun; but since the calling together of the commission is left entirely, I suppose, to the chairman of the commission, and since Mr. Brown is the chairman and the commission has not been called for a year, I am ready to believe, in view of this article, that it will not be called. So I do not know what a humble minority member of that commission can do.

Mr. KING. He can make a protest.

Mr. HARRISON. I am doing that now.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know where the correspondent got his information, but it was stated last week that a report was about ready to be submitted by the commission, and I understood that it would be ready within a day or two. There was nothing said about delaying action, but it was said all the members wanted to get action as soon as possible.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, 1923 (S. DOC. NO. 129).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, in the sum of $575,000—buildings and grounds, public schools, for alterations to existing buildings, and the erection of an addition to the Western High School to provide a new assembly hall, gymnasium for boys and girls, and at least 12 additional classrooms, $550,000; fire department, for two triple combination motor pumping engines, at $12,500 each, to be immediately available, $25,000—which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WESTERN PINE MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission transmitting the report of the commission on the Western Pine Manufacturers' Association, which will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me the report just submitted, which is a very voluminous and a very important one, might with propriety go to the Committee on the Judiciary. This report finds that another lumber organization, or a number of organizations, have conspired to violate the Sherman antitrust law. The Supreme Court has recently decided that a certain lumber organization had violated the Sherman antitrust law, and the proceedings which were instituted were upheld by the appellate tribunal. This report, it seems to me, calls for action by the Department of Justice for the purpose of destroying this trust. There ought to be judicial proceedings instituted against it, either criminal or civil, because the report indicates that there is an organization in contravention of the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law.

I regret that there are not two reports, so that one could go to the Committee on Commerce and the other to the Judiciary Committee, because I think the report will be illuminating to the Judiciary Committee and may aid it in the work of perhaps improving or amending the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. SMITH. Has not the law creating the Federal Trade Commission and defining its powers been amended so as to give them certain powers to proceed in such cases? Can the Senator tell me to what extent they can cause such companies to desist from these practices?

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. KING. Unfortunately, as I construe the Federal Trade Commission act, this jurisdiction is to be invoked for the protection of business men against the misdeeds of business men as they affect each other. They are to protect business men, and organizations in business, from unfair practices against each other, but the public may be damned, if I may use such language, so far as the effect of that act is concerned.

Mr. SMITH. I asked the question because a report similar to the one in regard to the lumber organization was transmitted in reference to the tobacco combination, and my information was to the effect that the law allowed the commission to go to the extent only of issuing an order to them to desist and cease from such practices.

Mr. KING. As I understand the law, the practices must affect the business men themselves, the dealers, not the public. I may be placing too narrow a construction upon it, but I think it is the view entertained by many that the practice must affect the business men rather than the public.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah has stated the situation quite accurately, but it seems to me the inference that is to be drawn from his statement is not well founded. The primary purpose of the Federal Trade Commission act was not so much to protect the dealer as it was to protect the consumer, the purchaser. It is true that it aims at repressing unfair practices in trade as between the dealers, but it was contemplated that eventually those practices would, if persisted in, drive competitors out of business, and then the perpetrator of the improper practices would be left sole master of the field, and thereupon the public would suffer by reason of being subjected to monopolistic prices. The whole idea was that it was not sufficient to aim at the combinations which would eventually grow up and become violative of the Sherman act; that we ought to go further than that, and endeavor to prevent those practices, which, persisted in and successfully prosecuted, would result in driving rivals out of business, the purpose being to take care of the ultimate consumer.

Mr. KING. May I not state to the Senator, however, that Mr. Stephens, who has published a book upon the Federal trade act and the purposes of it, seems to indicate, as I recall, though it is some time since I read it, that while ultimately perhaps the desire was to secure what the Senator has said, yet that it was aimed directly at certain evil practices, and I think he enumerates eight or nine, as the Senator will recall. Therefore the Federal Trade Commission have rather employed the act for the purpose of preventing trade discrimination and trade practices among the tradespeople which were injurious to the people engaged in trade.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the then occupant of the chair was mistaken in referring the report of the Federal Trade Commission to the Committee on Commerce, because on June 9, 1921, a report from the same Federal Trade Commission, with regard to the lumber interests of the Pacific coast, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I suggest to the Senator from Utah, if it meets with his approval, that this report ought to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and then if it needs a reference to the Committee on the Judiciary it can be adjusted.

Mr. KING. Technically, I think that is correct. I only regret there is not another copy of the report which might be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Utah a question following the statement made by him a moment ago that the act was intended to correct practices among those engaged in the trade. As I recall, the report on the tobacco situation, parallel to its report on the lumber situation, has had a disastrous effect upon the primary market, upon the raw material, upon the local mill as well as upon the producers of the tobacco itself, in this combination, not only fixing the price of the finished product and determining what the output shall be and where it shall be distributed, but also affecting the purchase of the raw material in the primary markets in so far as to control the buyers in the markets, cutting out competition and thereby fixing the price and the amount to be purchased during a given season.

In view of the widespread effect of such a combination as is indicated in the two reports, what is the process of applying the relief contemplated in the Sherman Antitrust Act? I was of the opinion that the Federal Trade Commission, on its own initiative, upon its finding, could report and recommend to the Department of Justice that it should take such action as the case warranted. Am I correct in that view?

Mr. KING. I think perhaps the facts stated by the Senator might give jurisdiction to the Federal Trade Commission for investigation and for an order to desist from the practices therein stated; but if I understand the Senator correctly, it would seem to me that the persons who are engaged in those practices, which obviously are destructive of competition and tend to the monopolization of a given product, would be amenable to the criminal provisions of the Sherman antitrust law, and ought to be indicted and sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. SMITH. The only thing I am solicitous about just now is, the Federal Trade Commission having found the conditions as presented in their report, what action do they contemplate taking and what power under the law have they to follow the matter up so that relief may be given? In other words, if after these findings they report to Congress, then is it within their power or does it rest with us, or with whom, to bring an indictment?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think the machinery is sufficient in the act for the commission to notify them to desist from these practices. If they do not desist, the commission are authorized to go into court and stop it.

Mr. KING. But not criminally.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no; not criminally.

Mr. KING. They might perhaps obtain an injunction.

Mr. OVERMAN. They can go into the courts and ask for an injunction or any other relief that is necessary to stop it. The machinery is provided for in the act itself.

Mr. SMITH. That is the point I wanted to get light upon—whether or not the Federal Trade Commission had the power, after its findings, to proceed in such way as to cause them to desist.

Mr. OVERMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KING. I think in a matter which comes within the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, when they discover an evil cognizable under the statute creating them, then they may invoke the power of the court for the purpose of terminating the evil. But it seems to me, if the Senator will pardon me, that the state of facts which he has given would indicate a conspiracy in restraint of trade and that the criminal provisions of the Sherman antitrust law would be more effective in ending the activity so injurious to trade and competition.

Mr. SMITH. Then is it within the power of the Federal Trade Commission to bring the indictment? Does the law contemplate that they shall bring an indictment against the offenders even in a criminal court?

Mr. KING. No; it is my understanding that it would have to be left to the Department of Justice to put into operation the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. SMITH. They could make a recommendation to that effect to the Department of Justice?

Mr. KING. Oh, I think that is true.

Mr. SMITH. That is the point I wanted to clear up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report of the Federal Trade Commission will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 384) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill go over. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], who introduced it, is not here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 581) to repeal the act prohibiting increased pay under lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I think my colleague [Mr. Smoot] would like to be here when the bill is considered. He is engaged in a committee hearing. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 582) to repeal section 5 of the act approved June 22, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over for the same reason.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1439) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 1807) to aid in stabilizing the coal industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

RELIEF OF CLAIMANTS BARRED BY STATUTE.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. There are certain little amounts due on the books of the Treasury to certain people who were engaged prior to the war in Government service. Among them were some ex-Confederate soldiers who were outlawed from collecting the claims. Congress has removed every inhibition against the collection of the claims and they have been collected by everybody except by a few men who belonged to the Navy. There are certain amounts due those naval officers. I do not suppose there are 40 or 50 in all. As we have removed the inhibition from all other officers of the Government except the naval officers, the Committee on the Judiciary thought a bill ought to pass applying to them also. It is a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. KING. I do not find the report in my files.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is a full report accompanying the bill.

Mr. KING. When the bill was up before, did not my colleague [Mr. Smoot] object to it?

Mr. OVERMAN. He did.

Mr. KING. My colleague is detained on official business and I feel that in his absence the consideration of the bill ought to be postponed until he can be present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the bill would certainly provoke long discussion and unless the sponsor of it is present and presses it, I request that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 63) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RURAL HOMES.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill was objected to the other day by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and the understanding was that a conference was to be held with the Secretary of the Interior and the matter postponed until that conference had been held. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

The bill (S. 2051) to amend section 3142 of the Revised Statutes, to permit an increase in the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and in the number of collectors of internal revenue from 64 to 74, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TREATMENT OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

The bill (S. 1010) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, there was an agreement between the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and myself that this bill should be disposed of the next time it was called on the calendar. I suppose we might as well dispose of it now.

I requested the Department of Justice to give the Senate a report on the number of juvenile offenders who are already serving their terms. To my astonishment I found that those offenders, duly convicted in Federal courts, had been farmed out to private corporations, some of them to church corporations.

In my own State for twenty-odd years I fought for the principle that the State ought to retain control of her own convicts; that the sovereign power of the State should never be subject to hire, to lease, to rental; that the State should have custody and absolute control of her convicts. After very many years that principle won its way, and we abolished the convict lease system in the State of Georgia. Our able-bodied convicts are now at work on our roads and our bridges, doing public service for the benefit of the public, doing State service for the benefit of the State. Younger offenders, boys and girls, are sent to a reformatory, where they will not be compelled to serve with hardened criminals and come out brutalized by the contact with those hardened criminals. In that way after a whole generation we have a system which separates the young offenders from the old and hardened criminals and puts the young offenders under benign influences calculated to reform and to improve.

You know, Mr. President, that it is a well-settled principle of law that punishment is inflicted partly with a view of reforming the criminal and making him, if possible, a good citizen. The Federal law as it now stands is confined to juvenile offenders. I do not know and can not as yet inform the Senate where these boys and girls have come under the jurisdiction of the United States courts. I do not understand how boys and girls who commit offenses in this city and in other cities, in this territory and in other territories, come within the jurisdiction of the United States courts. It is inconceivable to me that these boys and girls committed offenses in the military reservations in my own State. I am convinced that it could not have been so. Where, then, under the jurisdiction of the United States courts did these boys and girls commit crimes? I am unable to tell the Senate, because I have been unable as yet to get the information. I am in pursuit of it, however; I am asking for it, and I expect to get it sooner or later. When I do get it, I shall lay it before the Senate. I should like to know, and I respectfully inquire of the Senator from Montana how, where, and when were these boys and girls convicted of crime in Federal reservations? Did they commit crimes in our national parks? Did they commit crimes in the terrain occupied by the Army? Did they offend the law in military reservations? I should like to know, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the five-minute rule the Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like, in my own time, to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. In my own time, I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia does this bill cover offenses that are committed everywhere or only in certain restricted localities; and does it apply to a certain class of juvenile offenders or is it limited to any particular class?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Utah, I will say that this bill seeks to broaden the statute so as to include all females, of whatever age, who commit acts of lewdness.

Mr. KING. What provision does the bill make with respect to their incarceration? What discretion does it give with reference to places which they may be committed for incarceration?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, answering the Senator, I will say that, as I understand the bill, it gives to the Attorney General absolutely unlimited power over these convicts, to lease them out anywhere on any terms he may see fit.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator, in my own time, to point out the principal objection to the bill; to visualize it for us.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I will do so. One is that the Federal Government ought to retain the custody and control of its convicts, and not lease them out to any private corporation or to any church. The principle of separation of church and state is, in my judgment, violated by this proposed law; and, Mr. President, I do not believe that a sovereign power, punishing a citizen, ought to make merchandise of the convict, whether that convict be male or female, black or white, young or old.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that this bill would mitigate an evil now existing or that the method of treating those who would come in this category under the present law is improper?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, in my judgment, this proposed legislation is of the most dangerous character, and it would lead to any amount of abuse. When it is provided that women who are guilty of acts of lewdness shall be railroaded into a convict pen, anywhere, on any terms, I believe it is a violation of the spirit of our laws. The Government itself ought to provide a place for reformation as well as for punishment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to engage in any disputation concerning the merits of the measure now before us. I take occasion again, however, having heretofore advised the Senate, to tell Senators what the measure is. If the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will give me his attention, I may be able to answer some of the questions which he has addressed to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON]. The existing statutes, being sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes, date from the years 1865 and 1872; they have been in existence all that time, and they read as follows:

Sec. 5549. Juvenile offenders against the laws of the United States, being under the age of 16 years, and who may hereafter be convicted of crime, the punishment whereof is imprisonment, shall be confined during the term of sentence in some house of refuge to be designated by the Attorney General, and shall be transported and delivered to the warden or keeper of such house of refuge by the marshal of the district where such conviction has occurred; or if such conviction be had in the District of Columbia, then the transportation and delivery shall be by the warden of the jail of that district, and the reasonable actual expense of the transportation, necessary subsistence, and hire, and transportation of assistants and the marshal or warden only shall be paid by the Attorney General out of the judiciary fund.

Sec. 5550. The Attorney General shall contract with the managers or persons having control of such houses of refuge for the imprisonment, subsistence, and proper employment of all such juvenile offenders, and shall give the several courts of the United States and of the District of Columbia notice of the place so provided for the confinement of such offenders; and they shall be sentenced to confinement in the house of refuge nearest the place of conviction so designated by the Attorney General.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I have just received from my office the report which I intend to use in this connection. Perhaps the Senator himself would be interested to learn the facts.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will be very glad to give place to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The communication is under date of January 27, 1922, and sets forth that the State Industrial School for Boys at Golden, Colo., has 8 of these juvenile offenders; the State Reformatory at Cheshire, Conn., has 28; the National Training School for Boys at Washington, D. C., has 278; the National Training School for Girls, Washington, D. C., has 4 inmates; the reformatory at Anamosa, Iowa, 90 inmates; St. Mary's Industrial School, Baltimore, 6 inmates; House of Reformation, Cheltenham, Md., 1 inmate; House of Correction, Jessups, Md., 45 inmates; Massachusetts Reformatory, Concord, Mass., 3 inmates; Minnesota State Reformatory, St. Cloud, Minn., 13 inmates; Missouri Reformatory, Boonville, Mo., 47; Industrial Home, Tipton, Mo., 132; State Training and Agricultural School for Boys, Nashville, Tenn., 5 inmates.

Mr. President, if the Senator will be so obliging as to allow me to say it, I would not be willing to farm out to any Baptist church, or Methodist church, or any other church, the work and the service of a convict of any court, State or National. I would be glad to be informed how it is that 278 boys and girls have been convicted here in Washington City of lewd crimes, that did not come under the jurisdiction of the court of the District of Columbia instead of the Federal court.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I continue, Mr. President. It will be observed that the law to which I have invited the attention of the Senate dates from 1865, and very humanely provides that instead of consigning juvenile offenders under the age of 16 years to confinement in some prison or penitentiary they shall be sent to houses of refuge or to reformatories. The Federal Government, so far as my information goes, never established reformatory institutions or houses of refuge for juvenile offenders. Perhaps it has been negligent in that respect, but you will observe—

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Just a moment. You will observe from the information now given us by the Attorney General through the Senator from Georgia that the Federal Government usually avails itself of the State institutions for that purpose. I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, just for information, how did these boys and girls fall within the jurisdiction of the Federal court?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am unable to give the Senator exact information upon that subject. They were all charged with violating some statute of the United States; they were all tried in the United States courts for the violation of some such statute; they were all found guilty of violating the statute. Had they been adults they would have been sent to the penitentiary, but instead of being sent to the penitentiary they were sent to reformatory institutions.

Without knowing anything about the specific cases, Mr. President, I desire to say that it is my impression that they were all convicted either of some crime to which juveniles would subject themselves, possibly under the Mann Act, for instance, or, more likely, they committed some ordinary crime upon some place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Government of the United States as, for instance, a military reservation or a national park or a post-office building or some place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Government of the United States, so that they could not be punished under State statutes.

The Senator from Georgia is no doubt aware that many places, such as Army posts, are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, and all crimes, no matter what their character may be, just as in the case of Indian reservations.

fall within the jurisdiction of the United States and not the jurisdiction of any State. A very interesting case arose in my State. At one time a man was charged with murder in the State court. The crime having been committed in the neighborhood of the city of Missoula, it was alleged in the State court that the particular place where the crime was committed was within the Fort Missoula Military Reservation and the State court had no jurisdiction. The case went to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court sustained the contention and discharged the defendant. He was thereupon indicted in the Federal court. The defense was then raised that the place was not within the Fort Missoula Reservation, but was within the jurisdiction of the State of Montana, and the Federal court sustained that contention and dismissed him, and he went free.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is quite an important matter. It seems to me that with the questions presented, legal and otherwise, we ought to have a little fuller discussion. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Montana may have 10 minutes additional, and that the Senator from Georgia may have 10 minutes additional, for the discussion of this important matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that I do not know under what statute it is done or how the custom was established, but I do know that the Federal courts in North Carolina and other Southern States are sending these offenders, girls and boys, to a training school here in Washington. It is one of the most beautiful places in Washington, out on the Baltimore road. I have no doubt Senators have seen it. It was established by the Government for this purpose. Under what authority they are sent there, I do not know, but I know that they are sent there constantly. I know that the sheriff and the deputy marshal of my district have brought these offenders—small boys and small girls—here for the purpose of training, instead of sending them to Atlanta.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suppose a juvenile offender is brought up before a judge, and it is a question of whether he will send him here to Washington to the training school or send him to the penitentiary at Atlanta, and he chooses to send him to Washington.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the point, and he sends him to Washington. This school is one of the most beautiful places in Washington, and, I understand, is a very fine institution. I do not know personally.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me for just one moment, the only purpose of this bill is to make the existing statute applicable to females convicted of offenses against chastity whether they are over or under 16 years of age. That is the whole purpose of the bill—not to enact a new statute but to extend one that has been in existence since 1865 so that it will embrace girls, although they are over 16 years of age, who may possibly be subjected to reformatory influences.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Montana and other Senators will be interested to know that this practice of sending girls and boys, men and women, from city courts to distant States has become prevalent here of late. It is a great abuse.

Somebody sent me a clipping, two or three months ago, which stated that the judge of the city court of Columbus, Ga., had sentenced some girls to go to a private institution in Louisiana. I telegraphed to the judge, Judge Lewis, asking him upon what theory he sent convicts from the State of Georgia into the State of Louisiana. During the day I got a telegram from him, saying that certain welfare workers in the city—ladies, of course—had requested it, and the girls themselves had consented—under duress, of course—but that he had made other arrangements, and would now keep them in Columbus.

During the trial of the celebrated Leo Frank case, a necessary girl witness was brought back into Georgia from the State of Ohio, and after she had testified she was sent back to a private institution in Cincinnati. She had been convicted of lewdness committed on the streets of Atlanta, and she was sent to Ohio for punishment. The Senator from Montana—one of our best lawyers, a good-hearted man, a noble Senator—will be astonished to learn that nearly 200 of these convicts are in Missouri. Where is there a military reservation in Missouri on which these boys and girls may have committed offenses?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I must say to the Senator that in my humble opinion the matter is entirely irrelevant. I do not know for what they were convicted, nor whether the Federal court usurped some jurisdiction or did not; but, if it did, this statute was no justification for it at all.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But, Mr. President, the point is this: The Senator is broadening the statute so as to include all women, of whatever age.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me, the statute does not broaden the jurisdiction of the court at all—not in any sense whatever. It does not give the court jurisdiction over a crime or over a person that the court had not jurisdiction of before; but the court having jurisdiction over the person, and having jurisdiction over the crime, and having found the person guilty, now has a discretion to send the person to the penitentiary or to a reformatory institution. That is the whole statute.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But, Mr. President, the statute as it now stands puts the age limit at 16 years, and the Senator seeks by his amendment to remove the age limit.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As to female offenders guilty of the first offense.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Why in the world should female offenders be discriminated against? Why is a lewd woman more of a criminal than a lewd man?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is an argument upon the merits of the matter which I do not care to engage in.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, this is a most important question, and I think it is a constitutional question. I should be very glad if the Senator from Montana would take the matter under consideration, reflect upon it with his great legal ability, and decide within himself whether it does not contravene the spirit of our Constitution, which says that the State and the church shall be forever separate. This turning over of criminals, whether male or female, young or old, to private institutions and church corporations, is, in my judgment, violative of the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not understand that argument at all. The church feature, so far as I can see, does not enter into the proposition at all. Apparently 95 per cent of those who have been sent to reformatory institutions under the law as it now exists are sent to State reformatory institutions, and it is a matter of entire irrelevancy. The Attorney General is authorized to make such contracts as in his judgment will serve the purpose. Apparently in the past they have found it most convenient, and most nearly in accordance with the spirit to which the Senator appeals, to make these contracts with the State authorities. The Senator is doubtless aware that the Federal Government makes exactly the same arrangements with regard to prisoners before they are tried. They are usually incarcerated in the State and county jails under contracts with the Government, the female culprits as well as the male culprits.

I started in, however, to try to tell the Senate what the bill purports to do, and I should like to do that. I called your attention to the statute as it exists. Now it is to be amended by adding thereto the following:

Whenever a woman or girl shall be convicted of lewdness, prostitution, or similar offenses, under circumstances rendering such offense punishable by imprisonment under the laws of the United States, such woman or girl may be confined, during the term of sentence, in some home of refuge to be designated by the Attorney General, in the manner provided in the case of juvenile offenders, by said section 5549, when, in the opinion of the presiding judge, that course seems justified by the circumstances of the case and the intelligence and previous character of the offender: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to the case of any woman who has previously been twice convicted of similar offenses in the courts of the United States, or who, at the time of her arrest, was conducting or managing a house of prostitution.

In other words, the woman being convicted of the offense, and in the opinion of the judge there being a question of her reformation, he may, instead of sending her to the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta or Leavenworth or elsewhere, send her to some house of refuge or some reformatory institution.

Then the next section provides that he may make contracts accordingly:

The Attorney General shall contract with the managers or persons having control of such houses of refuge for the imprisonment, subsistence, and proper employment of all such juvenile or female offenders, and shall give the several courts of the United States and of the District of Columbia notice of the places so provided for the confinement of such offenders; and they shall be sentenced to confinement in the house of refuge nearest the place of conviction so designated by the Attorney General.

So that, Mr. President, if a judge in the State of North Carolina or in the State of Georgia sends an offender to the State of Ohio when there is a nearer place provided for, the judge simply disregards the law. That is all there is to that. Judges do that sometimes, and lay themselves open to impeachment; but the law provides that the culprit must be sent to the house of refuge nearest the place.

Mr. President, I think the questions introduced here by the Senator from Georgia are very largely irrelevant. It is a matter of no consequence how many of these people are amenable to the laws of the United States. None of them are subject to it at all; no convict can go there, except he or she is found guilty of a violation of a Federal statute. There may be no Federal statute applicable; if not, there will not be any offenders.

I put in the Record, when the matter was here before, the immediate occasion which prompted the Attorney General to ask for this legislation. It comes from the Department of Justice in consequence of many violations of the laws during the war. Lewdness and prostitution were rife about the military camps throughout the country that were then under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. They were not amenable to punishment under the laws of the United States; and many arrests of females were made, many of them over 16 years of age, and all that the judge could do was to send them to the penitentiary. The Attorney General, prompted by humane instincts, I am sure, asked us to amend the law so that the judge could do what is proposed in this bill; and now my recollection is refreshed: There was a letter from one of the judges, my recollection is, down in Texas, who, much to his regret, was obliged to send many of these girls, who he thought might be reclaimed, to some penitentiary, where they mingled with the common criminals, and their future was a perfectly dismal one, with no hope whatever. For these reasons he was moved to ask that the statute be amended, and I sincerely trust it will be.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana has not put the Senate in possession of any facts as to when, where, and why these juvenile offenders were convicted. It appears from the report which was furnished me by the Department of Justice that nearly 200 of these convicts have been farmed out to institutions in Missouri. It appears that a very large number are here in the District of Columbia, and a large number in Iowa. I have a natural curiosity to learn how the United States courts got jurisdiction over these boys and girls.

The Senator referred to the war; but the war is over. The law was not enlarged during the war. Now that peace reigns so far as we are concerned, the Senator seeks to enlarge the statute. The 16-year limit would be removed by his proposed amendment, and all, white and black, rich and poor, would be subject to this law if it is changed as he proposes.

The names of these institutions indicate what they are. Some of them are church institutions, and when a State sentences its convicts to be punished by a church, I say it is a violation of the spirit of the Constitution, and when the Senator from Montana says that the objection is irrelevant, I must take issue with him. He is entitled to his opinion, I am entitled to mine, Senators are entitled to theirs; but I think, Mr. President, it is a terribly dangerous thing to have the Attorney General vested with power to lease out these convicts to private institutions, whether lay or ecclesiastical.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I feel that that statement should not go without some comment. The Senator has frequently said something in the course of the discussion to the same effect. There is no power in the Attorney General to lease out any convicts, either juvenile or otherwise. To say that he can "lease out" convicts contemplates that they are to be let out at a compensation to private individuals, to work out their own purposes. Nothing of the kind can be gathered from this statute at all. They are to be let out to houses of refuge for keeping, and they are to be kept employed there, as a matter of course, as all inmates of such houses are kept. The idea that they are to be let out to work under what is popularly known as the convict-labor system is too far-fetched to justify argument, in my judgment.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I think I know what the English language means, and the very wording of this statute vests the Attorney General with that very authority, and according to this report, he has exercised it. We need not split hairs about the meaning of words, but the language there is perfectly plain, that the Attorney General is vested with authority to contract for the custody and the employment of these convicts, and if that word "contract" does not mean exactly what it says, then it ceases to mean what it used to mean.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will bear in mind that he is to contract only with houses of reformation.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. This report does not show that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is what the bill provides.

Mr. OVERMAN. If Senators would go out to the National Training School they would find a lot of youthful bootleggers from various States.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. It seems that there is some confusion. The bill as presented to the Senate does not create an offense?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. It merely takes into consideration the punishment which may be inflicted upon people who violate a law already on the statute books?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is all.

Mr. CARAWAY. Nobody could be convicted under this law?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. It creates no offense. It gives courts no additional jurisdiction and does not change the jurisdiction of any court?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; it does not.

Mr. CARAWAY. It simply grants to a Federal judge the power, under an existing law, to designate a place of confinement for women over 16 years of age, as he now has authority to deal with those under 16, and that is the only question at issue?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the last committee amendment to the pending bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum. Those who vote for this bill must go on record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bursum	Gerry	Lenroot	Sheppard
Calder	Glass	Lodge	Smith
Cameron	Gooding	McKellar	Smoot
Capper	Hale	McKinley	Spencer
Caraway	Harrell	McNary	Stanfield
Culbertson	Harris	Myers	Sterling
Cummins	Harrison	Newberry	Sutherland
Curtis	Hefflin	Norris	Trammell
Dial	Hitchcock	Oddie	Underwood
Edge	Johnson	Overman	Wadsworth
Ernst	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Kellogg	Pepper	Warren
Fletcher	Kendrick	Phelps	Watson, Ga.
France	Kling	Polindexter	Willis
Frelinghuysen	Ladd	Pomerene

Mr. NORRIS. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Senate on account of a death in his family.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness, and I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I think will be acceptable to everyone. On page 2, line 1, I move to strike out "house of refuge" and insert "State reformatory." If this amendment is agreed to, I shall move, on line 16, to strike out the words "houses of refuge" and insert in lieu thereof the words "State reformatories."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The second amendment being an amendment to an amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, that amendment will be reserved for a separate vote in the Senate. The first question is on concurring in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole with the exception of the amendment reserved for a separate vote.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 1565) making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] if he will not consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until we can get a vote on the pending bill?

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to the pending bill, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 1, strike out the words "home of refuge" and insert "State reformatory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to the amendment reserved, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In lines 16 and 17, on page 2, strike out the words "houses of refuge" and insert "State reformatories."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

CLEARWATER, ST. JOE, AND SELWAY NATIONAL FOREST LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 77) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Clearwater, St. Joe, and Selway National Forests, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,

G. W. NORRIS,

H. L. MYERS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. J. SINNOTT,

ADDISON T. SMITH,

JOHN E. RAKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senate that the only change from the bill is that there was an amendment in these words:

Within the 6-mile limit.

The Secretary of the Interior asked that those words be stricken out, and therefore we receded, and the bill is just as it passed the Senate with that exception.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). Is there any objection to the present consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF DISABLED ARMY OFFICERS.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1565) making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in view of the history of the legislation and my attitude upon it in the committee, I think it incumbent upon me to make a few observations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I was in hopes that I could be in the Senate when the pending bill was taken up for consideration. I have collected information in relation to retired officers and the cost of the same to the Government, and what this plan will cost and what it will lead to, but it would take me some time to give that information to the Senate. I am compelled to leave to attend a meeting of the Finance Committee. Before doing so, however, I wish to express my sincere hope that the Senate of the United States will not agree to this legislation. If we are going to take care of disabled volunteer officers, I think we had better take care of the disabled volunteer officers of the Civil War before we do those of any other war. Not only that, but it seems to me we are going mad, we are going crazy, on the matter of placing certain classes on the retired list. It will not be very long, if the practice continues, until every taxpayer of the country will have two or three men on his back to take care of, and when that is done—

Mr. NORRIS. When that is done the taxpayer himself will be on the retired list.

Mr. SMOOT. I was just going to make that statement and I thank the Senator from Nebraska for making it.

I thank the Senator from New York for yielding to me for a moment to say what I have. I do hope to have a chance before the bill is passed, if it ever does pass—I can not believe that it will pass, because I do not believe if Senators understand what it is that they will vote for it—to lay before the Senate and the country some of the information I have collected.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for just a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I believe I have the floor. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator from Utah mentions the fact that before we retire any more officers we should retire the Civil War officers.

Mr. SMOOT. I said we should take care of the disabled volunteer officers of the Civil War.

Mr. BURSUM. Does the Senator from Utah realize how many officers of the Civil War could come in under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator from New Mexico that the Senate of the United States has voted time and time again that it would not put the volunteer officers, even of the Civil War, on the retired list.

Mr. BURSUM. I would advise the Senator from Utah that 91 officers would have been eligible last June, and probably a less number now.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator means officers of the Civil War?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the officers whom the Senator proposes to benefit by this bill wait as long as the volunteer officers of the Civil War have waited, and then we will consider the question. We have not yet passed a bill of this character and I do not believe this bill will pass.

Mr. BURSUM. That is a matter for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is difficult in discussing a bill of this sort to suppress—indeed, it is impossible to suppress—one's sympathies for the men affected by the legislation. A group of them appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs in support of the bill introduced by the Senator from New Mexico and stated their cases, their experiences, and estimated their prospects. I say very frankly that their statements inevitably make a very, very strong appeal to human sympathy.

The bill as first introduced provided simply that any person who served as an officer in the emergency forces during the war and who incurred physical disabilities in line of duty might be placed upon the Regular Army retired list under the same conditions as those which apply to Regular Army officers. In that form the legislation was first pressed. It was finally conceded, at least by a majority of the committee and I think by the emergency officers who are supporting the legislation, that that would have had a very vicious result.

We should recollect that an officer of the Regular Army may be placed upon the retired list, either in time of peace or war, if he acquires or suffers a physical disability which renders him unfit for active service in the field. In other words, if the eyesight of a Regular Army officer were injured to the extent that he could not trust himself, and his superiors could not trust him, to command men in action or to do active field service, he may be retired upon the findings of a medical board. His retirement is brought about in the interest of the Government. He is given the retirement privilege as a protection to him in the event, as so often happens to be the case, that he has spent a dozen, 15, 20, 25, or 30 years in the Army and has given up all hope of making a fortune in private business.

Had that same theory been applied to emergency officers it would have resulted in placing upon the retired list of the Regular Army any emergency officer who had emerged from the war with defective eyesight or defective hearing, a stiffened elbow or knee joint, although that same officer might have been entirely able to return to his profession or his business and to carry it on with the same degree of efficiency as though he had not suffered what is comparatively a minor injury, but an injury, nevertheless, sufficient to incapacitate for active field service. So the language of the original bill was stricken out and a substitute drafted, as appears on page 2 of the pending measure.

Frankly, I had hoped that the problem might be approached in a more logical and, to my mind, more proper method of legislation. I have never liked using the retired list of the Regular Army or the Regular Navy as a device for paying additional sums of money to persons outside of those services. The retired list of the Army and of the Navy was not created to be a vehicle for the relief of persons outside of those two permanent services, and it has never been so used. It has been kept inviolate. It was established generations ago on a well-defined and well-accepted theory.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. Of course, the Senator appreciates and is aware of the fact that the emergency officers of the Marine Corps were retired, and also that the provisional officers of the Army and of the Navy were retired, notwithstanding they had only been in the service a very short time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to refer to that in just a moment.

Mr. BURSUM. That is true, is it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not entirely true. Congress promptly repealed it, seeing its mistake.

Mr. BURSUM. They did retire them under that law, however.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But when Congress woke up to what they had done they promptly repealed the law.

Mr. BURSUM. After about two years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. The Congress did not realize what it had done. The statement I have just made is true as of to-day.

Mr. BURSUM. I would be glad to limit this law not to two years but to one year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I dare say the Senator would be glad to limit it in any respect if he could get through what is left.

Mr. BURSUM. I do not agree to all that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not true that the provision to which the Senator refers crept into the bill and was not debated for a single moment on the floor?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not for a single moment, and Congress had no idea it had gone through, and as soon as Congress woke up to the fact that it had gone through it was repealed.

Mr. BURSUM. It was a long time after it had gone through.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We are talking in an enigmatical sort of way, because we have not yet even referred to what we are talking about; but I think we understand what the Senator has referred to. It is that section of the naval appropriation bill passed during the war without anybody knowing it providing that temporary officers of the Navy should have the retirement privilege like the regular officers of the Navy.

Its provisions did not actually go into effect, of course, until toward the end of the war. Immediately thereafter, in 1919 and in 1920, its effect began to be felt, whereupon Congress said, "We will stop this thing," and in the naval appropriation bill last passed there is a proviso that application for such retirement shall not be filed subsequent to October 30, 1921. So the statute has been repealed.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from New York yield to me a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the instance which the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has cited is one of the instances, of which there are very many, which show the desirability of having somewhere some place in our system of appropriations where such matters may go before one reviewing committee, so that at the last moment they may not be brought upon the floor by some individual Senator and passed into an appropriation costing millions of dollars. The amendment which the Senator from New York has described, which applied to the Navy and, of course, to the Marine Corps, leaving the Army outside of its provisions, is one of that character.

Before that time there had been an understanding—in fact there had been legislation to the effect—that what the Army had in way of favors the Navy should have, and vice versa; but it seems in this case there was not turn and turnabout, there was not fair play, and this legislation was passed for the Navy alone. That is what has given rise to the pressure on Senators and Representatives in Congress to pass this particular bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I was in error in a statement which I made a moment ago. I said that the naval legislation on this subject was passed during the war. I find it was not. It was enacted in an act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, approved on June 4, 1920. In some way or other it slipped through without anybody knowing of it. It took effect June 4, 1920, and was repealed as of October 30, 1921.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask if the law was repealed and the practice stopped as to future applicants, whether it was repealed or stopped as to those who had applied in the interim? They continue to draw their retirement pay just the same, do they not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do, of course. Having gotten upon the retired list, there is no way of getting them off; but Congress made up its mind that it would not allow applications to be filed after October 30, 1921, and the applications were still coming in at that time.

Mr. MYERS. I suppose doubtless all of those who were eligible during the interim made application?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That I can not answer. I do not know whether all persons who were eligible made application prior to that upset date, but there would have been no limit to the date when applications might be made in the future had not the Congress said, "This practice must stop." So that act, in so far as Congress could act upon it at the time, was in effect repealed.

Mr. President, I should like to start over again and state something of my own feeling in connection with this situation. I said a moment ago that I regret very much, indeed, any legislation which results in the use of the retired list of the Army as a vehicle for bringing relief to persons who are not members of the Army or the Navy and never have been members of any of those permanent forces for relief of whom and for the sole relief of whom the retired list was established generations ago.

I have been here long enough, Mr. President, to have encountered bill after bill introduced for the relief of one person or a little group of persons, the relief to be provided by authorizing the President to appoint John Smith or a group of Smiths and Robinsons and Joneses to commissions in the Regular Army or in the Regular Navy and immediately place them upon the retired list, that being a device to secure for the person the relief to which his friends regarded him as justly entitled.

In many instances the person is entitled to the relief; but that is not the direct and logical way to go ahead and bring relief to people who need it and to whom it is owed by the country. It is open to many abuses. The precedent once established of a nonmember of the Regular Establishment being made a member of the Regular Establishment in order to get more money in the way of relief is one which will lead to an evergrowing list of pensioners of that kind. It is a precedent which I dread.

Now, as to the treatment of emergency officers. I contended in the committee—I did not have my way about it; the committee reported this bill by a most substantial majority after a full and free discussion, the members voting in accordance with their convictions—but I contended in the committee, as I contend here, that if disabled emergency officers are not being treated as generously as the country should treat them, their relief should be sought through the compensation act, in accordance with the terms of which relief is afforded to all the men in the great volunteer or selective draft army which was raised during the World War.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. Does the Senator from New York feel that the placing of a few disabled emergency officers on the retired roll might in some way contaminate the Regulars and bring about infection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all. The Senator need not have asked me that question. He knows that it is a silly question.

Mr. BURSUM. I am glad to hear the Senator disclaim any such idea.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was saying when I was interrupted, that Congress passed the war risk insurance act providing the method of extending relief to officers and men of the emergency forces who were injured in the World War in the line of duty. I assume the Congress intends to amend that act from time to time if, in its judgment, it is inadequate to give proper relief to those who suffered and sacrificed.

As I said a moment ago, I contended in the committee and I contend here that if there is any group or character of former soldiers, be they officers or enlisted men, who are not receiving the relief which they deserve and need they should receive it through an amendment or extension or improvement of the compensation law, and not use the retired list of the Regular Army and the Regular Navy in order to obtain that relief.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I have taken the attitude that all of the officers and enlisted men who responded to the call in time of emergency, who received commissions or enlisted for the duration of the emergency, and in that sense corresponded with the aforetime volunteer armies of the United States—all of them, officers and men, should be treated exactly alike in the matter of compensation for injuries sustained.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has referred more than once to this bill being a relief measure. I ask the Senator whether in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs it was not the distinct contention of those in favor of the bill that this was in no sense a relief bill? I desire to quote from the testimony of one of the first witnesses. Referring to the bill as being a relief bill or a bill for added compensation, he says:

That is exactly what the disabled soldiers do not want; that is exactly what the American Legion is not in favor of. We are not after increased compensation. What we want are the same rights, the same privileges, accorded the disabled emergency Army officers as are accorded to officers of the Regular Establishment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the declaration which the Senator from Missouri has read is an important one, but the essential thing for us to understand is, What will be the effect of the bill? The effect of the bill will be to give greater relief. I do not deny here and now that greater relief is not needed; but to state that the bill now before the Senate is not primarily a relief bill is to contradict its very provisions. It largely increases the amount of money which each one of these injured officers will receive from the Federal Treasury. Many of the witnesses who appeared before the committee contending for the bill pointed out the financial aspect of the case and argued in favor of the measure on the ground that their financial status under the compensation law was so unsatisfactory and needed such improvement in the way of securing more money by way of allowance, monthly or annually, that their proposal was to take, in lieu of compensation paid under existing law, the three-fourths pay of a Regular Army officer of the same grade, which in most cases amounts to much more than the compensation paid under existing law. I think I am not inaccurate in designating this as a relief measure.

It is true that some emphasis was placed by some of the witnesses on the value which they assigned to the honor of being known as a retired officer of the United States Army. I do not deny that an honor does attach, and if proper methods of bringing it about could be devised—and perhaps they may be devised—I would not deny them that honor. But, Mr. President, reverting again to the policy of the country with respect to the treatment of its officers and soldiers raised to meet emergencies in former wars and in the World War, this bill constitutes the first attempt on the part of Congress, if it is to be passed, of drawing a line of demarcation in the matter of pensions or compensation to the injured between enlisted men and officers.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. Is it not true, rather, that this is the first attempt to obliterate the line of demarcation and discrimination between the emergency officers and those of the Regular Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That may be said; but the question is, Do we want to obliterate the distinction between a purely temporary force and a permanent force maintained during peace and war?

Mr. BURSUM. So far as the officers of the Army who are graduates of West Point are concerned, I should say they do not want to give it up.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not speaking for them. I do not see what concern they have in this bill, for it does not affect them, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BURSUM. They are taking a great deal of interest in it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have noticed that none of them asked to come before the committee and none did come before the committee; they are not concerned in this matter.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. The argument of the men seeking this relief, as I understand—and the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—is that in the overseas Army of the United States there was but one Army without any distinction between the emergency officer and the Regular Army officer, and therefore if two officers, to use a concrete illustration, in precisely the same engagement were wounded in precisely the same way, those officers ought to be treated in precisely the same manner after they have been incapacitated for service in civil life.

Now, I understand that an Army officer has an Army career, and may perhaps thereby cut himself off from civil careers and is entitled in times of peace to a distinction, to a difference, because of that fact; but when we are at war and regard the emergency Army officer as precisely the same as the Regular Army officer, and each of them is incapacitated for life, I can not for the life of me see why one of them should be retired as an Army officer, with all the honor and the emoluments and privileges that are associated with him, as is the case with the Regular Army officers, and the other officer, injured in the same battle and in the same way, be relegated to a compensation that may be meted out because he has been injured, but without any regard to his military standing or his military service.

Is not that the real basis of the argument on which those who are in favor of the bill stand?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have heard that given as a basis, and others.

Mr. President, I do not quarrel with the Senator from Missouri in his statement up to a certain point. I am not contending that the emergency officer should not receive as good treatment financially as the Regular officer; but I do draw a distinction between the different grades or ranks of emergency officers which I would not draw in the case of Regulars.

The personnel and make-up of a great emergency force, officers and men, is very different from that of a regular force maintained in time of peace, generation after generation, the men spending their lives at it. I do not believe that a major in the emergency forces who loses an arm, who makes that great sacrifice, should receive any less compensation than a lieutenant colonel in the emergency forces who loses an arm likewise. He has made just as great a sacrifice. He left his home on approximately the same day. We can assume that he left an equally prosperous business. We can assume that his prospects in business and in life were just as good as those of the other man. He suffered the same injury, he displays the same gallantry; and it always has been the policy of this country to treat all those men, as among themselves, exactly alike in the matter of pensions.

This bill destroys that theory, and I do not think the policy of the bill is a wise one. It begins for the first time to discriminate in the matter of pensions to volunteer or emergency soldiers on the basis of rank. Everybody knows that rank in time of great emergency is largely a matter of accident, and sometimes a matter of choice; and that element should not inject itself in here. When one man left a going business which was prosperous and secured a commission as captain in an organization in which, it so happens, he could not get promotion to major, and another man left a like business and got, by luck perhaps, a commission as major, and the two men suffer the same injury, to provide that the major is for all his life to come going to get more money from the Government than the captain is something that we have never done in all our history, and I hope we never will.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. If a major in the Regular Army has lost his arm in the engagement which the Senator describes, and a lieutenant colonel in the Regular Army has lost his arm in the same engagement, there is no doubt about the fact that the lieutenant colonel would have received all the rest of his life greater compensation, if you like, because of his retirement as a lieutenant colonel than the major would receive, is there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. SPENCER. Then the argument of the Senator from New York—and there is merit in the argument—resolves itself to this, if I understand him aright: That in the Regular Army the lieutenant colonel has reached his position because of a long series of years of fitness and excellence and experience that have put him above the major, and that by virtue of that fact he is entitled to retirement at a lieutenant colonel's provision of money rather than at a major's provision, while in regard to the emergency officers there is none of that fair basis of discrimination; that, as the Senator puts it, it is largely accident that one is a major and one is a captain, not particularly because one has proved himself to be a major, but because of the accidents and emergencies of the time, and therefore that there ought to be no difference between the compensation of the officers—major and captain or major and lieutenant colonel—in the emergency army for the same injury.

I can not quite agree with the Senator from New York in that line of argument, though I admit the merit of it, because I assume that the man who is a lieutenant colonel in the emergency army is a lieutenant colonel because either his bravery or his experience or his fidelity or some other reason made him a lieutenant colonel, while the other man was a major.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the Senator must distinguish between the sergeant and the private. If you are going to begin to distinguish, in the matter of relief money, between colonels and lieutenant colonels and majors and captains, on the ground that the colonel is a more valuable man, a braver man, an abler man than the lieutenant colonel, and the lieutenant colonel likewise than the major, then, to be consistent, you must go clear down the line and distinguish between the sergeant and the corporal, and the corporal and the private.

Mr. SPENCER. Is it done in the Regular Army in retirement?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is entirely different in the Regular Army. The lieutenant colonel in the Regular Army gets a higher retirement pay than the major because he has sacrificed more in point of time spent in the service. He has given more of his life to the Army as a profession. He went into it before the major did. The routine promotion in the Army runs by seniority. Length of service governs promotion in the Regular Army; and it has been the policy of the Congress for generations to raise the pay of officers of the Army and the Navy in accordance with their increase in rank. Their increase in rank travels along on a parallel with their increasing years, and the Congress always has maintained the policy that when an old officer retires—an officer in the grade of colonel, we will say—he shall get a larger retirement emolument than a younger officer, who has retired from the grade of captain or major, because he has devoted more of his life, more of his useful years, to the Army, and has to that extent made a greater sacrifice. But you can not distinguish between emergency or volunteer officers in the matter of sacrifice. There is no way of doing it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. If you assume to distinguish on the basis of relative rank, you will do injustices by the hundreds and thousands, and you never will be able to explain how it is that Capt. Smith and Maj. Jones, who worked side by side in the same law office, in the same bank perhaps, and went to the training camp on the same day and got their commissions in the emergency or volunteer forces on the same day, and went with the same unit, and took part in the same battle, and suffered exactly the same disabilities, one in the meantime having been promoted one grade through the accidents and fortunes of war—that that having been done Maj. Smith comes home and for the rest of his life draws more money as compensation for his lost arm than does Capt. Jones for the loss of his arm.

You can not do that, Mr. President. We have never done it. We did not do it after the Civil War. We did not do it after the Spanish War. We have always clung to the policy of treating all our emergency soldiers, officers and men, exactly alike in the matter of financial relief. This bill is the first attempt to destroy that parity, to distinguish between the private soldier and the captain who have suffered exactly alike in the matter of physical injury; and it opens up a vista here which, I confess, I view with considerable alarm. You never will be able to persuade the enlisted men how it is that they can not get in the days of their suffering the same financial relief that is accorded to the commissioned officers; and the passage of this bill by the Congress will inevitably bring about a justifiable demand on the part of the emergency enlisted men of this war for equal treatment so far as finances are concerned.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. It is not my understanding that all members of the Regular Army are promoted by length of service. Are not many officers in the Regular Army jumped many degrees over other officers who have served longer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those exceptions are so rare as to prove the rule. No officer in the Army can be jumped over another except when commissioned a brigadier general. Promotion in the Regular Army goes by seniority from second lieutenant to colonel, inclusive; and as of the 14,000 officers in the Regular Army all but about 100 are colonels or less one can see what an important factor length of service is in the matter of promotion in the Army. It is bound to be that way.

Mr. President, it is not agreeable, at least to me, to oppose this bill, because my heart goes out to the men who appeared before the Military Affairs Committee. They made a very strong appeal. My contention and my only contention has been that they should seek relief through the channels and the machinery already set up by the Congress in the form of the compensation acts. A number of these men appeared before the Military Affairs Committee and stated the amount of compensation they would draw when finally discharged from their emergency commissions. The men who appeared before us were still in the emergency forces, as they were still patients at the Walter Reed Hospital. The maximum of medical relief has not yet been attained, and they still hold their commissions and draw the pay of their grades until finally discharged. Then their compensation will commence. The physical condition of the men who appeared before our committee was apparent; it was distressing; and in several instances they satisfied me that the compensation which they are going to receive after they fall automatically under the compensation act will not be sufficient. I admit that. My only proposal has been from the beginning that we should amend the compensation act, and give such a man enough to support him; and I refuse, myself, to distinguish between him and the man next lower in grade or rank. I would give him enough to support himself, and I would give the man below him enough to support himself, and all down the line. I would not distinguish between them. I would advocate every possible degree of generosity. I would go to the utmost limits in seeing that those men are enabled financially to lead comfortable, decent lives as long as they shall live. Our gratitude toward them should never cease, and I think it never will; but when you ask me to distinguish between them on the basis of rank, I say "No."

I will only distinguish between them on the basis of disability. I can not support a measure which will take the recently arrived immigrant who takes out his first citizenship papers and, with a fine spirit of loyalty, enlists in the Army of the United States in the great emergency, and loses a leg, and pay that man less for the loss of his leg than the man who happened to be a sergeant, just over him. That is the principle of this bill, although the bill does not affect enlisted men at all. If we distinguish between officers rank by rank, we will have to distinguish between the enlisted men grade by grade, and we would reach an impossible situation, and one fraught with injustice, one which we would never be able to defend.

There are one or two little matters which might be alluded to in connection with this legislation. The contention was made before the committee, and has been made since, that an unfortunate contrast was presented in an incident of this sort: A young man graduated from West Point, we will say, in the spring of 1917, and, of course, was immediately commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Regular Army. He was assigned to a unit, went to France, and was severely wounded, to such an extent that for the rest of his life he will be incapacitated for active service in the field, according to Regular Army standards. He went on the retired list of the Regular Army at three-fourths of the pay of a second lieutenant, although he may have been in the Army only 6, 8, or 10 months.

Another young man of the same age, but who did not go to West Point and did not receive a commission in the Regular Army, took an emergency commission, went to France, and was injured in the same way and to the same extent, and he, instead of getting three-fourths of the pay of the grade of second lieutenant, falls under the provisions of the compensation act and receives something less.

The argument is made, and it is rather an effective one, that the young West Point boy is treated so much better than the other. Perhaps the picture would be more accurate if we took men in one grade higher—first lieutenant—where the three-fourths pay amounts to more than the three-fourths pay of a second lieutenant. The argument is made that because few contrasts of that kind can be pictured we should change the whole policy of the Government, dating back 70 or 80 years, and see to it that emergency officers and volunteer officers as a class shall hereafter draw more money in the way of relief than those who were not officers and who served in the ranks of an emergency or volunteer army.

I grant the apparent injustice as depicted in the contrast between the young Regular Army lieutenant and the young emergency army lieutenant. My contention is that the instances of that kind are comparatively few in number, very, very few, and that they should not be taken as an adequate argument and reason for abolishing our whole philosophy of pensions and compensation. I think in that case we would be endeavoring to escape from a comparatively minute evil and rush into the arms of an evil so great and so all embracing that it would destroy that spirit of fair play which should follow after every war and which should dictate, and has dictated up to this moment, equal treatment in the way of compensation for every officer and man, without distinction, who leaves his private employment to defend his country and returns home injured.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. If that be true, that there should be equal treatment in the matter of compensation after the war, was it not equally true that we should have accorded equal treatment during the war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. BURSUM. Why not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the way of pay?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because there are different degrees of responsibility in rank and in grade, from the top to the bottom, in the Army and Navy; also, there is a greater expense imposed upon officers than that imposed upon enlisted men. Enlisted men are put to no expense whatsoever. They are fed, clothed, transported, and doctored. The officer has to feed himself, clothe himself, and in many instances is subjected to other expenses which the enlisted man is never called upon to meet. Surely the Senator from New Mexico can not draw a parallel there. I am talking about equal treatment of men who are no longer in the Army or in the Navy, but who have made equal sacrifice while in it, and for equal sacrifice to the country I demand, as much as one Senator may, equal treatment. That is the point I have tried to emphasize here this afternoon.

Mr. BURSUM. If the Senator from New York concedes that differences in salary are just, I assume it is for the reason that those receiving higher salaries possess greater earning capacity.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not out of military life.

Mr. BURSUM. I am speaking of earning capacity in the service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the service; yes.

Mr. BURSUM. I assume also that the Senator from New York appreciates that in all matters of compensation under any of the laws of the States the earning capacity is an essential factor in determining the amount of compensation to be paid. That is the law in nearly every State in the Union.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What sort of compensation?

Mr. BURSUM. Compensation for injuries in any line.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean under employers' liability acts and workmen's compensation acts?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; under workmen's compensation acts, any sort of compensation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely the Senator from New Mexico will not contend that this bill bears any relation to a man's earning capacity in civil life.

Mr. BURSUM. Not in civil life. The earning capacity must be determined upon the basis of his earnings at the time next preceding the injury.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not under this bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Of course.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is nothing in this bill in relation to that.

Mr. BURSUM. There is, absolutely. The officer's injury was sustained in the service, we will say, and his retirement is based upon his rank and pay in the service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BURSUM. Of course, that is the basis. A captain will receive more than a lieutenant, and a major will receive a little more than a captain. That is the precise basis, and it is in line with the general rule of determining the proper compensation for injuries.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not believe that basis is a proper one, as I have tried to point out; but I challenge the Senator from New Mexico to be entirely consistent about it and draw the same distinction as among the different grades of enlisted men, and see how long any such measure as that would last. The first sergeant of a company of Infantry draws nearly three times as much as the "buck" private. Does the Senator from New Mexico contend that he should have three times as much compensation for the same kind of injury? I think not. But that is what he is attempting to do in the case of officers.

Mr. BURSUM. That is a separate proposition. What I am contending for is that those who happened to belong to the emergency army should be given identically the same treatment as officers who belonged to the Regular Army, when their injuries were suffered under the same conditions. Equality is what we are contending for.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New Mexico and I have discussed this thing a good many times, in committee and in private conversation, and we do not seem to be able to agree on the basis for a just system of compensation to the men who go forth in defense of their country in an emergency.

Mr. BURSUM. That is very apparent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have expressed my views here because, in the first place, several Senators asked me what I thought of this legislation, being somewhat disturbed concerning it, thinking, as I do, that it constitutes a very grave departure.

I have discussed it with no thought or feeling of hostility toward that remarkable body of men, the emergency officers, for whom I have an immense respect. Their efficiency and their gallantry were extraordinary. But I can not help remembering what the policy of the United States has been after every war we have ever waged, how we have always declined to distinguish among these men on the basis of rank, and I rose to express the hope we would never do so; that we should treat them all exactly alike.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am unable to quite agree with the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], with reference to what he calls the discrimination in the bill. It seems to me one of the great objects of this bill and one of the effects of it will be to do away with an existing discrimination.

The purpose is to allow the emergency officer who served in the war, sacrificed, did his duty, and performed precisely the same kind of service the regular officer performed, or the marine officer performed, or the Navy officer performed, to enjoy the same benefits under the same conditions. If he was disabled in the service in the discharge of his duty, why should he not be allowed the same privileges, as to retirement, for instance, the other officers enjoy?

This measure is not a new proposition. It was formally submitted in the House and there were extensive hearings on it, and it seems to have been referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the House, for some reason or other, and they sought to take care of it through some amendments to the war risk insurance act, to provide for this condition under some form or plan of compensation, but that was not accomplished.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I want to propound a question entirely for information. I ask the Senator whether there is any difference between this bill, applying to the officers of the Army in the late war, and the legislation which has several times been proposed, and always failed, which would retire the volunteer officers who served in the Civil War?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know that there is any great difference in principle in the two propositions.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President—

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator—

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask another question in connection with this. If there is no difference—

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; there is a difference.

Mr. NORRIS. If there is no difference, then what excuse, as a matter of justice, can we give for an act that permits the retirement at increased pay of soldiers of the World War that will not permit officers of the Civil War, 50 years after that war, to retire and receive increased pay?

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I suggest to the Senator from Florida that the bill applies only to disabled officers where they are disabled to the extent of at least 30 per cent?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; this is confined to the disabled officers. However, the matter to which the Senator from Nebraska has referred was alluded to in the hearings, and I might refer to it just briefly. One of the witnesses made reference to it. Lieut. Hammitt said:

Most of the points that I was going to bring up to-day have been covered, but there are a few things that I would like to clear up. This mountain, as I would term it, about the officers of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, when diagnosed, I think will prove to be more or less of a molehill. If the same percentage applied in the Civil War to wounds and disabilities and casualties as applied in this war, there were 200,000 officers in this war, emergency officers, and but five or six thousand are drawing compensation. That is 1 out of 40. If the same ratio applies to the officers left living from the Civil War, about 8,000, I think, or 1 out of 40, then we would have 20 officers eligible for retirement from the Civil War.

That would be the effect if we extend this to apply to those conditions and to the Civil War retired officers. But referring to the basis or the foundation of the proposal, it seems to me the arguments submitted in favor of it are unanswerable.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the question I have propounded, may I still make the inquiry, Why not include the Civil War officers? Why are we discriminating against them after 50 years have elapsed?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no discrimination. There is no proposal of that sort pending.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand. The very fact they are not included is a discrimination against them, it seems to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. If a proposition of that sort should be submitted, confined as this is to disabled officers, I apprehend that the question which the Senator propounds would be appropos, but there is no discrimination here. The bill refers to the officers engaged under these circumstances and, as I shall show a little later, the original idea of all these men was that they would be upon the same basis as the Regular Army officers in the war.

In the first place, the American Legion, an organization composed of more than a million and a quarter of ex-service men and women, and speaking direct to the pending bill, have indorsed it fully. They did that at their convention on November 11, 1919, and passed resolutions which are set out in the hearings. I think perhaps it would be in order to include those resolutions as a part of my remarks if they have not been included heretofore. There is a copy of the resolutions set out in the committee hearings, and I ask permission to have them inserted in the Record as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Whereas the officers and enlisted personnel entering the Army from civil life during the recent war bore the same risks, the same responsibilities and burdens under identical conditions with officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army; and

Whereas National Guard, National Army, and Reserve Corps officers have been discharged on disabilities ranging from 10 per cent to total, which means that they receive after discharge only from $3 to $30 per month, while a Regular Army officer, if he is unfit for active duty is retired on three-fourths of his pay, with additional amounts for commutation of heat, light, and quarters; and

Whereas the present laws and regulations constitute an unjust discrimination in favor of a certain class of our military forces, viz, the Regular Army, and this discrimination being in principle un-American and unworthy the practice of a great democracy: Be it

Resolved by this national convention of the American Legion, That the existing laws and regulations do unjustly and unwisely discriminate in favor of persons whose interests were no greater and whose service was of no greater benefit to the Nation, and that such discrimination has a tendency to place the several branches of our military system on a different status, thereby causing friction and injustice; and be it further

Resolved, That the national convention of the American Legion heartily indorses the resolution on this subject adopted by the St. Louis caucus of the Legion, and we again request the Congress of the United States to amend the present laws so as to place all disabled officers and enlisted personnel on the same basis as to retirement for their disability, whether they happened to serve in the Regular Army, the National Guard, the National Army, or the Reserve Corps.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator if he has talked with any private, one who knew or understood what the bill does, who has expressed himself in favor of it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will come to that in a few moments. I am taking up the matter in order, but I think I will show, based upon the testimony before our committee, that the enlisted men are in favor of the legislation.

Mr. BURSUM. If I recall correctly, there was at least one private soldier who appeared before the committee at the hearing.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. I will deal with that in a few moments.

The statement was made and urged very strongly before the committee that those who are in favor of the bill are not basing it upon the ground of charity or any favoritism. They claim distinctly, and I think with sound basis, that they are asking that the discrimination existing between the disabled emergency officers and the officers of the Regular Establishment be removed. That is the point they make. They say that these men did exactly the same work under exactly the same conditions as the officers of the Regular Army, and the records and the proofs will show that the great bulk and the tremendous majority of the officers in the line who suffered disability from contact with the Army were emergency officers.

The American Legion at three conventions held in the United States has advocated the passage of the legislation. They simply want the same right of retirement accorded to the disabled emergency Army officers as is accorded to the officers of the Regular Establishment retired for disability.

They claim further that when these officers were inducted into the Army the legislation providing for them was the selective service act, Public No. 12, of the Sixty-fifth Congress, approved May 18, 1917, section 10 of the act being as follows:

That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for, other than the Regular Army, shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowance, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of the corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army.

That was the law under which these men served. Heretofore, in construing the word "pension," the department has held that—

Retired officers are in fact pensioners, and the compensation and pay given to them constitutes a form of pension. They exercise no function and receive no emoluments of office, but are pensioned for past faithful service or disabilities contracted in the line of duty. * * * They (retired officers) are in the nature of pensioners, the compensation and pay given them constituting a form of pension.

That has been held in the case of Yates v. United States (25 Court of Claims, 296), so the use of the word "pensions" in the act of 1917 would include the retirement privilege.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. When that measure was passed did the Senator think the word "pension" included retirement pay?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would not say that I had made up my mind fully as to that, but that is the claim that is made.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; that is the claim.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is made with some considerable force. I am not so sure but that they are correct in the claim.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Court of Claims has held that it does.

Mr. LENROOT. No; the Court of Claims has never held that it does. The Court of Claims has never held that the word "pension" used in a statute of the United States included retirement pay. While I was not a Member of this body at that time, I was a Member of the House, and I am frank to say the understanding of everybody was that it did not include retirement pay, and the words "retirement pay" were expressly excluded for that reason.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was reading from a decision set forth in the hearings to the effect that the retired officers in the regular service are in the nature of pensioners, the compensation and pay given them constituting a form of pension. The argument is made with very considerable force, and it seems to be very properly urged, reading the decisions and the law as it then existed under the selective service act which was passed, and the emergency officers contend that they were promised, by section 10, the same footing as the Regular Army officers were then enjoying as to retirement.

Then they referred to General Order No. 73, issued by the War Department on August 17, 1918. That general order contains this clause:

This country has but one Army, the United States Army, which includes all the land forces in the service of the United States. Those forces, however raised, lose their identity in that of the United States Army.

Those officers were a part of the Army, just as much a part of it as the Regular Army or the National Guard or any other branch or subdivision. Under the law as it then stood and under General Order No. 73, these officers had a basis for the assumption that they were upon the same footing as to compensation, as to pay, as to retirement privilege, as to all other privileges that would follow for the benefit of the Regular Establishment.

Further than that, here are officers who rendered faithful service and were wounded, some of them in a way that it is difficult to describe—and I will refer to that a little later—according to their own testimony as they appeared before the committee. They are now getting as compensation $57 a month. Most of them, and most of those who appeared before our committee, are drawing $57 a month insurance benefits for complete disability under their war-risk policies, but they do not consider that as a gift from the Government any more than if it came from some purely commercial company with whom contractual relations had been made.

When they pass from the hospital, if they are graded as 100 per cent disabled their pay will be $100 a month. But when an officer in the regular service is retired, perhaps not any worse injured and not actually serving any more in combat than these men or rendering any greater service on the battle field, he is retired with three-fourths pay. Not only that, but he has certain other privileges which I shall mention a little later.

Some of these men, if they are graded as 100 per cent disabled, will receive $100 a month. Then, if they are able to take vocational training they will have $35 or $40 a month more allowed to them for the time they are taking the training, say, three or four years. That would bring their pay up to, say, $135 a month. Some of them would get really less under this bill than they are now able to receive. I went so far as to suggest that it ought to be optional with them; that if it were to their advantage from a financial standpoint to come under this proposed law and make application for retirement and be allowed to retire, they should be permitted to do so, but that if it were not to their advantage to do that, but rather to receive the benefits of the compensation and the vocational training allowances to which they are now entitled, they should be permitted to do that. However, they said no; they do not want any advantage out of this proposed legislation; they do not want anything more than that they shall be put upon the same basis as the Regular Army officer. Irrespective of whether it would be more to their advantage to continue to take the vocational training and receive the compensation which they already get than it would be to retire under this bill, they prefer that the law shall be passed which will retire them and give them this privilege just exactly the same as it is given to the officers in the Regular Establishment.

Mr. President, with reference to the increased cost to the Government, on page 18 of the hearing, Lieut. Hammitt said:

While the question of the cost of retirement—the average cost—was being discussed, I totaled up the officers in the room, and found the number to be 20—

That is, there were 20 officers in the committee room at the time when we were holding the hearings—

1 major, 4 captains, 9 first lieutenants, 6 second lieutenants—and you take their salaries and add them together and divide by 20 and multiply by three-fourths you will find that it gives $1,561, the average cost of retiring the officers in this room, and I imagine that they are an average lot.

In other words, if this bill shall pass, the average cost to the Government as a result of placing on the retired list the officers who were disabled in the service while carrying the flag of their country and winning the war will be $1,561.

These officers make another strong point when they say that the Navy emergency officers are allowed the retirement privilege; that the emergency officers of the Marine Corps are allowed the privilege; that in all branches of the service except in the Army itself the emergency officers are entitled to just what this bill proposes to give them. I quote further from the hearings:

The naval appropriations bill approved June 4, 1920, Public, 234, Sixty-sixth Congress, provides in the latter part of section 2, page 26, as follows:

"That all officers of the Naval Reserve Force and temporary officers of the Navy who have heretofore incurred or may hereafter incur physical disabilities in line of duty shall be eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided by law for officers of the Regular Navy who are retired for physical disabilities in the line of duty."

Under that law the emergency officers of the Navy and of the marines are not only eligible for retirement but are actually being retired to-day, as the cases come up, on a parity with the permanent officers in the same branches of the service.

There is the precedent; that is what is taking place in the Navy. Very consistently with that and very properly, it seems to me, the representatives of these emergency officers argue that the same principle ought to apply to the emergency officers of the Army. They said when dealing with specific cases that this bill would not provide amply for the men who deserved additional relief.

In response to what the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] says, "Let us deal with individual cases; let us take care of the men according to the merit in each case, and where a man has been totally disabled and can not earn a living because of the wounds and injuries received in the war, let us provide amply for him and take care of his case without a general act of this kind," I desire to say that is not what these men want, and, in my judgment, is not the proper way to deal with the matter.

In the first place, it would be a very difficult and cumbersome process to introduce private bills and deal with each individual case in a separate piece of legislation; and, in the next place, we would not be following out a broad general principle as is proposed in this instance—that is, to place these men on an equality with the officers of the Regular Establishment. They further say:

We are convinced we would have a nearer approach to even justice by placing us on an equal basis with the retirement standards of the Regular Army, just as the disabled emergency officers of the Navy and marines are brought under the requirements there.

In some instances the bill, if passed, would not give them all that they really ought to have; but it provides a general rule and a general standard which is applicable to every officer and to all conditions; and that, it seems to me, they have a right to claim and it is not asking too much.

A further statement is given in the hearings as to the cost which this measure would involve to the Government, but I will not take the time to go into that now. It must be remembered, however, that most of these officers are men beyond the age when they can derive any benefit from the vocational training privilege. Some of them are of the age of 37 or 38 or 40 years, and they can not take up something new; they can not go into a school and learn some trade or some business. In the first place, in some instances they are too badly disabled; and, in the next place, they are too old to undertake a thing like that. To say that they are entitled to vocational training and that sort of thing, therefore, does not meet the situation.

With reference to enlisted men, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] inquired whether any private soldier was in favor of this bill. I call his attention to the hearings at page 31, where Pvt. Bernard Powell testified:

I have been in four hospitals on this side, and I have talked to quite a few men. At Fort Sheridan we had a disabled enlisted men's association of about 2,000 men, and I talked to a great many of them, and they are very much in favor of retirement for the emergency officer the same as the Regular Army officer, and they passed the following resolution—

The resolution, which is set out in the hearings, indorses the pending measure. I ask unanimous consent to have the resolution printed in the Record at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Be it resolved, That we, the disabled enlisted men of the World War at United States Army Hospital No. 28, Fort Sheridan, Ill., at this time desire to go on record as favoring legislation to aid men disabled in the war; further, that we particularly indorse the Wason bill, now before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House, and the Stevenson bill, before the Ways and Means Committee. We believe legislation to aid the men disabled in the war should precede general relief measures for war veterans.

At the beginning of the war men signed for Government war risk insurance with the understanding that should they be disabled they would receive premiums. Thousands of disabled soldiers have been in the hospitals receiving no premiums but, instead, have been paying the installments monthly. The Wason bill provides that disabled soldiers while under treatment in the hospitals will be reimbursed with the monthly installments paid while under treatment, also $5.70 for each $1,000 insurance carried. Further, the disabled soldier will receive a percentage of monthly premiums according to the percentage of disability granted by the disability board of the United States Army after discharge.

The Stevenson bill, now before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, provides compensation for the disabled emergency officer equal to the retirement pay provided the Regular Army officer retired because of disability incurred in line of duty.

The bill does not permit retired emergency officers to draw commutation for quarters, heat, and light, or buy from the Army commissary, as retired Regular Army officers are able to do.

The retired Regular Army officer may be called back to active duty if his condition permits. The bill makes the retired emergency officer not liable for further military service.

Mr. FLETCHER. That resolution was adopted by the enlisted men at the hospital at Fort Sheridan. So I claim that the evidence before us is not only that the enlisted men have no objection to this measure, but they actually and earnestly and cordially favor it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The question I asked the Senator was whether he had fully explained this bill to an enlisted man; and if so, if he had found a single enlisted man who understood it to be in favor of it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have had no occasion to explain it to any enlisted man.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I have explained it to many of them, and I have not found one enlisted man who understands the terms of this bill who is in favor of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say, Mr. President, that I have had no occasion to go into the question with any enlisted man; no enlisted man has called upon me to explain it or has asked for an opportunity to express his views upon it one way or the other. All the correspondence I have had on the subject—I do not recall now whether the letters have come from enlisted men or officers or associations or posts or what not—has been in favor of this bill and has indorsed this proposed legislation. I have not made it a business to inquire specifically of individual enlisted men, and I have had no conversation that I recall with any of them. The only thing upon which I can base any sort of judgment as to their attitude is what has taken place in the hearings and the fact that none of them have come to me to protest or object to it. The hearings show further, at page 32, in the testimony of Lieut. James G. Graham:

The first point is as to the age of the officer at the time of entering the military service, which has been averaged at 34. Many of them, of course, were much older. The age of the officer on entering the service had something to do with his degree of commission. His age and experience were taken into account at the time he was commissioned. For instance, the age of the average second lieutenant would probably be from 21 to 25, first lieutenant from 25 to 30, captains and majors older. Consequently the method of retirement as applied in the Regular Army should apply to the disabled emergency officer, because of the fact that it covers his probable increased earning capacity and his probable increased family responsibility in every way.

The same argument and the same benefits that would apply to the Regular officers would apply to the emergency officers. The benefits under retirement would be the same as in the case of the Regular officer. For instance, the base pay of a colonel is $4,000 a year, and his retirement pay would be $3,000; the base pay of a lieutenant colonel—and there are not many emergency officers in the higher grades—is $3,500, and his retirement pay would be three-fourths of that, or $2,622.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. I should like to mention the fact that only 18 lieutenant colonels will come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thank the Senator for the suggestion, and in the highest grades I presume the number will be even more limited. The Senator says that there would be 18 lieutenant colonels, and probably there would be fewer colonels who would come under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Only 12 colonels would fall within its provisions.

Mr. FLETCHER. Only 12 colonels and 18 lieutenant colonels would be covered by this bill. In the case of a colonel the retirement pay would be $3,000 and in the case of a lieutenant colonel, $2,622; in the case of a major, the base pay is $3,000, and the retirement pay would be $2,250. In the case of an emergency officer who has served as a major in the Army and is wounded—a man with a family, for instance—absolutely unable to go back to his original employment, whatever it may have been; unable to earn a living at all, disabled 100 per cent, we will say, I ask, in all reason, is $2,250 a year too much to allow an officer like that who was crippled and maimed in battle?

In the case of a captain, $2,400 a year is his base pay. His retirement pay would be $1,800. In the case of a first lieutenant, $2,200 is his base pay. His retirement pay would be $1,500. The base pay of a second lieutenant is $1,700. His retirement pay would be $1,275.

If they are totally disabled these first lieutenants, for instance, would be entitled to $100 a month compensation under the law. If they can take vocational training they are entitled to thirty-five or forty dollars a month more for the years that the vocational training will last; but they are entitled to $100 a month compensation in case of total disability now under the law. They give that up. This bill does not add to what they already have under the law. They must give up their compensation if they accept the benefits of this bill. If they retire they take the status of retired officers and stand upon that basis alone. There is no further compensation, no other allowance, nothing but the retirement pay; so that where a man is totally disabled and entitled to $100 a month compensation now, he would get only $1,275 a year, or just $75 more, under this bill than he is receiving now.

Lieut. Graham cites this sort of a case:

This case might be cited: A colonel of the National Guard, a man 60 years old, had a bad skull wound and one leg gone. He was discharged before the passage of the Sweet bill and received, I believe, $17 a month. In the same ward at the hospital was a second lieutenant, a provisional officer, who had had three months' military training. He had been disabled in battle, but received a less severe wound than this colonel, and he was retired on three-quarters of the pay of a second lieutenant, which gave him over $100 a month. Now, that lieutenant had no family and no family responsibilities. He had every chance to start in life again, whereas the colonel, because of his increased years and increased capacity and capabilities and increased service to the Government, had received absolutely no recognition and was faced with the greater difficulties of entering business.

Numerous cases of that sort could be cited.

Lieut. Graham further testifies as follows, in response to questions:

Senator SPENCER. How long were you in the service?

Lieut. GRAHAM. Three years, two years of which I spent in the hospital. Less than one month after reaching France, after I had spent eight days in the line, I was wounded. I was wounded three times and gassed. I was picked up and was a prisoner in a German prison camp until after the armistice.

Senator SPENCER. Did you get good treatment in their hospitals?

Lieut. GRAHAM. Not very good. I had a shell fragment in the brain until I returned to the United States, and it was removed after I returned.

Senator FREELINGHUYSEN. Did they make an effort to operate on you?

Lieut. GRAHAM. No, sir; not until about the time of the armistice. They started to operate on me in the German camp, but an American major in the Medical Corps who was in the camp refused to let them operate on me and recommended my exchange, which was to be negotiated through the Spanish Embassy, but the armistice came before my exchange was effected.

Senator FREELINGHUYSEN. Were there many Americans in this camp—was it a hospital or prison camp?

Lieut. GRAHAM. A regular prison camp of American officers. There were probably 200 at the end of the war.

Senator FREELINGHUYSEN. Did they take care of you in any way—have any doctors attending you?

Lieut. GRAHAM. We were treated by Germans in some places, but the treatment was very poor. I have seen men starve to death—practically die from starvation, from diarrhea and dysentery. I have seen men whose wounds were not treated for days and days at a time and that became infected with bugs and worms, etc. I had a dressing on my arm for six weeks at one time before it was changed.

Senator SPENCER. Was that treatment the result of negligence or was there a lack of medical assistance?

Lieut. GRAHAM. The Germans were very poorly equipped, and there was a great lack of personnel. We were not given the same treatment as the Germans. Our ration in one prison camp was one-sixth of a loaf of bread a day and two bowls of soup.

Senator SPENCER. Did the German invalids get better treatment?

Lieut. GRAHAM. They got some solid food.

Senator FLETCHER. Where were you wounded?

Lieut. GRAHAM. At the Battle of the Marne on the 15th of July. I served with the Twenty-eighth Division of the Pennsylvania National Guard. The treatment that you received depended largely upon the commandant and the staff in the hospitals. Some of the German doctors were, so far as I was concerned, perfect gentlemen and fine men in all respects, and others were simply brutes.

Senator SPENCER. Brutes to all?

Lieut. GRAHAM. Brutes to all, including their own men. As compared with our treatment of prisoners of war it was different. I know upon my return to France I found a regiment of prisoners, of enlisted men with rubber boots, rubber capes, rubber rain hats and overcoats, overcoats, and everything, and I had worn a towel tacked over the end of a board for a shoe from the 15th of July until the week of the armistice, when I received a pair of shoes from the Red Cross.

That is the kind of treatment these officers went through.

Here was a first lieutenant who is in the hospital yet. He is getting now his insurance, $57.50 a month. When he is discharged from the hospital, if he is declared totally disabled, he will receive $100 a month. He is allowed to retire under this bill. He will receive $1,500 a year instead of $1,200. That is the difference; but it amounts to quite a good deal to a man in those circumstances.

He says, speaking further with reference to his experience:

The Regular Army officer who is retired is permitted to purchase supplies from the commissary for his living necessities at actual cost. The discharged emergency officer can not.

That is another privilege that these officers would have, and it seems to me they deserve it.

In addition to that, if I have to go to the hospital, which I do, for three more operations, I have to go to a Public Health hospital. The Regular Army officer is permitted to go to the Army hospital and also his family are entitled to that treatment. I am not entitled to go into an officers' ward. If I wish a private room in the Public Health hospital I have to pay for it myself. If my disability is 50 per cent and I am discharged and if I have to go back to a Public Health hospital I receive only $80, which is a "temporary total" rating during the time I am in the hospital.

Senator FREELINGHUYSEN. If this bill were passed, would you be entitled to a Regular Army hospital?

Lieut. GRAHAM. I would.

Senator FREELINGHUYSEN. And you could go into an officers' ward?

Lieut. GRAHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator FLETCHER. The Regular retired Army officer goes to the Army hospital.

Lieut. GRAHAM. Yes, sir; and his family is also entitled to treatment in that hospital. If his wife is sick, or gives birth to a child, she can go to the Regular Army hospital, for which he pays a dollar a day, I think.

Those are somewhat additional privileges to the total amount of pay which the retired officer receives; but take a case like this, Mr. President. Here is the statement of Capt. Robert Bunge:

In regard to the question of discrimination against emergency officers, I might cite my own case.

In the last two months before I was wounded in France I commanded a battalion. The very day I was wounded I received notice of my promotion to major to take command on the field. I had been removed wounded from the field, and when I tried to pass my physical examination for promotion, of course, I failed.

That is, he could not go up to major when the time came to pass his examination because he was wounded.

I have spent 11 or 12 years fooling around with military service, mostly in the National Guard, and I am going out just the way I went in. I am proud to have had the privilege of serving, but I do feel this, that it is justice we are asking for; to be retired; to be handled in the same way that every other class is handled. I feel that we have lost, all of us, a great deal in life. I do not like to be personal in my remarks, but I practice mechanical and structural engineering in civil life, and I am now under the orders of the Army doctors to do no studying and no work of any kind, due to the fact that I have a fracture of the skull and a fracture of the spine, and I am in a steel cage that I will stay in all my life.

I was shot through the shoulder and shot through the stomach, and I can not go back to the practice of engineering for the simple reason that it is a mental strain in that profession, and I can not go out and do the construction part of the work because that means climbing around over buildings and structures, and my physical strength will not permit it. I am told that I must avoid all excitement of any kind because I am liable to receive a stroke and probably would never come out of it. I am in the position of just a sort of useless and worthless part of society, as regards my former profession. I am 38 years of age, I am forbidden study, and what am I going to do? I have a family and I have a home to keep up.

There is a case somewhat typical of these retired emergency officers—a man who was a civil engineer and structural engineer, a strong, robust, healthy man, a captain, promoted to major temporarily on the field in action, wounded, shot through the shoulder and shot through the stomach. He goes about now in a steel brace or frame, and he is in a hospital getting $57.50 a month, 38 years old, with a family on his hands. If he is pronounced totally disabled when he is discharged, he will receive $100 a month and that ends it. If he should be allowed to retire, he would get $1,800 a year instead of $1,200. Unquestionably he will be declared totally disabled. He has nothing of that kind yet. When he comes out, he will be classed as totally disabled and entitled to the maximum compensation of $100 a month. That will mean $1,200 a year upon which he must support this family that he has and feed himself. Under this bill he would receive $1,800 a year, as I say, instead of $1,200. Is he not entitled to it?

This man had to do with the National Guard for 11 or 12 years before the war came on, and when the time came when he was called to serve his country he went boldly to the front and was wounded in battle on the field, just as he has stated here. Now he is an absolute wreck, wounded, disabled permanently and forever in line of battle. Why should he not be permitted to retire just like a captain of the Regular Army? He was performing the same service in the same way and received these injuries, disabling him for life. He is simply asking that he be put upon the same basis that any other officer, whether in the Navy or the Marine Corps or in the Army, would be entitled to under those circumstances.

There are numerous other cases. He said, very forcefully:

I think there is a little moral side of this thing that perhaps has slipped the minds of most Members who are here to-day. The emergency officer, whether a Reserve officer, National Guard, or from the training camp, received his disability because he was sent into a position where he received it by the orders of a man who was entitled to the privileges of retirement should he become injured.

The man who ordered him in would be entitled to these privileges.

Can that man, no matter whether a colonel, a major, or what rank in the Regular Army, satisfy himself in his own mind that he was doing the right thing in sending men out there who did not have the same privileges that he had if he should become wounded? I can not believe that the men in the Regular Army had any other idea than that we were to be taken care of in the same way that they were. I think there is that moral side of this thing. We have received our wounds because we were sent into a position to get them by men who had the privilege of retirement, while we did not have. I think that is something that probably should have a little weight.

There has been a great deal of talk here this morning about the Army officer making it his life calling. Well, we made it our life calling. There was nobody who could stipulate whether our life was to be one day, two days, or three weeks when we were over on the other side. Therefore I contend that it was our life calling while we were over there, because we were ready to give our lives if we had to.

This law applies only to officers who were disabled in line of duty, and, as he very properly said, it was a life calling to them.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They must be disabled to the extent of at least 30 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is true. Mr. Patrick F. Shea, second lieutenant, testified as follows:

Mr. SHEA. I went to France with the Twenty-sixth Division. I was sent back from the lines to the school and got my commission and was assigned to the Eighty-ninth Division. I was wounded in the Meuse-Argonne offensive on the 21st of October, 1918. Since then I have had 18 operations and 7 blood transfusions, had my leg taken off, and have developed a kidney condition, and they are not through yet. I still have chronic osteomyelitis of the hip.

Senator FLETCHER. Where were you wounded?

Mr. SHEA. I got a bullet hole in the hip joint.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your occupation before the war?

Mr. SHEA. I was a policeman.

The CHAIRMAN. What were you getting then?

Mr. SHEA. Thirty dollars a week.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any family?

Mr. SHEA. I lost my mother lately. I was her support until she died the 1st of November.

Senator FLETCHER. Where was your home?

Mr. SHEA. In Waterbury, Conn.

Senator FLETCHER. What is your age?

Mr. SHEA. Twenty-eight.

Senator FLETCHER. You get a hundred dollars a month, I suppose?

Mr. SHEA. I expect to get a hundred dollars a month on my discharge.

He is still in the hospital, poor fellow, and when he is discharged, if he is declared totally disabled, the maximum he can get will be $100 a month. Being a second lieutenant, under this bill he would get $1,275 a year, $75 more than he would get under the compensation act, with the privilege of hospital treatment in an Army hospital if he should need it. That is another case. Lieut. Alfred J. Bartram testified:

Lieut. BARTRAM. I went to the first training camp at Fort Snelling, Minn., and being a Yankee myself, I joined the Yankee Division just after the expiration of the first training camp and was sent over as a casual officer attached to the Twenty-sixth Division, overseas, in October, 1917. I was attached to that division in October and I went into the lines in February, and I was there until September 26, when I was wounded in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. The wound I received then was a shrapnel, high-explosive machine-gun bullet wound; one broke my left arm, another piece of shrapnel cut through my left foot, still another piece cut through my left hand, and a machine-gun bullet broke my left hip. Outside of that, I am all right.

The CHAIRMAN. What was your occupation before the war?

Lieut. BARTRAM. Just before I entered the service I was in college. I was at that time preparing myself for the medical profession.

Now he is at Walter Reed Hospital. He continued:

I am in Walter Reed Hospital now, and I have been all over the country. I was first at the Polytechnic Hospital in New York, from there to Fort McPherson, Ga., and from there to Fort Sheridan, Ill., and finally, when Fort Sheridan was closed, I was sent to Walter Reed.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you expect to get a hundred dollars when you are discharged?

Lieut. BARTRAM. Yes; unless my disability is reduced so that I get less.

That man is a first lieutenant. If he is discharged with a maximum disability, his compensation will be $100 a month, or $1,200 a year. Under this bill he would receive $1,500 a year retirement pay, in lieu of all other allowances. This is not in addition to compensation he is getting, insurance, or anything else. He must give up everything else and stand on his retirement status solely. He would get $1,500 a year as retirement pay under this bill. As I said, he would have the right to be admitted to an Army hospital and be treated there in case he had to have further treatment.

Lieut. John J. Redfield testified:

I am attached to the Air Service. I have two older brothers—one is a graduate of the Naval Academy and the other of West Point. I was in college when war was declared, and I went in from college. Both of my brothers, of course, were already in the Army and Navy.

Senator FLETCHER. From what State are you?

Lieut. REDFIELD. New Jersey. If either one of my brothers had been disabled, he would have been retired. It is the same family, and we were in the same war, and I was the one that was disabled. I went to the first training camp at Fort Myer, Va., and was commissioned in the Field Artillery. I was stationed there for a while and then sent overseas. I was trained in England for air service and transferred to the Air Service and went to France with the Royal Air Force. I served with them at long-distance bombing on the different Rhine cities, and on the 22d of August, on a bomb raid on Mannheim, we were attacked by 27 German planes. I was brought down and received a bullet in the left leg, shattering the shin bone. I was a prisoner in Germany until a month after the armistice, getting out on the 8th of December. I was at the prison hospital at Rastadt in the Province of Baden. I lost 50 pounds in weight there, and my leg got in very bad condition, which is still with me.

Then he spoke about trouble with his leg, and said:

I have osteomyelitis of the bone. I have been in hospitals ever since and have submitted to 16 operations.

If anything had happened to his two brothers, they would have been permitted to retire and enjoy retirement status. He is not permitted to retire. He can take his insurance, he can get his compensation, whatever it may be, but he can not have these privileges which an officer serving in the same war, one of his own brothers, would be entitled to if he had had a similar disability. I can not see the justice of discriminating against this man. It seems to me this bill is intended to and does accomplish a discontinuance of a discrimination in the retirement of officers. That is the purpose of it. So far from enacting a law that will provide for a discrimination, the law would do away with a discrimination which now exists.

He spoke about his experiences, how he was operated on four times in Germany, one time without any anesthetic at all. He said:

I do not know exactly what kind of a leg I am going to have until it is determined, but it will be safe to say that I won't get over 50 per cent.

In that case he will get $40 a month compensation, if he is declared 50 per cent disabled. Under this bill he would be allowed to retire on three-quarters of the pay of a first lieutenant.

Lieut. P. D. Hopper stated:

When I came back from the Philippines, before my enlistment expired, we had trouble with Mexico.

This man had been formerly enlisted in the Regular Army, and his term had expired. He had some twelve or more years' experience in the Regular Army. His term expired, but he reenlisted. He said:

I went to the Philippines and served over there and intended to get out of the service and go into the import and export business with my father. When I came back, before my enlistment expired, we had trouble with Mexico and the majority of the Army was moved to the Mexican border, so that I kept going rather than get out when it looked like there might be something doing. I reenlisted, and before that enlistment expired the present war came on—the European war. Then I was given a temporary commission in the Regular Army and sent to the training camp at Plattsburg. There I was assigned to duty with the Seventy-seventh New York Division and served overseas with that division. I was wounded in the Argonne on September 28, and I have since been in the hospital.

Senator SPENCER. What noncommissioned rank did you have in the Regular Army?

Lieut. HOPPER. I was first sergeant, sir.

Senator FLETCHER. And how were you wounded?

Lieut. HOPPER. I was wounded by a piece of high explosive going through my femur, knocking out about four and a half inches of the bone and necessitating a 7-inch inlay of the bone, and it also severed the sciatic nerve.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you expect to receive $100 compensation when you are discharged?

Lieut. HOPPER. Hardly, sir. I will be rated upon the possibility of my case at the time of discharge. The surgeon has not just yet been able to determine what functioning I will be able to get out of my leg at the time of discharge.

Under this bill he would be eligible to retirement at three-quarters pay. He was asked:

Senator FLETCHER. Then you went into the emergency army?

Lieut. HOPPER. Yes, sir. I am disabled to such an extent that I can not reenlist after discharge and get back and serve my remaining 14 years and be eligible for retirement as an enlisted man or as a warrant officer.

Lieut. GRAHAM. There was one point mentioned by a gentleman here bearing on the question of a man entering the Army as a "life profession," as an enlisted man. Perhaps he has served nearly his full time and has been disabled. Although he may have served as a sergeant and would have been entitled to a sergeant or warrant officer's pay upon retirement normally, he is discharged as though he were a simple private—

That would be the effect of the law as it stands now, in the case of this officer. He continued—

His wounds have disabled him to such an extent that he can not reenlist in the Army and serve out his normal time as an enlisted man. He has served as an officer perhaps during the war, but he can not reenlist and get advantage of his retirement status. Simply because he was an emergency officer during the war and was discharged for disability he is cut off from his Regular Army retirement status and it has made it impossible for him to get the advantage of it.

That is where Lieut. Graham cites the instance of Lieut. Hopper as illustrative, and that would be the situation without this legislation.

I do not feel that we could do less for these emergency officers than to grant this relief. Some of them it will not help at all; others it will help very materially. It is not playing favorites with them. It is not giving them any advantage whatever over any other class of officers in the service. It does not favor them over other officers of the Navy or the Marine Corps or the Army in any respect. It simply places them upon an equal footing with the other officers who rendered the same service, in the same Army, under the same conditions, and who are affected as they are as the result of that service. I think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. LENROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In view of the importance of this discussion I think the paucity of attendance has been very unfair to the Senator from Florida, as it would be to others. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Harrison	McNary	Spencer
Bursum	Heffin	Moses	Stanfield
Cameron	Hitchcock	Myers	Sterling
Capper	Johnson	Nelson	Sutherland
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Swanson
Edge	Kellogg	Newberry	Trammell
Ernst	Kendrick	Norris	Underwood
Fernald	Keyes	Oddie	Wadsworth
Fletcher	King	Overman	Warren
France	Ladd	Page	Watson, Ga.
Gerry	Lenroot	Poindexter	Williams
Gooding	Lodge	Sheppard	Willis
Hale	McCormick	Simmons
Harris	McKellar	Smith

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to state that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained on account of a death in his family.

Mr. MOSES. I was requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] are detained at a hearing before the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in opposing the bill I am not animated by any spirit of hostility to the emergency officers. As the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said, they have my admiration and respect, as I believe they have of all of the people of the country. My opposition to the bill is based principally on two propositions—first, the discrimination against the private soldier, and, secondly, the discrimination against officers of lower rank in favor of officers of higher rank. At the very beginning I wish to impress upon the Senate exactly what the bill does in the way of discrimination.

Repeating what I said last night, if the bill shall become a law, a colonel with a 30 per cent disability will receive compensation for life of $3,000 per year, while a private with the same disability will receive a compensation of $360 per year, the colonel receiving almost ten times as much compensation as that of the private.

A colonel, as I have said, with a 30 per cent disability, will receive a compensation of $3,000 per year, while a second lieutenant with the same disability will receive a compensation of $1,255 per year, the colonel receiving almost three times as great compensation as would the second lieutenant.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, does not the statement which has been made by the Senator from Wisconsin apply precisely and identically and in the same way to officers of the Regular Army?

Mr. LENROOT. Has that anything to do with the statement I have just made? I am drawing the distinction between what a private or a second lieutenant would receive, if the bill becomes a law, and what a colonel would receive. Does the Senator deny it?

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, well—

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator deny the statement I have made?

Mr. BURSUM. No.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well, then, I do not yield further.

Mr. BURSUM. But I also ask—

Mr. LENROOT. I do not yield further to the Senator. The Senator admits the accuracy of my statement.

Mr. BURSUM. Why does not the Senator compare the emergency officers with the officers of the Regular Army?

Mr. LENROOT. I am going to do that if the Senator will be patient. The Senator admits the statement I have made. The Senator admits that he is willing to go before the private soldier of New Mexico and say that he favors and was the author of a bill that proposes to give to a colonel $3,000 a year for what the private soldier in his own State will get only $360 a year. The Senator may take that position. I will not, and I can not see how any Senator can face the private soldier in his own State and take any such position as that.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the private is a very intelligent man. He is a good citizen, as well as a broad-minded man. He understands these questions possibly as well as, if not better than, any of us in the Senate. He has expressed his opinion in conventions assembled all over the United States. The American Legion has indorsed this legislation and asked Congress to pass it.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will have an opportunity to make his statement. I do not yield further for the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a suggestion?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield for a question.

Mr. MYERS. The statement which the Senator from Wisconsin has made I take to be undoubtedly true, but I wish to call attention to the fact that he bases his statement on a 30 per cent disability. If a colonel were 100 per cent disabled he would still only get $3,000 per year, but if the private were 100 per cent disabled he would then get $1,200 per year, would he not?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; he would.

Mr. MYERS. So the statement of the 30 per cent basis does not include all the compensation the private would get.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not; but I compare the 30 per cent disability for the private with the 30 per cent disability for the colonel. I use the same disability in both cases, and my statement is correct. Now I desire to ask the Senator from Montana whether he is willing to go to the private soldier of his State and say that he voted for legislation providing that where the private soldier, having a college education, making the same sacrifices as the colonel, will only get $360 a year for a 30 per cent disability the colonel will get $3,000 a year for the same disability?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; on a 30 per cent disability, but on a 100 per cent disability he would get $1,200 a year. I have had no remonstrance against the bill from my State from private soldiers. Open public hearings were held by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I believe no private soldier appeared to protest against the bill. Nor have I had a protest from any private soldier anywhere.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is correct. The American Legion has indorsed the proposition. The propaganda has been conducted by the officers. I undertake to say there is not one private soldier in 10,000 who voted to indorse the bill who knows what the bill is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill was not drafted at the time they indorsed it.

Mr. LENROOT. Ever since the bill has been before the Committee on Military Affairs I have taken occasion, whenever opportunity has offered, to explain the provisions of the bill to private soldiers, and after it has been explained in exactly the way that I have just now stated its terms, I have not found one private soldier to indorse it. One private soldier appeared before the committee. I could not be present at that hearing, but it is worthy of note that in the short statement made by that private soldier—and it was very short and did not attempt to go into detail—he disclosed that he knew nothing about the details of the bill. What did he say? He said:

This was brought to my attention just a few days ago by Maj. Stewart.

It is very clear how this private soldier came to appear before the Committee on Military Affairs. I am very sorry that I did not happen to be present; I am very sorry that somebody on that occasion did not explain to that private soldier who appeared before the committee just what the bill would do.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. Does not the Senator think that Maj. Stewart had just as much right to interview private soldiers about this bill as the Senator from Wisconsin has to give expression to his opinion of the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I am not complaining about Maj. Stewart; I am not criticizing him for wanting this bill passed.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator appears to wish to capitalize that fact.

Mr. LENROOT. There was nothing illegitimate in any officer trying to get a private to come before the committee; the officers want the bill passed; but when the Senator from New Mexico called attention to the fact that a private soldier came before the committee and pleaded for the passage of the bill, it is very proper to call attention to the manner in which the private soldier's attention was brought to the bill. That is all that I have done.

I am going to take this opportunity to make another observation. Mr. President and Senators, consider the report of the committee on this bill. One would suppose that the War Department, which is presumed to pass its opinion upon all measures of policy as to the Army, had never said anything concerning this bill. Read the hearings before the committee, and you can not find anything either in the report or in the hearings showing that the Secretary of War has ever expressed any opinion upon the bill; yet the distinguished Senator from New Mexico when he made the report knew that there was a report of the Secretary of War adverse to his bill. Just why that information was kept from the Senate, I do not know.

Mr. BURSUM. The fact that the Secretary of War had made a report adverse to the bill was well known by the committee. It was considered and passed upon.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but the Senators who are not members of the committee did not know it and could not ascertain it from the report which the Senator from New Mexico has made on the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Everybody knew it; the reports were published and every Senator in the Chamber might have had a copy of them.

Mr. LENROOT. Where were they published?

Mr. BURSUM. They were printed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LENROOT. I beg the Senator's pardon; they have never been printed by the Committee on Military Affairs, and for some reason they were not printed in connection with the hearing upon the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. I am sure, so far as I am concerned, that I have no desire to prevent the presentation of the report of the War Department. It is well known that the War Department is opposed to this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Why did not the Senator from New Mexico include the report of the Secretary of War in his report upon this bill, which is the custom in all such cases?

Mr. BURSUM. Why did not the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, who is opposed to this bill, and who tried to defeat the bill all through its consideration by the committee, and up to the present time, if he was interested in it, submit a minority adverse report?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, Mr. President—

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, the Senator from New Mexico is not interested, of course, in defeating his own bill, as is the Senator from Wisconsin interested in defeating it.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, of course, Mr. President, we get the facts. The Senator from New Mexico certainly is not interested in defeating his own bill; and therefore he was not interested in the Senate having the information that is usually furnished by a committee report.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. If there is such a report of the Secretary of War as that to which the Senator from Wisconsin alludes, will he not put it in the Record?

Mr. LENROOT. I am about to read that report now.

Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs did have a report upon this bill by the Secretary of War, and because I may take occasion to comment upon it as I go along, I shall take the liberty of reading it myself. It is dated June 13, is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and is signed by Secretary Weeks. It is as follows:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of S. 1565—

Being the bill now under consideration—

a bill making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred disability in line of duty, with indorsement thereon requesting that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs be furnished with the views of the War Department relative to this measure.

In reply I beg to advise you that prior to the receipt of your request for report on this bill I had occasion in my letter to you dated May 9, 1921, to invite the attention of your committee to the opinion of the War Department concerning any measures of this character, and with that end in view I forwarded copies of my letter dated May 4, 1921, to Capt. Victor Heintz.

As the enactment of this bill would have far-reaching effects of an unfavorable nature, I gave this subject most careful consideration when my attention was called to it by Capt. Heintz, and in reply to his letter I covered the subject in considerable detail, setting forth therein the views of the War Department, as well as my own concerning any legislation such as is contemplated in the bill herein referred to.

In connection with the letter to Capt. Heintz I have received a letter, a copy of which I inclose, from Mr. William H. Gilmore, a discharged soldier now undergoing treatment at Seneca Lake, which will, I believe, be of some value to your committee. For ready reference and for the use of your committee I also inclose herewith a copy of the letter to Capt. Victor Heintz, as it fully sets forth my reasons for believing that S. 1565 should not be favorably reported upon, and I earnestly recommend that no legislation be enacted such as is contemplated in S. 1565.

Before I read the report, however, Mr. President, and because there is now quite a goodly attendance of Senators in the Chamber, I wish to read the letter addressed to Secretary Weeks by a private soldier to which the Secretary refers, and which letter he submits to the committee, because it gives the view of the average private soldier concerning this legislation. I want to say that I do not agree with all of the statements contained in this letter with reference to the emergency officers, for I do think that they were high-class, patriotic men. The letter was written on May 5 last from Saranac Lake, where this private soldier evidently was undergoing treatment for tuberculosis, and is as follows:

HON. JOHN WEEKS,
Secretary of War, Washington.

SIR: Permit me to express my appreciation of your attitude in regard to the retirement of disabled emergency officers, as stated in your letter to Capt. Victor Heintz printed in the New York Times. As one of the many disabled ex-service men here at Saranac Lake undergoing treatment, I feel that you have expressed the feelings of every man who served in the ranks during the war.

Many of us who are now totally disabled were only too glad of the opportunity to serve the country in any capacity during the emergency, without wasting much time hunting for commissions; others were either physically or mentally unable to qualify for commissions. We all served in an emergency citizen army and some of us gave up positions in civil life superior to those held by the officers commanding us.

If we must have discrimination, and I believe that any such legislation is absolutely un-American and violates every principle of democracy, let us have it on the proven worth of every man disabled on the basis of his earning power before entering the service. That would be more along the lines of justice than any legislation having for its purpose the idea of perpetuating an officer caste, something that is distasteful to every man who served in the ranks.

The men who did the real fighting, the dirty work, and who suffered every conceivable form of indignity for the good of the country were the men who served in the ranks. The officers had every advantage while in the service; were looked upon by the public as very superior persons and had the power of life and death over the men under their command. If any of our disabled should have legislation passed for their benefit it is the second-class private who suffered every conceivable indignity. (I was several grades above that rank, thank God.)

The idea of retiring professional soldiers who are officers is absolutely right, as it is only just to pension men who devote their entire lives to the service of the country; but the placing of emergency officers on the same footing with permanent officers is nothing more or less than another effort to loot the Treasury.

Although the American Legion is pushing this discriminatory legislation in favor of disabled ex-officers, I feel that the rank and file who are members of the legion are absolutely opposed to the idea. After attending a few legion meetings I find that practically every resolution proposed by a good talker is adopted unanimously and without consideration by the members present.

If you want the real opinion of the disabled ex-service men in regard to this disabled officer legislation, why not make a quiet canvass of the men at the Walter Reed Hospital? I would suggest that the man making this canvass first qualify for the job by doing 100 yards in 10 flat. He will need his speed on his way out of the hospital.

I had a lot of these emergency officers working for me before entering the service; had to put up with a lot of their airs when in the ranks, but now that I am down and out I don't feel like having a lot of recently hatched college boys who happened to get commissions strutting around and starting that superior stuff all over again.

That paragraph, Mr. President, I think, is uncalled for and unjust to the emergency officers, because I do not believe that is their general attitude at all.

Since the disabled second lieutenants have been getting their $80 per month compensation, the same as a rear-rank private, they've become quite bearable and almost human. For heaven's sake, don't elevate them again! Let them all have a chance to get well enough to go out again in civil life, both officer and private, and prove which is the better man.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM H. GILMORE.

I am glad to read that letter, because it is exactly the reaction and response that I have gotten from every private soldier to whom I have explained the details of this bill. I want to suggest to Senators present that if they vote for this bill they will have something to explain to the private soldier in their States when the private soldier finds out that a commissioned officer, we will say a lawyer, who lost an arm, but is able to go back to the practice of his profession and make as large earnings as he did before the war, gets $3,000 a year from his Government, while the private soldier with both feet off, living, perhaps, next door to him, gets $1,200 per year.

This is the letter of the Secretary of War to Capt. Heintz referred to in his report. The letter is dated May 4 last:

MY DEAR CAPTAIN: I have before me your letter dated April 20, 1921, concerning the proposal to obtain retirement privileges for disabled emergency officers who served during the World War. Before proceeding with a reply thereto I desire to tell you that I am sorry I did not see you when you called and assure you that I hope to be less pressed for time at the next opportunity you may have to come to my office.

In connection with your letter, I wish to assure you that I have made a careful study of the contents thereof and the problem involved, which required a thorough investigation as to the viewpoint of the War Department pertaining to the proposed legislation to which you refer. As a result of my perusal of this subject I am convinced that the remedy to be sought in this matter does not properly pertain to a question of retirement, but it does fall under one of adequate compensation. I am not prepared to admit that the war risk insurance act does not provide adequate compensation to all disabled officers and enlisted men who come within its provisions, but I feel that if the war risk insurance act and subsequent acts amendatory thereto do not provide adequate compensation our efforts should be devoted to securing a further amendment to that act, as it is the law which was designed to meet the needs of all who served in the Army or Navy during the World War, as well as the temporary officers to whom you refer. On the other hand, the laws pertaining to retirement are separate acts necessary and essential to the War Department if it is to secure suitable types of officers for the Regular Army and induce them to continue permanently in the profession of arms by providing an inducement that it will care for them should misfortune overtake them and will assure adequate protection during their old age.

In this connection I want to indorse all that the Senator from New York has said with reference to any additional relief that is necessary; and I think additional relief is necessary. It should be given, however, through amendment of the compensation act, and I, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, am perfectly willing so to amend that act as to give to these disabled soldiers who are seeking this relief all proper relief, but at the same time give the same kind of relief to a private soldier who is situated exactly as the officer is situated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I want to finish this letter, and I can not yield now, if the Senator please.

It is the opinion of the War Department, with which I concur, that the cost of a measure such as has been proposed and is now under consideration would be far in excess of the figures that you conclude to be maximum. In this connection, it must be borne in mind that the available field from which it is possible such retirement might be drawn is about 200,000 officers alone, and if such legislation pertaining to officers is enacted it is apparent to me that the enactment of such legislation would with equity eventually necessitate the enactment of further legislation providing for a like increased compensation for all enlisted men who served during the World War, as otherwise undoubtedly there would exist unjust discrimination against such enlisted men and in favor of the emergency officer; in fact, many enlisted men apparently feel themselves entitled to retirement and retired pay as officers. In some cases the War Department has been urged to give noncommissioned officers appointments as officer and to place them on the retired list as such. The basis of such claims is, in general, that due to casualties the noncommissioned officer was thrown into the position and command of an officer, and while so serving incurred wounds or disability. Such occurrences are common in active operations; in fact, many cases have been presented in which privates have assumed command of platoons and companies. The claims of such men, or the expense incident to them, can not be overlooked if a principle is to be adopted of basing retirement and retired pay on the rank or office held in the Army. Equity in this matter would also eventually necessitate the enactment of some legislation such as is contemplated in S. 991, Sixty-seventh Congress, which has for its objects the appointment and retirement of those persons who served in the volunteer armies of the United States in the Civil War, the War with Spain, and the Philippine insurrection in the ranks held by them during such service.

In connection with this question, due consideration should be given to the unsuitability of the retirement laws for the purpose. For reasons which you can easily appreciate, the retirement law applicable to the professional soldier of the Regular Army causes his retired rank, and consequently his pay, to be proportional to his length of service. It takes no account of the degree or nature of his disability. Essentially, and in theory, the existing scheme of retired pay for officers of the Regular Army constitutes, in effect, a system of deferred payments for and in consideration of a lifetime of military service under a life contract between the officer and the Government, payable after inception of the statute-fixed period of unfitness for military duty and in the relatively small number of cases of premature disability retirement, payable in equitable specific performance by the Government of its monetary obligation in consideration of the aforesaid life contract of officer, in the performance whereof the disability occurred.

It is not believed that the retirement proposed would be a fair system of compensation for persons who were in the military service but temporarily during the war. All such persons come into the military service practically on an equality. The remuneration which they should receive for disability should be in accord with the degree of their disability and the extent to which it impairs their earning power, rather than to be based upon accidents of the service. The proposed Johnson bill would not only create an unjustifiable discrimination between officers and enlisted men who served during the war, as I have pointed out in the foregoing, but would also discriminate among the officers themselves. These officers were given varying ranks when they came into the Army, and such rank was subject to change due to accidents of promotion. It does not appear, for example, just that two officers of the same length of service and suffering from equal disability, one of whom happened to be a major and another who happened to be a first lieutenant, should receive different compensation for their disabilities.

It should be well understood in this matter that the War Department is in no way opposed to proper and adequate compensation to persons who served during the war. It is merely opposed to the manner in which it is proposed to grant such compensation, this matter placing a burden of expense upon the Army which does not belong there in addition to making unjust discriminations among the persons who came in for temporary service during the war. The War Department realizes the necessity for economy in making appropriations and it also realizes that appropriations for the pay of retired officers will always be considered a charge against the Army.

It is only fair to say that with the amendment that has been proposed by the committee, the money necessary will not be a charge against the Army. I will therefore omit the balance of the paragraph relating to that subject.

Concerning the law which provided for the retirement of officers of the Naval Reserve Force and the temporary officers of the Navy to which you refer, I see, of course, the point you make; but in this connection the number of officers retired under the provisions of that law is by comparison so small in connection with the number that would ultimately become eligible to retire under the provisions of the Johnson bill or similar bills—that the War Department, in view of this fact and the other important considerations which I have touched upon, is firmly of the conviction that legislation such as that herein discussed is not legislation which will be for the best interests of the Government should it be enacted.

Referring to a bill in the House of Representatives—

It should be remembered when comparison is made between the emergency officer and the Regular officer during this war that practically all of the junior officers of the Regular Army were commissioned in advanced grades as temporary officers during the war. In fact, some first lieutenants held the temporary grades of colonel; yet under the existing law for the Regular Army when such officer was disabled he is retired not as a colonel but as a first lieutenant.

It should also be remembered that the law relating to compensation for emergency personnel, which was enacted before the emergency officers accepted their commissions, makes no distinction between commissioned officers and enlisted men of the emergency forces as to disability compensation. The commissioned officers understood these conditions when they accepted their commissions, and as a matter of fact they were apparently glad to accept them under these conditions. Most of them, especially the junior officers, were subject to the draft, and many of them would have been drafted as enlisted men had they not volunteered and qualified as commissioned officers. It is, then, a question about which I have in my mind a great deal of doubt as to whether any distinction should be made in regard to benefits that should be given to the temporary commissioned officers from that which is given to the temporary enlisted men. Certainly it was perfectly clear in the minds of Congress when it enacted the laws that there should be no distinction.

My view of the matter is that the Government has entered into contracts with the personnel of the Regular Army as well as with the officers to whom you refer, and that these contracts vary in character, but that under them the Government has performed its full duty with respect to the personnel of both classes when it has fulfilled these contracts. I believe that the Government can afford to be generous toward any special cases concerning which it is shown that the rights accruing under such contracts have not been fulfilled, and, as I have herein indicated, the War Department will look with favor upon any reasonable and necessary modifications of the war risk insurance act as amended if the law established thereby does not provide the generous compensation I have mentioned.

Sincerely, yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS.

Secretary of War.

Mr. President, that is the attitude of the War Department; and it does not seem to me that after the very clear and conclusive statement made by the Secretary of War as to the distinction between the Regular Army officer and the emergency officer we should hear again on the floor of the Senate that there ought to be equality between the two classes with reference to disability compensation.

Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] a question. In a colloquy had last night the Senator from New Mexico undertook to state what this bill would cost. He made the statement that the total cost would be $1,600,000.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. And I asked the Senator this question:

The Senator can not refer to any official estimate of that kind?

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, yes.

Now, I should like to have the Senator from New Mexico furnish to the Senate the official estimate of which he speaks.

Mr. BURSUM. I have the figures—estimates from the Veterans' Bureau made up last summer. We had them before the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it a statement of the Veterans' Bureau—an official estimate?

Mr. BURSUM. It was taken from the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LENROOT. Taken from it? I want to know whether there is an official statement over the signature of somebody in authority.

Mr. BURSUM. If the Senator means to say over the signature of Mr. Forbes, no.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, anybody that is in authority?

Mr. BURSUM. It was taken from the Veterans' Bureau. I have a memorandum of it here. It was used during the hearings.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall be very glad indeed if we can have it. [A pause.] Mr. President, while the Senator is finding those figures I want to call attention to another feature before I discuss the question of cost.

A great deal has been said about the age of these emergency officers, they being on the average 10 years older than the enlisted men. That is true, no doubt; but it must be remembered that when a comparison is made between the emergency officer and the Regular Army officer the very fact that the emergency officer is of an average age of 36, I believe, means that he has had at least 10 years of opportunity to establish himself in civil life, where the Regular Army officer has had no such opportunity at all.

It means that the emergency officer, if his age was 36, has become established in his profession, and unless there be a total disability he will be able, presumably, to return to that profession, where a Regular Army officer when he is disabled is not fitted for any vocation in private life, which makes a very clear distinction between the two classes.

Another distinction must be borne in mind. While this bill proposes to give these emergency officers all the privileges of retirement which Regular officers have, it does not propose to place upon them the obligations which retired officers of the Regular Army bear. Under the general retirement law Regular Army officers are subject to be recalled to duty under certain circumstances, but under this bill, while getting the same pay as a retired Regular Army officer, none of these emergency officers will be subject to call to duty as a retired officer of the Regular Army is subject to such call.

Mr. BURSUM. Is it not true that when the emergency officer took his oath and proceeded to the battle field, he was obligated to either bring back victory or to come back in a coffin?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BURSUM. Was not that an obligation quite as serious as any officer of the Regular Army had?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator evidently misunderstood what I said. I did not say that the emergency officer was under no obligation to his Government while in the service. I have repeatedly said that the emergency officer is entitled to the very highest praise and to the very greatest credit. What I did say was that under the Senator's bill, while he proposes to give them the compensation of retired Regular Army officers, he does not propose to also carry with it the obligation which a retired Regular Army officer has.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Wisconsin appreciate a difference between a service retirement or compensation and a retirement on account of disability suffered in action? Service retirement, I take it, is on account of the length of service or on account of age. There is no principle involved in this bill which contemplates any such compensation to emergency officers on account of length of service or on account of age. It is purely on account of injuries, wounds suffered in action.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator know that under the retirement act applying to Regular Army officers an officer may be retired for disability, but under certain circumstances he is subject to call for some active duty which he may be able to perform?

Mr. BURSUM. If he is not able, he can not.

Mr. LENROOT. That begs the question. I said if he was able.

Mr. BURSUM. Under this bill no officer is eligible to retirement unless he has a permanent disability rated at not less than 30 per cent, much higher than is required in the case of a Regular Army officer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is 10 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator means for compensation.

Mr. BURSUM. No; for retirement.

Mr. LENROOT. It is 10 per cent for retirement.

Mr. BURSUM. No; under the bill it is 30 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. Ten per cent for retirement.

Mr. BURSUM. Not under this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator must be familiar with his own bill, certainly.

Mr. BURSUM. It is 30 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. No; 10 per cent for retirement and 30 per cent for compensation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to read the language to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Commencing with line 12, page 2, the bill provides:

That such officers of the United States Army as shall have incurred disability of less than 30 per cent and more than 10 per cent permanent disability as may have been, or may hereafter be, rated by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, shall, on application, be retired under the same conditions as now provided by law for officers of the Regular Army.

That is in the Senator's own bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I hope we will not get into any controversy with the Senator from New Mexico as to what the bill contains. I am sure the Senator from New Mexico will find, upon investigation, that that is in his bill, as stated by the Senator from New York.

Now, I want to ask the Senator whether he has found the official estimates to which he referred?

Mr. BURSUM. No; I have not.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall, then, defer any discussion of the cost to the Government if this bill should pass until the Senator has produced the estimate which he stated he had.

Mr. BURSUM. I stated I had an estimate taken from the figures of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator state what figures those were?

Mr. BURSUM. I stated to the Senate last night and to-day that the net result of those statistics was that 1,906 officers were affected by this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Did the Senator get all the figures which led him to that conclusion from the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; from the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator still insist that those figures will show the total cost of this bill?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; approximately. They do not give the figures accurately to a man.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator know we still have a great many emergency officers in hospitals, who are still upon the active list, who are not drawing compensation at all, and whose names are not in the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. BURSUM. That is true.

Mr. LENROOT. So the Senator does admit that his figures are not accurate as to the cost?

Mr. BURSUM. We can not tell to a man, that is very true.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator last night gave the number of men down to the odd figures—1,906—and he undertook to state to the Senate that the total cost of this bill would be $1,600,000 a year, and now the Senator admits that he knows there are a great many emergency officers still in hospitals on the active list. The Senator knows that every one of those will come under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BURSUM. But those estimates were based upon the disabilities which they were drawing money for. The chances are that there will be a decrease in that number, and not an increase.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator know that those upon the active list are not drawing that disability compensation now?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; I suppose that is true.

Mr. LENROOT. They are drawing the pay of their grades. So the Senator will admit now that he must revise his estimate, because the last figures I can find in the hearings show that there were 1,200 of these officers in hospitals. That was over a year ago, and I assume there are not so many now. I do not know where the Senator got his figures, but when the hearings were had, which was last summer, the officers of the American Legion estimated, instead of 1,906, somewhere around 4,000; and they stated, by the way, that they had endeavored to secure figures but were utterly unable to secure any figures from any department of the Government.

Mr. BURSUM. That was on the basis of the bill as first introduced.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand that.

Mr. BURSUM. The total number of officers who were drawing disability compensation at that time was 6,300, of all grades.

Mr. LENROOT. Which, with the 1,200 in the hospitals, made 7,500.

Mr. BURSUM. No; that included the 1,200.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. BURSUM. I may be, but I think not. It is estimated that out of the 6,300 there would be 1,906 who would fall within the 30 per cent rating.

Mr. LENROOT. I have a letter by the author of the House bill, Mr. STEPHENSON, and he stated on May 10 last that on June 30, 1920, there were 6,786 officers drawing compensation; on March 8, there were 1,261 emergency officers in Army hospitals, which makes about 7,500.

However that may be, Mr. President, if we could have an estimate from some official source, we would find that this bill, instead of costing $1,600,000 a year, as stated by the Senator from New Mexico, would cost at least twice that sum. In addition, if we are going to do this for the emergency officers in the late war, how can we decline to do the same thing for all of the Spanish War officers, and how can we decline to do the same thing for all of the Civil War officers?

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the Senator must know that it would be of no serious consequence to this country if we permitted every Civil War officer who is suffering from a disability incurred in the service to share in the benefits of this bill. There are only 91 pensions being drawn by officers of the Civil War on account of disability.

Mr. LENROOT. How many Spanish War officers?

Mr. BURSUM. We would have about 400. I can give the Senator the exact number if he desires. I have it here.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think they should be included?

Mr. BURSUM. I have no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think they should be included?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; I am perfectly willing to have them included.

Mr. LENROOT. So that the Senator would at once increase his estimate of what this bill ought to cost, on his own figures, by at least $600,000?

Mr. BURSUM. I should say that was about right.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very sorry to find any Senator speaking so lightly of millions of dollars. Of course, if the Senator belonged on the other side of the aisle it might not be so surprising, but he does not belong there.

Mr. BURSUM. Pension money is the best money in the world; the most sacred money. It does more good than any other disbursement of the Government. It helps more needy people; it permeates a greater area all over the land. There is nothing like pension money for doing good.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the Senator if he is willing, if this bill shall become a law, to favor legislation that will give private soldiers the same rate of compensation which this would give to the officers?

Mr. BURSUM. We will take that question up when we get to it.

Mr. LENROOT. It is very important in connection with this bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Would the Senator from Wisconsin be willing to repeal the law now on the statute books retiring Regular Army officers?

Mr. LENROOT. No; of course not.

Mr. BURSUM. Would the Senator from Wisconsin be willing to give the enlisted men of the Regular Army the same compensation which the officers get?

Mr. LENROOT. No; of course not.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator from Wisconsin desires to draw his lines between the officers and men in the Regular Army, but whenever it comes to the emergency officers, the men who came from civil life and who bared their breasts to the enemy on the field of battle, and made it possible for this country to be supreme in the recent great crisis, he is not willing to give them an equal chance with the men who happened to come from West Point, or who happened to belong to the Regular Army.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, let us see what the Senator wants us to do. The Senator wants to take the case of two men from his own State of New Mexico who go from the same office. One of them enters an officers' training camp. The other one says, "I do not want any special honors, I am going to enlist as a private, and I will go into the trenches." The one gets a position down here in the department in Washington throughout the war, and is promoted, we will say, to the office of colonel, possibly in the Judge Advocate General's office. The other, with the same education, receiving the same income before the war, goes through battle and is wounded in the trenches or going over the top. The one in Washington has the "flu" during the "flu" epidemic.

They each have a 30 per cent disability. They go home to New Mexico. They go back to the same office and hereafter pursue the same work. The Senator from New Mexico says, "I want the private to get $360 a year, but I want the swivel-chair officer to have $3,000, and that is what my bill does."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me to make a request? I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns this afternoon it be to meet on Monday next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am not going to pursue the matter further. With reference to the bill, I understand the embarrassment under which some Senators rest when it comes to a vote upon it. I can understand how some Senators, the measure being indorsed by the American Legion, committed themselves to it without understanding it, its effect, and its discriminations. But I want to say that no Senator can afford, in my judgment, to vote for the bill, either from the standpoint of the Treasury of the United States, from the standpoint of the private soldier, or from the standpoint of the officer of lower rank as against the officer of higher rank.

The bill is grossly discriminatory. It can not be justified. There will be only one thing that Congress can do hereafter, if the bill shall become a law, to rectify the error it has made in its enactment, and that would be to give to all private soldiers the same compensation this bill will give to officers.

Mr. President, I think there are thousands of disabled soldiers, officers and privates, who are not receiving anything like what they ought to receive to-day. Some of these officers came before the committee, disabled for life and crippled. They ought to receive more than they are getting, and I am willing to vote for legislation that will give to every man a higher compensation where he has made a greater sacrifice or has lost earning power, but I should want to treat the first and second lieutenants, the captains, and the colonels all alike. If there is a private who makes the same sacrifice as did the officer, who is disabled to the same extent as the officer, I want that private to get the same compensation that the officer receives. Then we will do justice to both officer and private alike, but the bill, it seems to me, can not be defended before the private soldiers of the United States or before the American people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this is not a bill to advance the officer before the private soldier. It has nothing in the world to do with that question. That may or may not come up later. When it does come up, if it ever shall come up, we will deal with it. This is merely a bill—

Making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

That is all. The balance of the talk of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], if one would call it a talk, has been broadspread in the wrong direction. He attempted to arouse the animosity of the Senate toward some sort of future pensioning of private soldiers that might be proposed. This is merely a bill to put upon equal footing with disabled Regular Army officers the Army officers of equal rank who are not Regular Army officers, but who were in the service as commissioned officers. That is all. The balance of the Senator's talk is a mere camouflage charge to that part of the world that is willing to listen to it.

Mr. President, there has been a long, long row going on in the United States, from Andrew Jackson's day down to now, between the officers of the Regular Army and the officers of the Volunteer Army, who have presumably done equal service to the Republic. My old friend John Williams long ago left the Jeffersonian Democracy and went into the Whig Party because he thought that Andrew Jackson and the Regular Army officers received some benefits the others did not receive; I mean, that as a Regular Army officer he had not received a benefit which the Volunteer Army officers had received. At the battle of Horseshoe Bend John Williams was in command of the Regulars and Andrew Jackson was in command of the Volunteers. The Volunteers got all the credit and the Regulars were left outside as usual.

Mr. President, the bill before the Senate right now, and we have to come back to the bill, is for the purpose of—

Making eligible for retirement—

For retirement—

under the same conditions—

Under the same conditions—

as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

Let us keep that in mind, notwithstanding the camouflage of the Senator from Wisconsin, which is a curious camouflage, a camouflage appealing to the private soldier in behalf of the Regular Army officer against the officer who did an equal duty with an equal disability outside of the Regular Army.

I have no prejudice against the Regular Army. On the contrary, I have a prejudice in its favor. From the revolutionary times down to now I have a family interest in favor of the Regular Army. But this is a bill—

Making eligible for retirement—

And please remember that it is for retirement—

under the same conditions—

And please remember it is under the same conditions—

as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

Let us suppose the case of two men who went to France. One happened to be a Regular Army officer who had been educated at the expense of the United States Government, noble and brave and true, as they nearly all have been, including Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant. Another happened to be a man who got exactly the same position in exactly the same Army, but who came out of civil life. The purpose of the pending bill is simply to put them both upon the same footing. Now, why is there any reason, or where is there any reason why a West Point graduate—and I have no prejudice against them, but on the contrary I have an immense love for them—equipped at the expense of the United States Government, should have any advantage in retirement from the Army over the man who was not graduated at the expense of the United States Government, but who graduated at his own expense and went to France and went to Flanders and fought, and, Mr. President, was disabled—now, do not forget that—was disabled.

I am the last man in the world on either side of the Chamber who would contend for a service pension to reward a man merely because he had worn the uniform. But when a man has been disabled, why should not the man who went out of civil life and served with equal credit in the Army of the United States, and who was equally disabled, receive exactly the same retirement pension as the man who was educated at the expense of the United States at West Point and who received the same disability?

I can not understand the circumlocution and the crooked route of the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin. It may be my fault in receptivity. It may be his fault in initiation. I do not know which it is. At any rate, I can not understand why, if two of my boys went out in the service of the United States and one of them had been a graduate from West Point or from Annapolis and the other had entered the service from civil life, and both had done equal duty and both had incurred equal disability, that the one should not receive exactly the same pay on retirement as the other receives.

I may be a fool; I sometimes think I am; but I can not understand that distinction. Why should a man who did not graduate from West Point or from Annapolis but who served in the Army or the Navy and suffered exactly the same wounds and incurred exactly the same hospital disabilities as the West Point or Annapolis graduate be required to come to this body and say, "Somehow, I do not understand how, I am inferior to this other fellow, and while he is to receive a retirement pension of — dollars, I ought to receive a retirement pension of — minus dollars." How can that be true? How can that be just? How can that be really patriotic?

Oh, the Senator tells me that perhaps following all this there may be some other legislation. Yes; and I see all the other legislation, too, as well as he does. I see the bonus bill staring me in the eyes, and I see a whole lot of political cowards who are going to vote for it in order to be reelected to the House of Representatives or to the Senate. That does not make any point with me.

This bill is simply designed to put upon an equal footing all the officers who went to Flanders or to France and who, while they did not die, were willing to die and were disabled; to put them upon an equal footing with equal rank, and to say that all officers of the United States Army who served in Europe, fighting for civilization and for the democracy of the world, should stand upon an equal footing in the Congress of the United States and in the legislation of the United States. Can the Senator from Wisconsin give me one single reason why a Regular Army officer ought to obtain a higher retirement pay than an emergency officer who went to France outside the Regular Army and performed equal service and incurred equal disability?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Mississippi was nodding in his chair when I discussed that very completely, and I do not care to take the time of the Senate to go over it again.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I heard the Senator's attempted or alleged discussion of the question, and I have asked him this question with a view to getting him to give a real discussion of it.

Now, I again ask, is there a Member of this body who can give a single, valid reason why a graduate of West Point in the Regular Army should receive higher retirement pay for exactly the same disability than another officer of equal rank in the Army of the United States who served in Flanders or in France? The Senator tells me that he has discussed that and he declines to discuss it any further.

Mr. President, I remember that soon after the Spanish-American War somebody stated in some newspaper in the United States that a woman went into a hospital and saw a man with one arm off and a leg off, and she said, "My dear hero, I love you so and I want to help you." She further asked, "My dear hero, what is your name?" The soldier said, "My dear child, I am not a hero; I am a Regular." [Laughter.]

If I have a prejudice in the world in the fight between the Volunteers and the Regulars, I have it on the side of the Regulars, because, even in the Revolutionary Army, we were the Continentals and not militia. Later on in the Mexican War we were Regulars, and later on in the war between the States, while we were not United States Regulars, we were at least Confederate Regulars; but I have no sort of sympathy with an argument that says that because a man is a graduate of West Point and is a Regular Army officer he should, upon retirement, receive a higher degree of pay than the man who performed equal service and incurred equal disability.

Mr. President, moreover I want to call your attention and the attention of the Senate and the attention of the country to the fact that the pending bill does not affect anybody except those who have incurred disability. Two men went to France; one went as a Regular Army officer and the other went as an emergency officer of the American Expeditionary Forces. They were each shot in the left arm or they were each shot in the right arm or they were each shot in the leg and each of them recovered, but they are now disabled. Will you tell me why the man who had the advantage of being educated at the expense of the United States Government should be retired on account of exactly the same disability at a higher rate than the man who happened not to be appointed to West Point as a cadet by a Representative or a Senator? Oh, Mr. President, what absurd nonsense that is; that mere political favoritism away back yonder in the past, making a man a cadet at West Point, is to be the reason why he should now receive a larger amount of money upon retirement than a man who happened not to enjoy the favoritism of a Representative or a Senator, when, perhaps, he applied to be appointed to West Point or when he did not apply—and most of the good people of the United States never did apply; most of them never wanted to go to West Point or to Annapolis and never asked to go there. Yet when the tocsin of war sounded they responded to the call.

Mr. President, from the early days of the Roman Empire and during the succeeding days of the monarchies of Europe down to the American Republic the most magnificent picture in the world is the picture of the English-speaking race—derided and denounced by German junkers as being degenerate, as being in old England merely degenerate and as being in the United States of America merely dollar hunters—when the time came all going to the front, 5,000,000 of volunteers from England and 4,000,000 of conscripts from the United States, a great part of whom would have been volunteers, and facing the world.

Are you going to tell me now, Mr. President, that amongst those of my sons and other people's sons who faced that music, the Regular Army officer who happened to be a graduate of West Point is to receive a higher retirement pay than the man who, without that obligation, still went to the front as a volunteer? By the way, all of the commissioned officers went as volunteers; many of the privates went as conscripts; but the commissioned officers went as volunteers. Are you going to tell me that merely because a man never happened, by the favoritism of a Representative or a Senator, to be appointed to West Point, therefore he has got to sink to a lower level than the man who without any obligation from West Point or elsewhere faced the music and lost his leg or his arm or his eye? Mr. President, I can not understand the position which the Senator from Wisconsin assumes, unless I believed—and I do not believe it; I deny that I believe it—that it is merely appealing to a future demagoguery in favor of private soldiers; and I can not believe that without losing my respect for him.

This bill does not affect any private soldier. It has nothing to do with him. When future legislation shall present itself to do justice to him, I think I shall be ready to do it, whatever the future justice may be. This bill merely implies the idea that a boy who volunteered—my son or yours—and lost his leg or his arm after good service in Flanders or France, who came back to the United States and was retired from the Army on account of his disability, shall receive exactly the same pay that a man of equal rank and equal disability in the Regular Army shall receive. Is there anything else to it? And, by the way, I ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who knows more about this sort of legislation than anybody else in this Chamber, if there is any other distinction. [Applause.]

After a sacredly private conversation between the Senator from Wyoming and me, I am willing to quit talking right now; but I now say, I now announce, I now declare, I now challenge the Senator from Wisconsin or anybody else to tell me any objection he has to this bill except an objection to a boy who went to France or to Flanders without West Point rank and without Regular Army insignia receiving the same pay, with equal disability and with equal service, that a boy receives who went with a West Point appointment.

Mr. President, I do not want to be misunderstood. I have no prejudice against the Regular Army. On the contrary, I have a very high prejudice in its favor. One of the very first things in the history of the Williams clan in the State of Mississippi was the fact that they thought Andrew Jackson got the credit of winning the Battle of Horseshoe Bend because he was a volunteer, while Col. John Williams, who commanded the only Regulars there, really won the battle. I am not talking about that. I looked into all that later on, and I thought the battle was really won by the strategy of Andrew Jackson, and not by the courage of Col. John Williams; but I merely want to cite a fact showing that I have no prejudice against the Regular Army. I love Regular Army men, from Robert E. Lee down to J. E. B. Stuart, and all the others who illustrated to all the world how brave and how true was the education given at West Point to the man who took his place to fight for his country; but as far as I can see through this bill—and I have an intellect at least equal to that of the Senator from Wisconsin; I would not say it was greater, because that would mighty nearly amount to blasphemy in this body as at present organized—I can not see any reason in the world why a man of the Regular Army doing the same duty, incurring the same risks, suffering the same disability, should receive a higher retirement pay than should be received by his fellow standing right by his side in the charge upon the Germans or in the resistance to the Germans. I can not understand for the life of me, Mr. President, why any man pretending to represent peculiarly the common people of America should appear resisting a bill which merely puts upon an equal footing the men of equal service and of equal disability, facing our enemies in Europe in a war which would have resulted, if they had been victorious, in the destruction of civilization and of democracy.

It is so hard for me to see what the Senator from Wisconsin means that I am at a loss to argue against him; so I close up what I have to say by saying this, and this in one sentence:

I say, and I defy any man to deny, that there is no reason in law, in right, in equity, or in justice why the man who went to Europe and fought our battles without a West Point commission, who suffered equally, who had exactly the same disability and exactly the same length of service as the man with a West Point commission, should not be entitled to exactly the same pay.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, in January I offered a resolution, Senate resolution 227, to investigate the lobbying activities against the Muscle Shoals power plant on the part of the Fertilizer Trust and the Power Trust. I asked that the resolution might lie on the table. Since that time the Muscle Shoals matter has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I now request that the resolution, as modified by me, be referred to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TOMBIGBEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. LENROOT. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably House bill 10009, to authorize the State of Alabama through its highway department to construct and maintain a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Moscow Landing, in the State of Alabama, and I submit a report (No. 505) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURSUM. Will it lead to any debate?

Mr. LENROOT. No; it is just a formal bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Alabama through its highway department be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tombigbee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Moscow Landing, about 14 miles south of the city of Demopolis, in the State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WACCAMAW RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. LENROOT. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably House bill 9386, to grant the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near Fireway Ferry, county of Columbus, N. C. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Whiteville Lumber Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Waccamaw River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Fireway Ferry in the county of Columbus, State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. LENROOT. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably House bill 8818, granting the consent of Congress to the city of Pittsburgh, a municipal corporation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near its junction with the Allegheny River in the city of Pittsburgh, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and I submit a report (No. 504) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of Pittsburgh, a municipal corporation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, with approaches thereto, across the Monongahela River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near its junction with the Allegheny River, in the city of Pittsburgh, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BLANCHE WINTERS.

Mr. STANFIELD. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote whereby Senate bill 2024, for the relief of Blanche Winters, passed the Senate, and that the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to request the House of Representatives to return the bill to the Senate. It is a claim bill that was amended on the floor here hurriedly the other day, and those interested in it would like to have it further considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon requests that the Secretary of the Senate be requested to secure the return of the bill from the House of Representatives. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, adjourned until Monday, February 20, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 17, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Glory be to Thee O Lord most High! Vouchsafe to keep us this day without sin. Open up the wells of human consciousness and may there come help divine. O Light of Life, shed upon our homes and our loved ones away the blessings of good health and comfort, and give the fullest cup of earthly cheer. If any must walk the shores of life in sorrow, or thread the shadows all alone, or endure the aches which can not be revealed, give them the unfailing secrets of a happy life. In our conduct and in our duties manifest Thy wisdom and give direction to all problems of legislation. Extend the blessings of good will and the spirit of cooperation throughout our broad land, and more and more teach men everywhere that the paths of patient labor lead to the paths of peace and prosperity, and that it is righteousness that exalteth a nation. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to recommit the appropriation bill, which motion the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CARTER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendments: On page 13 strike out lines 8, 9, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, and 25, said lines providing appropriations for the surveyors general in the States of Colorado, Oregon, Washington, and Wyoming.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina) there were 13 ayes and 43 noes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 218, answered "present" 2, not voting 108, as follows:

BONUS LEGISLATION.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, it was not my purpose during the preliminary consideration of the bonus bill to mention the subject in the House of Representatives, but a matter has occurred this morning which I think the House is entitled to know about, and against which I for one want to protest. It is all right, so far as I am concerned, and I think so far as the country is concerned, for the Republican membership of the Committee on Ways and Means to have their executive sessions without the Democrats being present. That has been done and will be done as long as we are organized as parties in this country, but what I want to call the attention of the House to and protest against is the Republicans having an executive session and calling witnesses before them in order to determine upon legislation pending before the Committee on Ways and Means. I say frankly that that ought not to exist, and that the House ought to take some action to prevent it, if need be. The Republicans of the Ways and Means Committee, if I am correctly informed by gentlemen outside of the committee, and the gentlemen of the committee are here and they can tell me whether I am correct or not, held a meeting this morning at which they called before them representatives of the American Legion to advise them concerning the report of the so-called bonus bill. If that information is correct, it is an outrage on the House of Representatives. It is not fair play, because you will undertake to quote on the floor of this House, as you did touching another bill, what they said touching the measure which you may report. If I am correctly informed, you called before you the representatives of the American Legion, the legislative members of the American Legion, whose duty it is to advise Congress, and they are undertaking to advise you in secret session without giving the country or the entire membership of the House of Representatives an opportunity to know what is going on with reference to information upon which you are going to base legislation. I do not object to them being called, but the minority members have a right to be present. You have a right after you get all of your information to go into secret session. It is your business to do that, if you see proper to legislate in that manner, but you have not the right to have secret sessions and invite representatives of the American Legion or representatives of any other class before you and have them undertake to tell you the character of legislation that you shall report without having anyone else there or at least having a stenographic report of it, so that this House may have the benefit of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised at the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. The gentleman is generally moderate and reasonably accurate in his statements, but I think the gentleman has been neither moderate nor accurate this morning. The gentleman admits that it has been the practice for a very long time and will be so long as party responsibility is recognized in the House for the majority members of committees to meet to discuss matters pending before the House, proposals of legislation. It is not only usual but it is entirely logical that at those meetings they shall hear anyone they may desire to hear on matters pending before the House on legislative suggestions. Those are not official meetings of the Ways and Means Committee to which he refers.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. They are unofficial meetings of the majority members of the committee, seeking information with regard to propositions and problems before the House, and it is entirely proper, it is usual, that they shall seek such information and expression of opinion as may seem wise and proper to them to get. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman speaks about my inaccuracy. He has been here for nearly a quarter of a century. I ask the gentleman to name one single instance in that time where the partisanship of a committee has summoned witnesses before it to consider legislation in executive session.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh—

Mr. GARNER. Name it; name it. The gentleman says that I am inaccurate, and he also says that it is usual to do this very thing. Name a single instance in a quarter of a century.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not happen to remember the particular occasion, the particular hour or the particular day, but I know there have been many such occasions.

Mr. GARNER. Name a single one.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Texas knows—

Mr. GARNER. Oh, name a single one.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the idea of asking me to recall some hour of some particular day when a thing of that kind might have occurred! I know that the majority members of committees of which I have been a member, of committees of which the gentleman himself is and has been a member, have had people before them asking their opinion with regard to legislation. The Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means did that in the preparation of the Underwood tariff bill.

Mr. GARNER. Never since I have been a member of that committee have the Democrats in secret session summoned evidence to make up a bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman must have been absent.

Mr. GARNER. No; I was not absent.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's memory is very convenient.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, my memory is correct.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means when the Underwood bill was being prepared and the rates being fixed, he will recall that the Democrats, in executive session, called in a man from New York to give them information on lemons, and that they took his advice and wrote it into the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Since the gentleman has been handed that lemon, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan is just about as accurate in that statement as he was touching the prices that Field & Co., in Chicago, paid for certain articles. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I challenge the gentleman from Michigan to show by a single member that—

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GARNER. Oh, wait a moment. There never has been a man before a secret session of the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means since I have been a member of that committee, and I was a member of the committee when it made up the Underwood bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the gentleman refers to as secret sessions, but it is a well-known fact, and I think the gentleman will not deny it, that in their conferences on the tariff and other bills the Democratic Members had experts or so-called experts from the Treasury Department and others before them, giving them their opinion and testifying with regard to matters before the committee.

That was done repeatedly, and it is entirely proper that it should be done. The majority is responsible, and under its responsibility the majorities on the Ways and Means Committee on both sides of the House have made a practice of having certain matters first considered by the majority members of committees, and they have heard anyone they thought could give them useful information in regard to the matters before them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to gentlemen of the House that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], at the time we had hearings upon the bonus bill, freely and fully expressed himself in opposition to a bonus bill. The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee have not thought it wise to call into their confidence men to help to prepare that bill whom we knew were unalterably opposed to a bonus bill. [Applause.] We judged so from their expression. And the Ways and Means Committee and other committees of this House have always had Treasury experts and other officials before the committee when the majority members of the committee were considering the making of rates in a revenue bill. The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee are doing that same thing now. We had before us this morning a man connected with the American Legion and asked him for expert information, which he gave. And I will say to the gentleman from Texas the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee are at work every minute preparing a bonus bill, and we will present that measure to a conference of Republican Members of this House within the next 10 days, in my opinion [applause], and the Republican Members of this House will pass a bonus bill. That is what we will do, but will give gentlemen on the Democratic side of this House a chance to vote for or against that bill. [Applause.] We are using every honorable effort to prepare that bill so that when it is presented to the House the Republicans of this House will agree with the committee; if not, we want the Republican Members to direct Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee how to prepare that bill and how to bring it in here for final action. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

PRINTING OF THE REPORT OF NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture I ask unanimous consent that the report of committees and resolutions and the report of the National Agricultural Conference, held January 23 to 27, be printed as a public document.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not hear the last few words.

Mr. HAUGEN. That the report of the National Agricultural Conference be printed as a public document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the report of the National Agricultural Conference be printed as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how many of these will be available? It is quite a voluminous volume.

Mr. HAUGEN. If printed as a document, it will make 280 pages, 1,370 copies will be available, and will cost $954.87.

Mr. WALSH. One thousand three hundred copies will not give the men representing agricultural districts very many. Why does not the gentleman offer a resolution and let it go to the Committee on Printing in the ordinary course?

Mr. HAUGEN. We are pursuing the ordinary course, and if this request is granted I intend to request that the additional copies be printed. The limit of cost on additional copies, I understand, is fixed at $500, will cost $92.24 a thousand.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Reserving the right to object, I could not hear the answer of the gentleman from Iowa. How many of these reports are going to be printed?

Mr. HAUGEN. Under the rule we will have 1,370 copies, and if the request is agreed to I will ask unanimous consent that additional copies be printed, costing $92.24 a thousand.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman will ask to have them distributed through the folding room?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for the time being, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TO-MORROW.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming about the program for to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we hope to take up for consideration to-day bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to. My thought is if we make good progress to-day, if the majority of the gentlemen seem to desire it, we might stand in recess to-morrow and give gentlemen an opportunity to catch up with committee work and their correspondence. I think it is highly important that we shall give careful consideration to the Private Calendar. It has not been considered for quite a long time. If we make very good progress on the Private Calendar, I am in hopes we may stand in recess for to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, the Private Calendar could only come up to-morrow by unanimous consent, so I do not see why to-morrow's program should be dependent upon the progress made to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. Possibly not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So far as I know there is no disposition to obstruct consideration of bills on the Private Calendar to-day. There is a very general desire, I think, that there shall not be a session of the House to-morrow, and I had hoped the gentleman could see his way clear to ask unanimous consent now.

Mr. MONDELL. We are always anxious to know the view of the minority leader, and the view he has just expressed will very largely influence me with reference to to-morrow's program, and I hope we may see our way clear to stand in recess to-morrow. I do not particularly care to submit that request now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, so far as that is concerned, it is not the minority request, let me say to the gentleman. If the gentleman has important business that he wants to pursue to-morrow, the minority will throw nothing in the way, but there is a feeling among Members generally, on the gentleman's side as well as on this, that it might be very desirable to have a recess to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow, I will submit a unanimous-consent request, Mr. Speaker, that we consider to-day in the House, as in Committee of the Whole, bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, and that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that to-day bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. Reserving the right to object—I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida objects.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to take up for consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SPROUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that indefinite leave of absence be granted my colleague, Mr. CHINDBLOM, who is at home on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. CHINDBLOM, be given indefinite leave of absence on account of illness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the request?

The SPEAKER. That when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. I object for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects for the present.

Mr. MANN. That will not pass your Florida bill. [Laughter.]

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

LUKE RATIGAN.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2614) for the relief of Luke Ratigan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill is of more than local concern, and I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DR. O. H. TITTMANN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6245) for the relief of Dr. O. H. Tittmann, former superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LLOYD E. GANDY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2861) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to Lloyd E. Gandy, of Spokane, Wash., his heirs and assigns, the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation, at Spokane, Wash., on such terms as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have objected to this measure heretofore when it was up previously, and unless there is some other information beyond what is contained in the report, I feel that I must insist upon my objection. If the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER] has additional arguments in support of the matter or any further information, I will be glad to hear him.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Speaker, the history of this measure very briefly is this: It has been before the Congress for a number of years. It has been referred to several Secretaries of War. It has been approved by all of them. It has twice passed the Senate. It was passed there very recently in the exact form in which it appears in the House bill.

The purpose of the legislation is to permit the development of a valuable water-power site on the Spokane River. The interests of the Government are amply safeguarded. The Secretary of War has plenary power to enforce compliance with any conditions that he may see fit to impose.

It is not a private enterprise in the sense of its being altogether free of public interest. The public is vitally concerned in the development of these water powers, and it will enable this gentleman to develop a water power which will come in competition with a large company that now enjoys a monopoly in Spokane and that vicinity. I am persuaded that every possible and conceivable interest of the Government is protected by the bill. If it were not so, I certainly would not be advocating its passage.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, I appreciate the fact that the gentleman from Washington would not be urging a matter which he felt was detrimental to the interests of the Government. But it is rather a new departure in permitting a Government reservation, set aside for military purposes, to be overflowed, and structures to be erected there upon it or adjacent to it by a private enterprise.

Mr. WEBSTER. If the gentleman will permit me, it is hardly fair to characterize this as a private enterprise. It is an enterprise to develop a valuable water-power site and devote it to a beneficial use by generating electrical energy for the benefit of the public. The land involved here is a precipitous bank of the Spokane River, upon which there is a growth of a small amount of timber valuable only for firewood.

The land involved, which will be utilized if this bill passes, is a steep bank on the Spokane River, so precipitous as to make it impossible to reclaim the few trees that are now growing on it for any other purpose except for firewood. The bill requires the grantees to convey to the Government suitable land of the Government's own selection to be added to the reservation to compensate for the portion that is flooded, and the Secretary of War has the privilege of selecting the land and to impose upon these men any conditions which he thinks are requisite to protect the interests of the Government, and these men stand ready to convey to the Government any amount of land which the Government may say is fair and right to compensate the Government for the privilege of overflowing this river bank.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's interest in the matter, and realize that to the extent which he has suggested it is not a private enterprise; but I do not believe that we should establish the precedent in this particular instance, and highly as I regard the gentleman—

Mr. WEBSTER. I understand—

Mr. WALSH. And his interest in the matter—

Mr. WEBSTER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment? There has already been invested in developing this water-power site a considerable amount of money, involving perhaps $250,000, and the whole enterprise is now stopped because of the inability to get this right to flood the banks of this river. It does seem to me that the development of a water-power site should not be held up under these conditions. This is not a case where we are taking from the Government some valuable land on a military reservation. This involves the granting of an easement to flood some land on a precipitous river bank, and the necessity for doing this is obvious. It is absolutely essential that this privilege be granted. You are retarding and holding up the development of this enterprise altogether, because we all know that the construction of the dam proposed will flood this property, and unless the Government grants this concession it makes it absolutely impossible to devote to a beneficial use a valuable water-power site almost within the city limits of a city of more than 100,000 population.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If this were private property they would condemn it and go ahead with their enterprise?

Mr. WEBSTER. Undoubtedly. If—

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. But being Government property and happening to be within the area affected by the improvement, they can go no further unless the Government is willing to allow them to make the slight damage that will be made.

Mr. WEBSTER. That is the situation, and I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I do not in any way consider his objection as personal. I have no doubt that he is guided by what he considers to be his duty, but I am convinced that if the gentleman knew this situation, knew it in its details as I know it, being right on my doorstep as it is, he would not object to it. I am certain that every interest of the Government has been protected by the provisions of the bill. I have recognized throughout my service here that my first duty is to the Government, and I do not believe any Member of this Congress will attribute to me an effort to "put over" anything in this body. I am interested in this bill because it is essential to the development of a great water-power site near my home city in which some of my people have invested large sums of money in order to enable them to go into the making of electrical energy to compete with what is now a monopoly in that city. If this were land in private ownership, it would be subject to condemnation for a public use. Obviously that can not be done when the title is in the Government. These men stand ready now to do anything that the Secretary of War may say is reasonable and proper to be done, to compensate for the privilege of flooding this river bank. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. WALSH. I trust the gentleman did not find in anything that I have stated any reason to suppose for a moment that I felt that he was trying to put over anything in the way of legislation.

Mr. WEBSTER. No; I did not.

Mr. WALSH. I know that the gentleman would not endeavor to do anything of that sort. Is it a fact that there is no place in this immediate vicinity where this development can be undertaken under the general water power act?

Mr. WEBSTER. That is precisely the situation, for the reason that others have acquired a monopoly of these water-power sites and are now in the enjoyment of a practical monopoly in supplying electrical energy to that community, and this will tend to break it up. I hope the gentleman will not object. This bill is really meritorious. It has had a tremendously rough voyage. On two or three occasions it has been submitted to the War Department, both under the former administration and the present administration. Every Secretary who has had his attention directed to it has approved it. It has been reported unanimously three times by the House Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman to say that the Senate has passed an identical bill.

Mr. WEBSTER. It has.

Mr. MANN. Then, why are we fooling with the House bill?

Mr. WEBSTER. I was going to try to get unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill, which is precisely the same, but I have got to get the right to consider my bill first, I assume.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman could make both requests at the same time, but I have no objection to having two requests made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill, which is identical with the House bill, to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of that bill, and substitute it for the House bill now on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. The question is, Where is the bill? The gentleman first asks unanimous consent to take it from the Speaker's table and then to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from further consideration of it. It is not before the Committee on Military Affairs if it is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it is in the Committee on Military Affairs although the bill physically is here. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill S. 29, and that it may be considered in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to grant an overflow right and easement to Lloyd E. Gandy, of Spokane, Wash., as grantee, his heirs and assigns, to raise the waters of the Spokane River along the east shore line of the Fort George Wright Military Reservation at Spokane, Wash., to such an extent, in such manner, and on such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of War may require, in his discretion, as a condition precedent to the overflow of the said lands, either that the said Lloyd E. Gandy, the grantee under the act, shall fill the overflowed lands to such an extent as may be necessary to permanently establish the target range above high-water level in its present location on the reservation, or that he shall convey to the United States in exchange for the said overflow right and easement other lands for a target range for the reservation of such area and extent and in such location as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be satisfactory for the said purpose, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to such lands as may be conveyed: Provided further, That the grantee, the said Lloyd E. Gandy, shall construct to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, or such officer or officers as he may designate, either on the lands filled in on the reservation, or on the lands conveyed to the United States in exchange for the overflow right and easement granted by this act, as the case may be, such target butts, pits, buildings, and other necessary accessories as may be required to replace the existing Government range on the reservation: And provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to condemn, at the expense of the grantee herein, and so far as may be found expedient, any land advantageous or desirable for target-range purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 2861 be laid on the table.

The request was agreed to.

GEORGE VAN DERBURGH BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3057) for the relief of George Van Derburgh Brown.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of some member of the committee upon what is predicated the statement in the bill that this accident was the result of the gross negligence on the part of the driver?

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the gentleman would read the report he would see that the driver went on a different street from that which he was directed to go on and that he did not have a light only on one side of the truck, a small kerosene lamp, and that he turned the corner without blowing his horn.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I have read the report in full. I read it some months ago, and my impression is that I came to the conclusion that the driver was not grossly negligent. Emphasis is laid on the statement in the report that the truck had kerosene lamps. It is known by any person acquainted in the slightest degree with the motor industry that motor trucks do not have electric lights; they have kerosene lamps.

Mr. BULWINKLE. This was a side light, and the other had no oil in it and, of course, was not lighted.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire of some gentleman present whether there is a sidewalk on Garden Street leading across Mason Street, where the accident occurred?

Mr. LUCE. My recollection is that there are sidewalks on both sides.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any pathway on the street proper distinguishing the place where pedestrians are to walk?

Mr. LUCE. I do not remember any such.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report says that the locality where the woman was killed as a result of this motor-driven post-office vehicle was poorly lighted. There is nothing in the report so far as I have been able to find showing that this driver of the motor truck was grossly negligent.

There is nothing to show that the person killed or her husband was exercising ordinary care and that the accident might not be due to some negligence on their part—getting confused by seeing an approaching truck. The speed that the truck was going was not so tremendously out of the ordinary.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, the questions which the gentleman raises have been threshed out in two of our Massachusetts courts. In the lower court the chauffeur was found guilty and upon appeal to the superior court that court came to the same conclusion and the penalty was imposed.

Mr. STAFFORD. What penalty was imposed?

Mr. LUCE. A fine.

Mr. STAFFORD. Merely a fine; if he had been grossly negligent he should have been convicted of manslaughter, but there was only a minor fine.

Mr. LUCE. I agree with the gentleman. I am one of those who believe that while we are coming slowing to the point of adequately punishing reckless automobile drivers and while I am almost tempted to criticize our courts in this particular I recognize the fact that apparently as yet public opinion does not justify the imposition of punishment proportionate to the misery wrought by the careless and indifferent drivers. So I am obliged to take the situation as I find it and recognize that there may be gross negligence and yet not a penalty such as I personally believe ought to be imposed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me to call the attention of the House to this testimony of the driver who noticed the two pedestrians approaching the crossing and stated that he figured that if he sounded the horn it would naturally cause them to walk faster, leaving him ample room to pass behind, but in some manner they became confused, did not go forward, stopped, and the next thing he knew the left front wheel of the truck passed over the woman's body. Now, this driver apparently was exercising ordinary care. Where is there anything in the report to show that the pedestrians, one of whom was unfortunately killed, were exercising reasonable care?

Mr. LUCE. The testimony before the court proved that conclusively. The gentleman has given the driver's statement and naturally he made it to his own advantage as far as he could make it.

It is disproved by the testimony of all of the others who had anything to do with the affair, or who were in the neighborhood, and the court evidently believed that the contention of the defendant was untrue.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the testimony, as shown by the report, which shows that the pedestrians were using reasonable care?

Mr. LUCE. While I am not speaking for the committee, I presume they did not think it wise to embody in a report all of the testimony in the case.

Mr. STAFFORD. This report is rather extensive, consisting of 12 pages of finely printed matter.

Mr. LUCE. Of course, it is not my function to explain the gross negligence of the defendant in the matter, but there has just been handed to me the testimony which I have previously examined, and if the gentleman thinks it worth while to go into the matter and try the case over again—

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I am not seeking to try the case again. I am seeking information which I assumed the gentleman would have, as to whether these pedestrians were using ordinary care, not basing my conclusion upon the finding of the trial courts, which merely fined this man $200 for killing a woman. There is nothing in the report to show that these persons were using ordinary care in crossing this poorly lighted street in Cambridge.

Mr. BULWINKLE. On the other hand, there is no evidence to show that the pedestrians did not use ordinary care. They were on the sidewalk, where they had a right to be; they went across the street, where they had a right to go; there was the automobile truck with no light upon it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there was a kerosene light.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It was a small kerosene light, and it was on the left side of the car, the side opposite from which they were.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the truck was not going noiselessly.

Mr. BULWINKLE. They heard the truck. It turned the corner without blowing the horn. That was the evidence in the case. The woman was struck down and killed. If it had been as the gentleman contends, does he think that the court in Massachusetts would have convicted this man?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, while the court convicted him, he was fined only $200. Think of it, $200 for killing a woman! The action of that superior court in the classical town of Cambridge does injustice to the gentleman in compelling him to say that it was a conviction.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What is the rule as to the burden of proof on contributory negligence in Massachusetts? Is it with the plaintiff?

Mr. LONDON. In a case like this it is up to the defendant to prove that the plaintiff was guilty of gross negligence.

Mr. LUCE. Oh, it is the other way around.

Mr. LONDON. The plaintiff, who was dead, could not prove that she was free from negligence. It is the estate that is suing here, is it not?

Mr. LUCE. No; the husband and wife were struck. The wife was killed, and the husband is petitioning by reason of the death of his wife.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The burden of proof on contributory negligence is on the defendant in Indiana. I do not know how it is in the gentleman's State.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I want now to read the testimony from the trial. Mr. Brown was asked what the conditions were that evening, and he answered that it was absolutely dark at that corner.

Q. Did you hear anything before it struck you?—A. Absolutely nothing.

The person who was nearest to the scene of the accident at the time was asked the same question, and as to whether the horn was blown. He neither heard the horn nor did he see the truck. There is no shadow or indication in the testimony, I assure my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], that the chauffeur was not guilty of the grossest negligence. I have examined the testimony very carefully in order to find if there were an iota of defense for the chauffeur, and none whatever appeared in the testimony as of record.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat in doubt as to whether the claimant and his wife were using the care that reasonable persons should use, but I am certainly positive that there was not any gross negligence upon the part of the driver.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I believe that the gentleman should not measure this case by the test of gross negligence. It is an ordinary case, and it is our common experience with drivers of mail trucks that they are rather careless.

Mr. STAFFORD. I intend to withdraw my objection, but I intend to move to strike out the word "gross" if somebody else does not, because I do not think that the record shows that there was gross negligence on the part of the driver.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to go out.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report does not show that he was guilty in that particular.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George Van Derburgh Brown, of Brookline, Mass., whose wife was killed and he was severely injured by being struck by a mail truck in use in the Boston postal district and operated by the Post Office Department, as a result of gross negligence on the part of the driver, on the night of Sunday, January 2, 1921, the sum of $12,000 from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 10, strike out the figures "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$5,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "gross" in line 8.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Line 8, strike out the word "gross."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking if in the sixth line the use of the words "and he was severely injured" should not be changed. Should it not read in this way, "who was severely injured and whose wife was killed"?

If the gentleman were not from Massachusetts, I would not make that suggestion, but since Massachusetts has taken charge of the grammar of the Post Office Department, I do not want anything like this to go through.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman being from Massachusetts hesitates to oppose any such suggestion.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Then I move to strike out in line 6 "and he was severely injured" and to insert after the word "Massachusetts," in line 5, the words "who was severely injured and."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Massachusetts," insert the words "who was severely injured and," and in line 6 strike out the words "and he was severely injured."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LUCE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STEVENS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 52) for the relief of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the trustees of the Stevens Institute of Technology, of Hoboken, N. J., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $45,750, being the sum paid to the United States January 28, 1879, as a collateral inheritance tax upon the bequest which provided for the establishment and endowment of said institute.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LEHLBACH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "CLEARPOOL."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6628) for the relief of the owners of the British steamship Clearpool.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Pool Shipping Co. (Ltd.), owner of the British steamship Clearpool, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said steamship and the United States Coast Guard cutter Apache in Chesapeake Bay on the 13th day of November, 1914, may be sued for by the said Pool Shipping Co. (Ltd.) in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the Pool Shipping Co. (Ltd.) or against the Pool Shipping Co. (Ltd.) in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EDWARD J. SCHAEFER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1723) authorizing the payment of compensation to Edward J. Schaefer for the death of Ruth Stone Schaefer through an unlawful shot fired by a soldier in the service of the United States at Camp Alexander, Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Let the bill be reported so we may know about it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to Edward J. Schaefer the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of damages for the death of his wife, Ruth Stone Schaefer, who was accidentally shot by a soldier in the service of the United States at Camp Alexander, Va., on July 7, 1919.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "$60,000 as compensation" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000 in full settlement of damages." Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "unlawfully" and insert the word "accidentally."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the principle of this legislation is a very important one and I think it should be carefully considered at this time. I am especially interested in these matters because we have several claims of a similar character before the Committee on War Claims at the present time, and I think the House should be very careful in what it does, especially what it intends to do in regard to these claims, this being the first one. I would like to hear some explanation from some gentleman.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I find on the last Private Calendar day as far as any precedent is concerned we established it by passing a bill for the payment of damages by reason of a person in the Navy throwing a person overboard and drowning him.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will yield just a moment, I want some man on the Committee on Claims to give the House the information in regard to the policy of the committee in regard to claims of this character because we are going to have a great many of them before the House during the present session.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the bill cited by the gentleman from New York was not considered at all. I think the gentleman's position is well taken, that the House should establish a policy to be followed in all of these bills rather than merely take some haphazard action on a bill that goes through to reward the widow of a dead Chinaman in the sum of, I think, $100.

Mr. SNELL. I am specially interested because we have a great many of these claims to consider before the Committee on War Claims at the present time.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman the chairman of the committee is not here to-day, but my understanding of the policy is that where the claimant was injured by some act of any employee of the United States Government, some act bordering on negligence or negligence itself, through no fault of the claimant, then it has been the policy of the committee since I have been on it to allow them certain amounts dependent upon whether death ensued or they are wounded or disabled.

Mr. SNELL. What is the amount that the committee has allowed in the case of death?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Five thousand dollars, not exceeding that amount; that is the maximum.

Mr. SNELL. To allow any one killed through any Federal agency regardless of negligence or anything else in case of death?

Mr. BULWINKLE. There are two cases like this, and the case of another one of this kind. The other case is where a man was sitting in a dining room in New York City, and the sentry, evidently through carelessness, no one knows, he and two girls were at one of the posts, and his rifle went off and the bullet went through the window and killed the man who was eating his supper. In that case we allowed $5,000.

Mr. SNELL. I want to get this matter before the House, and I think the House should adopt some policy so that everyone should be treated alike. I do not want it disallowed for one claimant who lost his life where others are granted relief.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it not be possible before the House commits itself to the policy to hold a conference with the chairman and the other members of the Committee on Claims?

Mr. SNELL. I am very anxious to adopt some policy of some definiteness.

Mr. STAFFORD. As far as this bill is concerned, the occupant of the automobile passed by against the objection of the sentry, and I would feel constrained, if I am correct in that position, to object to this bill, but I think it is a good policy to have the chairman of the War Claims Committee confer with the chairman of the Claims Committee and determine on a policy which the Congress should follow.

Mr. MANN. You had better get at the facts first. In this case it is apparent that the occupants of the automobile did not know that the sentry made any objection, traveling over a road where people frequently travel, with nothing to indicate either from the sentry or by notice that there was any objection to people traveling there. The sentry evidently did not desire to kill the people, but it may be possible that he did desire to cripple the automobile. At any rate, he fired a shot, contrary to the regulations, and killed the person. The person is dead. Now, I apprehend that if myself or the gentleman from Wisconsin walked into any camp of the country and received no notice that there was any objection to our going over the road, at any time before or after the armistice, and there was nothing to keep us from going over the road or the path, we would not expect that some sentry would shoot us dead; and where he does, is it not the reasonable thing for the Government to pay something?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This was 18 months after the armistice. It was not in war time at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; and during that time they had much trouble, as will be seen if my colleague will read the report, with disturbers about that place.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that under the circumstances this matter should go over, and for the time being I object, largely for the reason that the chairmen of the respective committees should get together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OLD DOMINION PIER A.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 369) for the relief of the owner of Old Dominion Pier A.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the legal owner or owners of the Old Dominion Pier A at Newport News, Va., alleged to have been injured by collision with the U. S. S. West Corum on or about June 7, 1919, be referred to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the same to judgment with the right of appeal as in other cases: Provided, That no suit shall be brought under the provisions of this act after six months from the date of the passage thereof.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, after the word "judgment," in line 7, insert "upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know just what the policy of the Committee on Claims may be. I think it has not any policy on this subject. Probably this bill was reported by some subcommittee that is not familiar with the practice of the Committee on Claims. It certainly has not been the policy of the committee to refer admiralty cases to the Court of Claims. What does the Court of Claims know about admiralty law? Not a thing. It has been customary, however, to put in the names of owners who have a right to sue.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I introduced this bill. I will say to the gentleman that when I introduced it it had been prepared by the attorney representing the owner of the pier. There is no objection to inserting the name of the owner of the pier, the Old Dominion Land Co., a corporation existing under the laws of Virginia. I asked the attorney why the matter had been referred to the Court of Claims. He said he had looked up the precedents and found admiralty cases had been referred to the Court of Claims. As a matter of fact, I am advised that it will suit the convenience of my people a great deal better if the matter should be referred to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia.

Mr. MANN. That is where it should be referred. We have not for years referred these claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps the Committee on Claims referred it to the Court of Claims because there is no dispute as to the liability of the Government for this accident.

Mr. MANN. There is no provision for referring it to any court.

Mr. STAFFORD. When this bill was last up for consideration on the Unanimous Consent Calendar I suggested that we vote an outright amount instead of putting the Court of Claims to the expense of considering it, but there was an objection to that policy by a distinguished Member of this House, and, of course, I did not press it any further.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. If the gentleman will yield further, I would like to say that I understood from the attorney that it might be more convenient for the Government to have the matter passed upon by the Court of Claims than by the United States district court. However, I do not think that he said that the question of jurisdiction for suit had been considered by the Government at all.

Mr. MANN. We have had a great many of these claims in recent months and years, and all of them have been referred to the district courts, admiralty courts, and generally to district judges along the coast who are familiar with admiralty law. It may be there is no contest about this, but it is not a good precedent to set to send it to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims is not constituted for hearing admiralty cases.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I desire to make it clear to the gentleman from Illinois that there may be a contest. So far as the Government is concerned, it may defend on the ground that the collision was an unavoidable accident. Mr. Roosevelt, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, says in his letter set out in the report that it was an unavoidable accident. My people claim that it was negligence on the part of the operators of the steamship, so that that question is to be determined by the court. I think that question will arise.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will offer an amendment to insert the name of the owner and also insert the district court of Virginia, I shall have no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. The gentleman is well skilled in parliamentary law, and if he is satisfied that it is in order for me to move an amendment whereby this matter will be referred to the United States district court I am entirely agreeable to offer it.

Mr. MANN. It is in order right now.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. The committee amendment is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLAND of Virginia: On page 1, line 6, strike out the words "be referred to the" in said line and the rest of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof:

"May be sued for against the United States by the Old Dominion Land Co., a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the State of Virginia, legal owner of said pier, in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and the costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the said Old Dominion Land Co., a corporation, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out in line 3 the words "or owners."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "or owners."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BLAND of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FRED H. GALLUP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6966) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup, major of Field Artillery in the United States Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes. I reserve it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the right to object.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, this officer entered West Point Military Academy in 1885 as a cadet, and graduated from that school and was in the service for 31 years. In 1904 he was sent back to West Point as a teacher of mathematics. In 1916, while attending the Army Service School at Fort Leavenworth, it is claimed that he overworked himself and became very nervous. While in this condition he was given a map to study and then reproduce it from memory. He did reproduce this map, or did the greater part of the work, and when he had it nearly done and being in a hurry to finish up, he copied the rest of it, copied possibly a fourth of the map. Of course, this deceit was very apparent on the face of the work, and was at once detected. Two other officers did the same thing. The next day when he was confronted with this charge he immediately acknowledged his guilt. There were two other officers charged with the same offense. One of them denied that he had practiced this deceit and demanded a court-martial. He was court-martialed and found guilty. That was Capt. Graham. Some two years ago this Congress passed a law to reinstate Capt. Graham, and he is now a major in the United States Army. This man Gallup acknowledged his guilt, and all of the officers who outranked him there have united in asking for clemency and that he be restored to the service. During the war he performed valuable services for his country, and in view of the fact that this Congress has reinstated Capt. Graham, who denied that he had done this when it was claimed that guilt was apparent upon the face of the work itself, it seems to me that both are not receiving like treatment if you deny him reinstatement. In view of the fact that we have reinstated one of these men it seems to me we ought to reinstate the other.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did the officer admit his guilt?

Mr. KEARNS. He did the next morning immediately upon being accused.

Mr. KNUTSON. And Gen. Green, who was commandant at the school at the time, recommended that he be restored?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. As also did Gen. Menoher?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. He had a splendid, unblemished record?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. We have already done the same thing for another officer who denied it?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes; and who was found guilty by court-martial.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was on account of the denial made by the man who has since been restored that this severe penalty was imposed upon these men. Otherwise it would have been a matter of slight punishment of some kind; but when it was denied by one man, all of them were dismissed from the service, and this is the only man who in the sentence of the court-martial was recommended for clemency.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand from the gentleman from Iowa that where a man is required to copy a map from memory and instead of that uses the map itself to make a copy it is a slight violation of the rules?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would not say it was a "slight" violation.

Mr. MANN. I am glad the gentleman modifies his statement.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not think he ought to be dismissed from the service.

Mr. KEARNS. I would like to add this one statement. I have no interest in the case, but I have become convinced—Mr. MANN. They have surrounded the gentleman.

Mr. KEARNS. I do not think anybody has surrounded me. I have studied the case carefully and I came to a conscientious conclusion. Now here is another thing: This man was to be graded upon this map that he made, and if he had made a perfect map from memory it would not have advanced him one point in the grade.

Mr. MANN. What has that got to do with stealing the map?

Mr. KEARNS. It has this effect on the case. He knew at the time he was doing it that he was not defrauding anyone else. And if he had made an entire failure he would not have gone below anyone else.

Mr. MANN. Suppose that is true, what was he making the map for—because he was directed to? And then after he stole the map or the knowledge of it, the gentleman says it would not have made any difference. Many a man who has been a thief has said that same thing. I do not say that this man was a thief.

Mr. KEARNS. When a man steals he takes something of value.

Mr. MANN. Not always.

Mr. KEARNS. This man did not take anything of value from anyone else. He did not take anything of value because if the map had been perfect it would not have raised him above anybody else, and if it had been an entire failure it would not have put him below anyone else.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall that one of these offenders made application when the war was on, when we were hard pressed for officers, and applied to Congress to be reinstated. I have given more than the ordinary consideration to this bill. Will the gentleman state why this man did not apply for reinstatement when we were in need of officers during the World War?

Mr. KEARNS. I think his case has been pending.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; he was engaged in civilian employment and did not make application when the country needed officers the most.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, in justice to Maj. Graham I am sure the gentleman from Ohio does not intend to reflect on the character of Maj. Graham.

Mr. KEARNS. No.

Mr. McKENZIE. This should be said in justice to Maj. Graham. When accused he asked for a trial on the charges. He took the position that he should be acquitted or dismissed, and demanded a court-martial. Our good friend Gordon, of Ohio, said that they did not have enough evidence to insult him, and on that ground I took the position that Maj. Graham should be reinstated, and I am always glad of it. This case I am not familiar with except that this man admitted that he was guilty. Maj. Graham maintained from the beginning that he was not guilty.

Mr. KEARNS. I have no censure to make of Maj. Graham. But I do think both should receive a like treatment at the hands of Congress. I think one is as deserving as the other, and we have corrected the record of one already.

Mr. MANN. If that is the case does not that prove that the reinstatement of men in the Army by the House of Representatives, which knows very little about it, ought never to be done? It is the duty of the Army to reinstate men.

Mr. KEARNS. Here is a man who admitted that he had committed this wrong, if, indeed, it is a wrong at all—

Mr. MANN. We have need to reduce the number of officers in the Army. Does my friend from Ohio think it a wise policy to put men out of the Army who are now officers in the Army, who never did anything disreputable, in order to put men back in the Army who are certainly subject to criticism?

Mr. KEARNS. No.

Mr. MANN. That will be the result of this.

Mr. KEARNS. No; we need officers—

Mr. MANN. We do not need any Army officers of the grade of major. You propose to reinstate this man, who very likely did something foolishly—and I suppose he would not be the first man that ever cheated in examinations. If every man who cheated in examinations were punished, there would be less men in high places.

Mr. KEARNS. You do not reinstate him; you give the President the right to appoint him in his discretion.

Mr. MANN. That is the same thing as reinstating him, as far as we are concerned. I do not think we ought to do that while we are intending to decrease the officers in the Army. He is out. Very likely he would make a good Army officer, but we have to put a lot out who are now in the Army, I think.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONSOLIDATION OF CERTAIN FOREST LANDS.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I submit for printing under the rule the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 77) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Clearwater, St. Joe, and Selway National Forests.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

TORAHACHI URATAKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1077) to authorize the payment of $5,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject, killed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, on November 25, 1915.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I would like to know something about the bill. Let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is authorized to be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of liability therefor to the Government of Japan, $5,000 for the benefit and consolation of the family of Torahachi Uratake, a Japanese subject killed on November 25, 1915, at Schofield Barracks, as set forth in the letter from the Acting Secretary of War dated February 19, 1916, and printed as House Document No. 785, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the House of Representatives of the United States Congress has today been engaged in the historic and laudible, or otherwise—I shall not undertake to say which—business of definitely, conclusively, irrevocably setting a financial estimate upon the value of the life of a white person, male or female—and that is irrelevant and immaterial—and in view of the fact that a Japanese can subsist on one-fourth of what it takes to sustain a white person, I feel, if this bill is passed at all, that it ought not to be passed for any sum to exceed $1,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen reserve the objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know, in the first place, why a bill of this kind is not referred to the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we ought to waste time in discussing that question. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

TATSUJI SAITO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1078) to authorize the payment of $2,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Tatsuji Saito, a Japanese subject, killed at Camp Geronimo, Mexico, May 25, 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

J. W. LA BARE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4845) for the relief of J. W. La Bare.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this bill, as to the reason why we grant a pensionable status to this soldier who has been guilty of desertion in the Civil War. Nobody seems to respond, Mr. Speaker, and I object.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight to-night to file a report on House joint resolution 268.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may file at any time before midnight to-night a report upon House joint resolution 268. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is that the immigration measure?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. The reason I am asking for the extension is that I am anxious to appear before the Committee on Appropriations this afternoon, and also anxious to get the report in within the time of adjournment of the House, if possible.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman conferred with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] in regard to this request?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not in regard to the request. However, I have the views of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] in my possession, ready to attach to the report that I shall make at the earliest possible moment this afternoon or to-night.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the gentleman conferred with the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. If the House should not be in session to-morrow, it would be necessary for the information of Members to have the report in print in case action should be taken Monday, and for fear I shall be too busy this afternoon, I make the request, in which I am sure the gentleman from California shares.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas and to the gentleman from California?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

BENJAMIN R. BUFFINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3425) for the relief of Benjamin R. Buffington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection. (After a pause.) The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Benjamin R. Buffington, late of Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and honorably discharged therefrom February 24, 1863, and later, October 27, 1863, enlisted as a private in the Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, from which the records of the War Department do not show that he has been regularly discharged, nor is he marked as a deserter, being absent from his regiment when it was mustered out of service, June 18, 1866, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States on the 18th day of June, 1866: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act, and no pay nor bounty shall become due or payable by virtue thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MURPHY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HERBERT LANGLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7415) to correct and amend the service and military record of Herbert Langley, United States Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this bill was last under consideration some information was furnished to the House as to the physical disability under which this marine was laboring at the time of his disappearance from the post at Santo Domingo. I wish to make inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri as to whether the purpose of this bill is to enable the heirs to obtain war-risk insurance?

Mr. McPHERSON. Originally that was not the purpose of the bill. The family of this man are right well-to-do people, and they feel keenly the humiliation of the unjust charge that the soldier is a deserter. He did not desert, but died in the line of duty in February, 1919. The soldier carried war-risk insurance, and that insurance may be collected whether this bill becomes a law or not. The object of this bill is to remove the charge of desertion. The bill was introduced by me in the Sixty-sixth Congress, and the circumstances and facts were shown and the Secretary of the Navy and the commandant of the Marine Corps were convinced that on the facts and circumstances concerning the disappearance of this man that he had committed suicide while insane, or that he had accidentally fallen off the sea wall and was drowned. In either case, he died in the line of duty and was not a deserter. When this bill was reached before, an objection was made to its consideration. I have taken up the matter with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and tried to find some direct cut to relieve this soldier of this stain which the family believes unjust, and I have presented the matter to the court down in Missouri, which has jurisdiction of the case on an application for letters of administration, and the court has rendered judgment that this marine died from accidental causes on February 24, 1919, while in the line of duty at Santo Domingo City. He very likely committed suicide while insane, and suicide under such circumstances is an accident within the meaning of the law. Suicide by the insane is an accident which matures an accident insurance policy, as all courts and law writers hold. A soldier who dies by his own hand while insane dies in the line of duty. He is not a deserter within the meaning of the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House if a soldier during enlistment in the World War having war-risk insurance committed suicide, whether sane or insane, the beneficiaries would, under the law, be entitled to the principal of the policy?

Mr. McPHERSON. He would be if he was insane. I doubt if he would be if he were not insane. In other words, if a soldier who was sane should commit suicide, his beneficiary could not likely collect his war risk insurance. Recovery in such case would perhaps be precluded by the act. But in this case the insurance carried by this soldier is clearly recoverable under the facts and circumstances of the death of Mr. Langley, for the proof shows and the Missouri court has adjudged that Mr. Langley died of accident. The provisions of the war risk insurance act bind the Government to pay the insurance carried in this case. The right arises out of the contract of insurance without regard to the passage of this bill. I have taken the matter up with the general counsel of the Veterans' Bureau and have filed there a certified copy of the judgment of the Missouri court.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, if the Veterans' Bureau in the administration of the war risk insurance act considered that the beneficiaries are entitled to the principal when a person commits suicide, then I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. There is no proof of suicide in this case.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the position I took the last time, that there was no proof of it. The gentleman from Missouri expressly controverted that proposition.

Mr. McPHERSON. The proof shows the man is dead either from falling off the sea wall or from suicide, probably the latter. That fact has been determined judicially by the only court that had jurisdiction, and in a proper proceeding.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If there is death, the presumption is it was accidental and not suicide.

Mr. MANN. What is the meaning of this language:

And that the charge of desertion was erroneously entered upon said service and military record, and the same shall be hereafter disregarded.

What is the meaning of the last sentence?

Mr. McPHERSON. The meaning is that this man disappeared from the island under circumstances that exclude every other theory but that of death by accidental means. In some way he fell into the sea and was drowned and his body carried out to sea so that it was never found.

Mr. MANN. I know what the facts are.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now, then, the military authorities treat the question of absence as desertion. If a man is absent so many days they mark him a deserter.

Mr. MANN. But what is the purpose of this clause? What effect will it have—and the same shall be hereafter disregarded?

Mr. McPHERSON. It will be disregarded because it is not true. Congress finds the facts—

Mr. MANN. You can not change it; it is here.

Mr. McPHERSON. They can disregard it.

Mr. MANN. How?

Mr. McPHERSON. In the administration of the law. This is the substance of every one of these bills that remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. MANN. That is evidently where the gentleman is mistaken. The substance of those bills removing charge of desertion specifically provides that in the construction of certain laws the same shall not be considered to have had a dishonorable discharge. Now, the gentleman introduces new language. I am sure I do not know what it means. I think if the gentleman is going to pass his bill for a certain purpose it ought to be fixed to do what he wants to do if it is to have what he desires to effect.

Mr. McPHERSON. I want to state further that the bill is not in the language I introduced it. But this bill as now reported by the committee was prepared by the Navy Department.

Mr. MANN. And they suggested some changes from the original bill?

Mr. McPHERSON. The committee substituted the bill prepared by the department for the bill I introduced.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not been here quite as long as I have, but he ought to know that he should never trust any department in the preparation of a bill. They do not know how to draw a bill particularly well. They make good staggers at it.

Mr. McPHERSON. I went before the Committee on Naval Affairs with my bill, and the committee substituted for the bill that I introduced a bill that the department had submitted in lieu of it.

Mr. MANN. They probably will not veto it; but if I recollect correctly, President Roosevelt vetoed bills of this kind that had been substantially prepared by the War Department in accordance with the practice that had been carried on for years. It would not be the first time that a President has vetoed a bill prepared by a department.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that in order to get unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill it be amended so that the language will make it clear that the soldier did not desert.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion upon the service and military records of Herbert Langley, late a private in the One hundred and fifteenth Company, Second Provisional Brigade, United States Marine Corps, and also late of headquarters detachment, Third Regiment, Second Provisional Brigade, United States Marine Corps, shall henceforth be treated and considered as removed, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby ordered and directed to correct and amend the said service and military record of the said Herbert Langley by entering upon the said service and military record of said Herbert Langley, in appropriate words, the fact that said Herbert Langley died on February 24, 1919, at Santo Domingo City, Dominican Republic, by accident while in the line of duty, and that the charge of desertion was erroneously entered upon said service and military record, and the same shall be hereafter disregarded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment, if the gentleman from Missouri does not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill, on lines 5 and 6, so that it shall read "and hereafter the charge of desertion shall not be considered as entered against the marine."

Mr. McPHERSON. I accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. After the word "record," strike out "and the same shall be hereafter disregarded" and insert in lieu thereof the language I have given.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: Page 2, lines 5 and 6, strike out "and the same shall be hereafter disregarded" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and hereafter the charge of desertion shall not be considered as entered against the marine."

Mr. MANN. I suppose that requires an honorable discharge or death in the service. I am not sure. Neither the original bill nor the amendment covers that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He will be presumed to have had an honorable discharge.

Mr. MANN. No; he will not. Our form of bill is that in the consideration and construction of certain laws the soldier shall be considered to have received an honorable discharge. That is necessary in order to get a pension. It is not sufficient to say that he did not desert.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment reported again?

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the whole controversy about the amendment is unnecessary. The bill provides that this soldier, against whom this charge of desertion is entered, shall hereafter be considered as having died in the line of duty at Santo Domingo City on a certain day, and that this charge of desertion against him shall be disregarded. I think the amendment is unnecessary, but I do not think it changes the provision in any respect.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, if the gentleman from Missouri is satisfied, and the bill was prepared by the Navy Department, it might be that it would raise some question when the bill was referred by the Executive to that department for a report, and I withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas withdraws his amendment. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McPHERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ALBERT HAMILTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5820) to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CAPT. D. H. TRIBOU.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3509) for the relief of Capt. D. H. Tribou, chaplain, United States Navy.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, this is a case in which Capt. Tribou was appointed March 29, 1919, as a Victory loan officer for the Naval Home at Philadelphia, Pa., by the governor of the home, with the request that he take the necessary steps to inaugurate a detailed campaign with a view to obtaining as large a subscription as possible for the loan. In the course of the prosecution of the campaign for the fund in connection with the home it became necessary for the officer to keep a considerable sum in bonds in an iron safe, which was located in his quarters at the home, and while he was temporarily absent in Washington with the Board of Award the safe was broken into and the bonds and other funds deposited therein were stolen. An investigation was held at the Naval Home in Philadelphia by order of the commandant of the fourth naval district to inquire into the theft of the Liberty bonds and cash that had been taken from the safe. It was found that this officer was in no wise liable for the theft. Yet he insisted that he be permitted to make restitution in the amount of the Victory bonds and funds deposited therein by the beneficiaries of the home and others. He made this restitution, and in furnishing the money to do so it was necessary for him to mortgage his home, and, I am told—

Mr. MANN. I had read the report previously. Why did the committee propose to strike out the word "bonds" and insert the word "notes"? There is nothing in the report about notes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I suppose that ought to be "notes" in the report.

Mr. MANN. It is not "notes" in the report. What notes does a man get in getting bonds? I never heard of any, although I have subscribed for bonds.

Mr. STEPHENS. I presume it was just simply a matter of opinion as to whether the bonds were considered as notes, or whether they were additional security.

Mr. MANN. Victory bonds and Liberty bonds are bonds. They are not notes. Now, I am curious, and I want to learn something. Why did the Committee on Naval Affairs change the word "bonds" to "notes"?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not know why they changed it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman made the report. Who would know? The gentleman introduced the bill and made the report.

Mr. STEPHENS. I presume it is simply a matter of opinion as to whether Liberty loan bonds would be called Liberty loan bonds or Liberty loan notes.

Mr. MANN. It is not a matter of opinion. Everybody who knows anything about it knows that they are not notes. They were called bonds when they were issued.

Mr. STEPHENS. I presume there had been some notes and other securities and also cash. They were not all Victory loans. Some of the securities perhaps were notes and some were cash.

Mr. MANN. That is covered by the word "funds" and would not be covered by the word "notes."

Mr. STEPHENS. We might say that he had Victory notes, Victory bonds, cash, funds, and other securities. We could incorporate all of them if we wanted to cover it all.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to object. I have a curious and inquiring mind, and it has not been satisfied yet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Capt. D. H. Tribou, chaplain, United States Navy, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise approprinted, the sum of $2,667, said sum being the amount of restitution made by the said chaplain out of his private funds on account of Victory loan bonds and other funds stolen from the safe in the said chaplain's quarters at the naval home, Philadelphia, Pa., without collusion on the part of said chaplain, which bonds and other funds had been deposited in said safe by beneficiaries of said home, and others, for safe-keeping.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "bonds" and insert the word "notes."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "bonds" and insert the word "notes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REQUEST TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman going to discuss?

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I just wanted to submit an observation to the Ways and Means Committee on their next visit to the White House.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CORNELIUS DUGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1290) for the relief of Cornelius Dugan.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LIEUT. COL. HENRY C. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5210) for the relief of Lieut. Col. Henry C. Davis.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ALVAH B. DOBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5768) to amend and correct the military record of Alvah B. Doble.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the bill certainly should be amended so that no pension should accrue to this soldier prior to the passage of this act. The bill as reported does not contain the customary phraseology limiting the pension to take effect after the passage of the act. I assume there will be no objection to that suggested amendment.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, this bill in its present form is designed to prevent any pay or bounty for service which might otherwise be due to the man. I think, as a matter of fact, no pension can accrue back of the date of the application for pension, anyway.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; but suppose this soldier made an application for a pension many years back, and now we grant him a pensionable status under this bill?

Mr. MANN. Who has charge of this bill?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, a number of these bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs have been reported by members of the subcommittee in charge of desertion cases and the correction of military records, and, as you all know, the Committee on Military Affairs are having a hearing on the Muscle Shoals proposition, and that accounts for the absence of the members of this committee. I am sure if they were present they could explain these matters. I have not had an opportunity to look into them, because they have not come under my jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague from Illinois explain to me as to whether we have ever passed a bill in recent years which provided for the granting of an honorable discharge of a date during the Civil War?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to my colleague that the form that we agreed upon when I was a member of that committee ran something like this, that in the administration of the pension laws Mr. So-and-so shall be held to have been honorably discharged on such a date, and that no back pay, bounty, or emolument shall accrue.

Mr. MANN. That is not my question. That is already covered in the bill; and then it goes ahead and says—

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the said Alvah B. Doble an honorable discharge as of that date—which is a date during the Civil War.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think that should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. MANN. I do not think we should pass bills like that.

Mr. McKENZIE. Furthermore when a soldier loses his original discharge he simply gets a certificate in lieu thereof.

Mr. MANN. He does not get a second discharge.

Mr. McKENZIE. And that direction to the Secretary of War, it seems to me, would be improper.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object to the consideration of this bill because of the fact called to the attention of the House by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OLIVER A. CAMPBELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5125) for the relief of Oliver A. Campbell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Oliver A. Campbell, who was a second lieutenant of Company E, Eightieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 9th day of January, 1863.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 10, strike out the period and insert a colon and insert the following:

Provided, That no pension pay or bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AUTHORIZING THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR TO SELL CERTAIN LANDS ON THE WIND RIVER RESERVATION, WYO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4069) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands on the Wind River Reservation, Wyo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wyoming if this is mineral land?

Mr. MONDELL. It is not.

Mr. STAFFORD. No mineral or oil of any character. What are the rights of the trading company to this land?

Mr. MONDELL. The Arapahoe subagency was established many years ago, and in those days it was common to have traders in the vicinity of Indian agencies. This was a trading camp. There was a log corral and the ordinary log building of a frontier trading establishment, also a place where travelers were entertained as they came through the country. They have kept those premises for at least 35 years. In the course of time towns were built up in the vicinity and the trading business fell away so that it did not amount to much. These people occupied 7 or 8 acres of land upon the high land above the agency where they have their buildings, a store, a corral, and a cottage or two.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are they occupying the land under a leasing system at present?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know under what plan the lands have been occupied. They were established there by the consent of the Indian office many years ago, and have been there all this time. I do not know whether they have been paying rent or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why do we not carry a provision in the bill requiring them to pay a nominal amount or an appraised value?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, they will pay more than a nominal amount; they will pay what the lands are worth, and I should imagine that they will sell for quite a little sum.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell to the Arapahoe Trading Co., Yellowstone Sheep Co., and Patrick A. McGovern, bishop of the Catholic Church for Wyoming, for an adequate consideration, not to exceed 40 acres of land on which is located valuable improvements at the Arapahoe subagency, on the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., being the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, section 23, township 1 north, range 3 east, Wind River meridian, and to convey the same by patents in fee to the interests herein named, the said patents to include the lands on which the improvements are located.

The following committee amendment was read:

On page 2, line 3, after the colon, insert: Provided, That the cost of any special survey required for issuing the patents shall be paid by the purchaser.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

On page 1, line 11, after the word "one" strike out the word "north" and insert the word "south."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 11, after the word "one" strike out the word "north" and insert the word "south."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNYDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALBERT H. RAYNOLDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 901) for the payment of certain money to Albert H. Reynolds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I think we ought to have some explanation here why the Government should bear the responsibility of cashing these vouchers when the banks incur that liability.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in the spring of 1877 Albert H. Reynolds was engaged in conducting a small trading store at Sidney, Nebr., and a contractor by the name of McCann was engaged in the transportation of supplies to Indian and military posts in the State of Nebraska. McCann, as was the custom of conducting the business, issued two vouchers to pay the teamster for material which had been hauled to certain Indian agencies in Nebraska. The regularity of the vouchers never was questioned. They were certified to as being correct by Lieut. Johnson, who had charge of the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Indian Agencies and also had supervision of the transportation of supplies from Omaha, Nebr., to the agencies. In the course of the business the two vouchers that were cashed by Reynolds found their way back to Washington to one of the banks. I think, as shown in the report, they were presented in May, 1877, to the department here in Washington.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Were these vouchers merely orders that certain work had been performed and calling on the Government to pay that money to the contractor?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. The vouchers were that certain supplies had been received, and the amount set forth; the charge for hauling was correctly set forth and practically amounted to an order on the department for payment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The bill says:

Which vouchers were issued on the 26th day of March, 1877, to Dwight J. McCann.

The report also says that Reynolds—— cashed and paid two United States Indian vouchers in the sums, respectively, etc., issued to Dwight J. McCann, a Government contractor.

Does the gentleman claim that is a correct statement either in the bill or in the report?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. The fact—

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is easy to answer. I want to ask another question.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Who issued the vouchers?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Dwight J. McCann issued the vouchers.

Mr. MANN. That is just it. They were not issued to him at all. This gives a very erroneous impression in the bill and in the report to say that the vouchers were issued to the contractor. One naturally assumes at once that those vouchers were issued to him by some Government official. Nothing of that kind happened. He signed the receipts, that is all he did, and the gentleman calls it a voucher. Is not that right?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. No; it is not exactly right.

Mr. MANN. He signed a receipt as we sign a receipt down here at the Sergeant at Arms' office to draw our pay. He did it in a different form and had to put certain certificates to it.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. The voucher, as it is called, was drawn, as a matter of fact, in favor of McCann by Lieut. Johnson in payment for services rendered by teamsters under the employ of McCann, who was the contractor. The only way they had to get money out in that country at that time was through these trading posts. Erroneously the report says that Reynolds was a banker. I was not aware of that at the time the matter was before the committee or at the time that I prepared the report. Since then I have corresponded with some of the old residents out in the West who knew him, and they confirmed these statements that he was simply running a small trading post there.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to Reynolds?

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Yes. As a matter of convenience to the Government that this contractor could get the money, Reynolds took some savings that he had there and cashed these checks or vouchers, and he paid out his own money. There is no dispute but that it was due and owing for the hauling of the supplies. No claim has ever been made that there was any irregularity about it.

Mr. MANN. If it had been a voucher, in the ordinary sense of a voucher issued by the Government, there would be no trouble about its being paid, but this was a voucher that the contractor furnished, a voucher in order to secure partial payments on his contract, and he made certain certificates, signed certain papers, to be presented to the department for payment. They may have been approved by somebody; I do not know. In this case he took them over to a man he was doing business with and got the money for them and the man stood in his shoes. Then he defaulted and owed money to the Government, and the Government seeks to offset it, and the gentleman wants to offset the offset.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I want to be heard just a moment upon that.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I am trying to get information, and if the gentleman has information which is not in the report, I will be very glad to hear it.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I have the same limitation in furnishing information that every gentleman has, and that the Senate had. The original documents were destroyed. I have seen what purports to be a photographic copy of part of one of these documents. I understand that the voucher was drawn by Lieut. Johnson, certifying that certain supplies, specifying them, had been transported, and that it was issued to McCann, in the course of business, and the thing that the Government is seeking to take advantage of is that that was not assignable, and that it was a violation, I think, of sections 3737 and 3477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. However, the custom had been to handle these vouchers away out there on the plains at that time in exactly that manner. These vouchers came down here to the bank in Washington and were presented to the department. The department O. K'd them. Then they were held off for nearly two years, when finally some auditor in the Treasury Department raised some objection to it. The matter laid dormant for another two years. Nearly five years elapsed from the time the vouchers were received by the department before anything was done one way or the other about it. Everyone supposed that it was regular, and that they would be paid. Finally the bank was notified here in Washington that the Government had refused payment for the reason that there had been some irregularities, because of the violation of some section of the statute to which I have referred. Had the Government gone ahead and paid these orders or vouchers in the ordinary course of business, everything would have been all right. McCann, the contractor, would have been solvent. It was only after five years that McCann became insolvent. He was solvent at the time of the transaction, but later he became insolvent, a long period of time having elapsed, and then the Government applied this account which Reynolds had taken against the claim, which the Government had against McCann at the time that he became insolvent and when he had defaulted upon some contract with the Government. If the Government had acted one way or the other within a reasonable time, this man might have had some recourse and some remedy.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's report and the bill state that these vouchers were issued to this contractor. The letter from the Secretary of the Interior says that they were issued by this contractor. There is quite a little difference between a voucher that is just issued by a contractor to get money and a voucher that is issued by a Government official to a contractor.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. If I am able to understand the English language, they were issued by Lieut. Johnson to McCann.

Mr. MANN. Then, I call the attention of the gentleman to the language in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior—which had been issued by Dwight J. McCann, a Government contractor, in payment of transporting supplies from Omaha, Sidney, and Schuyler, in the State of Nebraska, to the Red Cloud Indian Agency in said State. The delivery of the goods and the correctness of the vouchers were certified to thereon by Lieut. A. C. Johnson, United States Army.

There is quite a difference between an officer of the Army issuing a voucher, which is practically a draft for the payment of a certain sum of money, and certifying that certain goods have been delivered.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I concede all that the gentleman from Illinois says with reference to the effect of that. I want to say further that I myself was misled, perhaps by indefinite language, with reference to the history of this bill in the Senate.

I assumed at all times until within recent days that Reynolds was a banker. He is referred to as a banker. As a matter of fact he was not a banker, but simply a man conducting an humble little business who happened to have some ready cash and paid it over to satisfy a claim against the Government.

Mr. MANN. I have great reverence for the Senate of the United States and all of the Senators, but the reverence of the gentleman for the Senate far exceeds mine, if he believes all the statements that are made in the Senate in order to pass a bill.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am wholly unaware of having uttered any word which would indicate whether I have reverence or not for the Senate. I meant to say to the gentleman, and I think I did say to him, that there may be inadvertent expressions in the report. It was only by personal investigation by writing a great number of letters myself not only to Reynolds but to old-time westerners who knew Reynolds that I got what I believe to be the facts with reference to this transaction. Just one word further. At various times this matter has been presented for consideration. It has been considered. It has now been passed by the Senate. Reynolds is an old man, nearly 87 years of age. For three years past he has been an object of charity. Nobody denies but what the Government had the benefit and use of his money. I trust that no gentleman on the floor of this House now will object to the consideration of this bill, because the only question raised is a technicality in reference to the statute referred to. I want to say with due deference to the gentleman from Illinois that I have carefully examined the statutes. I have gone over them very carefully, and I believe had the matter been taken up in court within the period allowed by the statutes that he would have recovered in a court of competent jurisdiction the amount due him upon this instrument. While such instruments are not recognized by the United States courts as negotiable instruments, yet the courts have held that they are evidence of indebtedness.

Mr. MANN. He did not have a show in court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Albert H. Reynolds, or his personal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,290.49, for and on account of two United States Indian vouchers in the amounts, respectively, of $907.98 and $1,382.51, which vouchers were issued on the 26th day of March, 1877, to Dwight J. McCann, an Indian freight contractor, and cashed by the said Albert H. Reynolds, and which said vouchers were allowed for payment by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the 2d day of May, 1877, and afterwards refused.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LEATHERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NASH MOTORS CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3279) to refund certain duties paid by the Nash Motors Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the Treasury Department are not very enthusiastic about the passage of this measure. I would like to know how it becomes necessary that legislation is required?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to explain it, and while the gentleman from Massachusetts may not be enthusiastic in his support of the measure, I hope he will not object to its consideration.

Mr. Speaker, the Nash Motors Co., as gentlemen know, has a very fine national, indeed an international, reputation. It is the successor of the Thomas B. Jeffery Co., which in the spring of 1915 had sent a chassis to its representative in London. It remained there for about a year and was untouched and unchanged in any way. It came back to this country in the spring of 1916 consigned to T. P. Reeve, who was a clerk in the office of some customs brokers in the city of New York, employed in business by the Nash Motors Co. That chassis having been of American manufacture, unchanged in any way, was entitled to free entry under section 404 of the tariff act; but when an article of that kind arrives unchanged and subject to free entry, a certificate of its export is required before it is allowed to come in. For some reason these brokers did not supply the certificate. It was carelessness, of course, but the Nash Motors Co., a thousand miles away, knew nothing about this at the time. As soon as they were notified, however, they furnished the evidence. Then, it having been too late when the evidence was supplied, the Government took possession and assessed the duty, and the Nash Motors Co. protested; but the protest required payment of a fee, and then occurred a most extraordinary event. That fee was not paid within the time required by the Government, but was delayed by only one day. Again somebody in this broker's establishment was grossly careless, so that the company paid $1,223.30 duty on goods which were entitled to free entry under the statute, American-made goods coming back to this country. Ever since that time the Government has had the use of that money, which if these brokers had done their duty would not have had to be paid. Now, an identically similar bill passed the House in the last Congress and went to the Senate, but failed there. I have in my hand a copy of a letter written by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to my predecessor in Congress, and here is what the Government official said concerning this shipment and payment:

While American goods are entitled to free entry under the provisions of paragraph 404 of the tariff act, if returned to the United States without having been advanced in value or improved in condition while abroad, this privilege is dependent upon compliance with regulations adopted under said paragraph for the establishment of the identity of such articles as of American manufacture. The regulations were not complied with at the time of entry in the present case and a bond was given for the production of the missing evidence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to interpolate here the statement that the Nash Motors Co., a thousand miles away, knew nothing about the giving of this bond. These brokers gave it without any authority whatever. I read now:

The entry was held unliquidated by the collector for some time after the expiration of the bond in order that the requirements of the regulations might be fulfilled. The entry was finally liquidated with the assessment of duty and a protest filed within the statutory period, but as the protest fee was not paid within the time specified in paragraph N of section 3 of the tariff act, the protest was necessarily deemed abandoned.

I stop here to read from a letter written by David A. Sondel, assistant United States attorney in Milwaukee. He says:

A written protest was filed against such liquidation and was thereafter abandoned and waived, no fee having been deposited until one day after the expiration of the time therefor.

I characterize negligence of that kind, three times repeated by the officials or clerks of these brokers, as extraordinary, and when I use the word "extraordinary" I curb my desire to use language much more forceful than that. I read now, Mr. Speaker, from a letter of a Treasury official, and I ask the particular attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I shall read later from the letter of Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury. I call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts especially to this:

While there is no doubt that the automobile truck was of the manufacture of the United States and entitled to free entry under paragraph 404 of the tariff act on compliance with the regulations, the entry having been liquidated with the assessment of duty, the Secretary of the Treasury was precluded by the provisions of paragraph N, section 3 of the tariff act, from ordering a reliquidation of the entry in the absence of protest. It appears that it was a hardship for the Nash Motors Co. to be required to pay the duty as the assessment of duty was due to the carelessness of the broker who represented the ultimate consignee, but the department could not take any other action in the case than that outlined in its letter of May 7, 1916, addressed to the Nash Motors Co., a copy of which is inclosed.

In reply to your inquiry as to whether there is any machinery that can be set in motion whereby this duty may be returned to the Nash Motors Co., I have to say that the only way in which the duty paid could be refunded would be by a special act of Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the Nash Motors Co. the sum of $1,223.30.

Very truly, yours,

JOSEPH SHOUSE,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand also a letter, written on the 7th of May last, by the present Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. I have read that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to read just one paragraph of it?

Mr. WALSH. I have read the letter, and the Secretary states that no greater reasons for relief exist in the present case than in numerous other cases. Here is a case where, through the negligence or failure of accredited representatives of this firm, as I suppose, who did not comply with the rules and regulations—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It was a clerk.

Mr. WALSH. Whether it was a clerk or one of the firm, he did not comply with the requirements. If we are going to enact legislation in a case where there has been a failure to comply with the requirements of the law, we might as well repeal the law and have no requirements, and let them send it in here just as they want to, and say, "If you miss it by a day or a week, all right."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think the alternative is quite as broad as that suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It does not mean to repeal the law where there has been a failure on the part of a clerk to observe the law. But here is a case where the Government of the United States has money in its possession to which it is not entitled, in so far as the action of the Nash Motors Co. is concerned, due to gross neglect of duty by somebody or other; and in using the word "neglect" I am putting it mildly; but there was gross neglect of duty, and the failure to perform duty three times on one shipment.

Mr. WALSH. Well, it seems to me if the Nash Motors Co. after the first neglect still trusted to these brokers, and they made another error and neglected their clients, and the clients still trusted them, the Nash Motors Co. can not be entirely blameless in the matter.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I put it to the gentleman himself, if he were 1,000 miles away and a clerk of a firm in which the gentleman had entire confidence was attending to business for him in New York City, and a protest fee was to be paid, the gentleman would assume, of course, that the payment would be made within the 30 days, and that that payment would not be withheld until one day after the expiration of the 30 days.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know whether I would assume that or not. If they had failed to produce evidence of the exportation of the chassis from the United States in accordance with the law prior thereto, I am inclined to think I might have been looking around for one of my personal representatives to be on the job there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. These brokers were their personal representatives, in whom they had implicit confidence, and they have implicit confidence to-day in the firm itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he thinks that the irrelevant statement in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, that there are other claims like this which might be allowed, should in any way be permitted to defeat a just claim, a claim which the Secretary of the Treasury himself in his letter says is an equitable claim, a proper claim to be paid, the Government having money in its possession to which in honor it is not entitled? If there are five or six or eight other claims—and I do not know of another like it; never heard of one—but suppose there should be five or six or more, if they are absolutely just they ought to be paid, and payment of this claim ought not to be denied because other claims may be in existence. It ought to be paid, because Secretary Mellon says:

It is shown by the correspondence that the failure to furnish the evidence of outward shipment in this case was due to the carelessness of the brokers, and that the ultimate consignee, the Thomas B. Jeffrey Co., did not authorize the brokers to give a bond in the case.

While the equities in this case are apparent, in that the Nash Motors Co. was required to pay duty on an importation belonging to the firm which they succeeded, which importation was clearly entitled to free entry under paragraph 404 of the tariff act—

Even the Secretary himself says that the equities of the case are with the Nash Motors Co.; that the Government has $1,200 which that company ought to be allowed to receive; and a similar bill passed the House in the last Congress.

Mr. WALSH. I remember when it was up. Of course, Congress passed the original law and included this requirement with reference to protest within 30 days. The Treasury Department drew up the regulation under that law. Now, if people are not going to comply with the law and every time there is a miss by a day or a week there is going to be special legislation here right in the face of a previous statute which Congress passed, I can not see how we are going to help along the proper administration of the laws which we pass.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand the attitude of the gentleman; but I think it is based on a wrong premise. The gentleman says "in cases where the parties are negligent." The Nash Motors Co. were not negligent. If they had been in

New York they could have attended to this, and if they had not done so they would have been negligent; but they were a thousand miles away, and the Treasury Department itself has twice said that the equities were with the company. Had the company themselves been negligent, the equities would not have been with them, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, for there can not be any equity in favor of people who are negligent. The department has twice in official letters said that the equities were with the company. Negligence destroys equity.

Mr. MANN. Whose negligence was it? It was not the negligence of the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No.

Mr. MANN. Have not the Nash Motors Co. a claim against the brokers?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Because it was a clerk who without authority of law at all gave the bond. They knew nothing about it.

Mr. MANN. The brokers did all this. The brokers neglected to file the original papers. The brokers neglected to file the fee for the protest. If I were a lawyer and did that, I would certainly think I was caught.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose that the brokers can not be made to pay; and even suppose you get a judgment against them and they are execution proof, then what is going to happen? Then we have this situation: The Government of the United States has possession of this money against the equities, as admitted twice in written communications by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Treasury Department has stated that it was not the fault of the Nash Motors Co., but that it was the fault of this clerk in New York.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, it was the fault of an employee of the customs brokers who were the representatives of the Nash Motors Co. and acting in their name and for them, with their consent and with their due authority.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Government has twice reported that the giving of this bond was entirely without the knowledge or authority of the Nash Motors Co. This clerk acted entirely outside of any authority given him or given to the firm of brokers by the Nash Motors Co.

Mr. WALSH. If this bond had not intervened, the duty would have been assessed much earlier.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And they would have been notified and would have attended to it very promptly.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield I wish to say that I dissented from this report of the Committee on Claims because it is clearly the fact that this large concern with all the equipment and paraphernalia for properly carrying on business has either inadvertently or otherwise broken one of the laws laid down for the government of all the people of the United States.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What law did it break?

Mr. UNDERHILL. It failed to follow out certain requirements imposed by law upon the people of the United States with reference to customs dues. If a company of that size, with all of its equipment, can come to Congress and get special legislation after it has made errors through its own fault or the fault of its agents, I do not know what some of the poorer people are going to think who come here with just as good claims and do not get anything.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Here is the Nash Motors Co. Its financial standing in the business world is absolutely irrelevant and in my judgment has no proper place in the discussion of this case. If it had been a poor man a thousand miles away from the city of New York who had been obliged to pay $1,200 against the equities of the case, as the Government admits, would the gentleman contest this claim?

I rely upon the fact that the Government twice, through its United States Treasury officials, has admitted that the equities of the case are not with it but with the Nash Motors Co. If the Government can twice admit that the equities are with the company and that the Government relies upon a mere quibbling technicality, in the face of gross negligence proven to have been committed by a clerk a thousand miles away, if the Government is to take advantage of a technicality like that, in my judgment it will tend to confirm the impression which has become spread broadcast, that as a debt payer the Government of the United States is the meanest in the world.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman, of course, tries to make out a good case for the Nash Motors Co.

and I do not take issue with him on the equity of the case, but I do take issue with him on the fact—that the Nash Motors Co. was properly informed and equipped, but handled this business contrary to the rules and regulations laid down by the customs department. It was no fault of the Government and there is no reason why the Government should make an exemption in their case. If, on the other hand—and perhaps I am wrong in the premises—if some poor man was put in the same position without the best of equipment, without knowledge of the law or the regulations or the rules, there might be some necessity for relieving him. These people knew the rules and regulations and had all the paraphernalia to properly conduct its business, but through carelessness and neglect they failed to take advantage of the rules and regulations—they would have received the money back if they had—and then they come to Congress and claim that they are entitled to special consideration.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says that this company, through neglect and failure to observe the law, did so and so. It did everything that it could do to observe the law. It supposed that the brokers on whom it relied complied with the law, and this protest which was in the hands of the Government before the expiration of that time was for some reason held up until one day after the rights of the company had expired, and that was a matter for which the motor company were not neglectful in the slightest. They supposed that the law had been complied with.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Then I agree with my colleague from Massachusetts that they ought to sue the broker and not come to Congress for relief.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Nash Motors Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maryland, the sum of $1,223.30 as full payment to the said Nash Motors Co. of all duties levied upon an automobile chassis, the property of said company, of American manufacture and entitled to free entry under the provisions of paragraph 404 of the tariff act, and paid by the said Nash Motors Co. upon the importation of the said automobile chassis into this country.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "pay" insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment. I have explained to the House my opposition in the matter. I was the only member of the committee, however, who dissented from an otherwise unanimous report. Rather than take advantage, if it would be taking an advantage, of the gentleman from Wisconsin in objecting to the consideration of the bill, I think I have given him all of the help that he is entitled to and now will leave it to the membership of the House whether they want to pass the bill or kill it here.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—33 ayes and 7 noes.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARTHUR J. BURDICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4356) for the relief of Arthur J. Burdick.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the former Secretary of the Interior in reporting upon this bill says that there are many cases similar to this. I would like to ask the gentleman from California a question. We have a whole lot of cases—the House just passed a bill of the same sort—making a law, and if a man does not comply with it, be he poor or rich, they have an exception made in his case. Does anybody propose general legislation covering all these cases?

Mr. SWING. Not that I know of.

Mr. MANN. It depends largely on leg work of the Members of Congress themselves.

Mr. SWING. I think each Congressman should call the attention of the committee and the House to those cases which he thinks without attention would result in injustice being done to a citizen of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Suppose some man does not enjoy the acquaintance of a Member of Congress. Suppose a Member of Congress is not very active in his leg work. I take it that the gentleman does not think that citizen ought to receive relief.

Mr. SWING. I think the gentleman from Illinois, whose experience has been very long with this body, recognizes that there are always exceptions to every general law where it does not operate equitably and equally.

Mr. MANN. I think that is true. The department writes that there are many cases similar to this, and it may be they ought all to be relieved—I do not know.

Mr. SWING. I asked them if they had a case in mind exactly like this, and they could not cite a case. I directed the attention of the members of the committee to it and asked them whether there had been any claims like this, and they said they did not know of any.

I think this is an unusual case. There are cases of mistakes by officers of the land department, mistakes of law and fact, but I think this is unusual, and in my experience in the western country, where there is a large amount of land for settlement, I never heard of a case like this—where an entryman in good faith went to the land office, asked if land was open near a certain town, and they opened the books and said "yes; here is a half section open to entry," and he said "I will get my witnesses, view the land, and come here to-morrow and make the entry, if it is still open."

That he does, and they accept his entries, and he goes upon the land. He acts upon their acceptance, and it seems to me that that is a case where an injustice is done him, when subsequently the land office tells him, after he has spent money on the place in trying to make it his home, that he must move off.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is a very common case.

Mr. SWING. I have not heard of exactly that case.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have heard of a good many cases since I have been here where through an error of the land office a man settles on a piece of property.

Mr. SWING. The most common case in my country is where a man at his own risk undertakes to settle upon the proper land which has been granted to him and gets on the wrong piece of property, but here the man goes on the piece of property for which the Government has given him a certificate of entry.

Mr. MANN. It has happened a good many times with reference to these railroad lands.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. There have been other cases presented to the committee this year of a similar character. It seems that in this case a great injustice has been done. There have been cases presented to the committee where we did not find that an injustice had been done, because the settler had gone in after he had been informed by some agent of the Government that there was a question as to whether the land was open. I think the committee has turned down several cases of that kind, and they now repose in pigeonholes in the office of the committee. Here the man went on the land in good faith. The mistake was at the hands of, or was caused through a Government agency. He made improvements on the land. He was establishing a homestead. He spent a great deal of time and considerable money, and it seems to me that he has justice on his side.

Mr. MANN. All he did on the land was to sink a well, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. UNDERHILL. He cleared some land.

Mr. MANN. Oh, he cleared enough land to sink this well, and that is about all. It is not as meritorious in that sense as it would be if he had constructed a home on the land.

Mr. UNDERHILL. He had to have water first.

Mr. MANN. And yet we have refused to pay a man back the cost of a home where he constructed a home on land that did not go to him.

Mr. KNUTSON. How deep do they have to go for water in that country?

Mr. SWING. Oh, several hundred feet. That is quite an item.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course, it is. The well cost nearly $2,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur J. Burdick, Riverside County, State of California, the sum of $1,981.68, in full compensation for the amount expended by said Burdick in compliance with law upon his desert-land entry numbered 07331, allowed by the local land office at Los Angeles, Calif., and subsequently canceled for conflict with the grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SWING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE CISZEK AND ANNA CISZEK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6686) for the relief of George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek the sum of $2,000 for damage done to their dwelling house on July 1, 1919, due to the explosion of the United States Navy dirigible balloon C-8 at a point near Camp Holabird, Md.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out the figures "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HICKS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FRANK CARPENTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1247) for the relief of Frank Carpenter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what obligation is there upon the part of the National Government to pay for the installation of a rifle range for the use of State troops?

Mr. PRINGEY. Mr. Speaker, the title is in the Government, and since the work was done, authorized by our governor, an appropriation has been made and we are simply asking to be allowed to pay it out of our own funds. It is indorsed by The Adjutant General, by the governor, by the Secretary of War, and it has passed the Senate and is indorsed by the Claims Committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where does the gentleman get authority for the statement that it is indorsed by the Secretary of War?

Mr. PRINGEY. In the report I think the gentleman will find that Secretary Weeks indorsed it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the report, which consists of eight pages, that most of the recommendations are on the part of State officials, but I do not find any direct recommendation on the part of the Secretary of War. The Secretary's letter is to be found on page 7. Will the gentleman call my attention to where in that letter he recommends the payment of this claim?

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Can the gentleman imagine any reason why it should not be paid?

Mr. STAFFORD. We are departing on an entirely new policy since we have nationalized the National Guard than formerly in the purchase of property and the title to State rifle ranges. We now equip them, but we do not pay for the establishment of the rifle range. This work was undertaken some years back, I assume, before we attempted to nationalize the guards when the States were appropriating money for the maintenance of their own State militia. That is a policy of the past.

Mr. BOX. But before this contract was made the disbursing officer inquired of the War Department if this charge, the cost of doing this work, was a proper charge against the fund. The disbursing officer acted upon it and the man did the work. That particular appropriation was exhausted, so that the work could not be paid for out of that fund. A subsequent appropriation was made, which now remains to the credit of Oklahoma, and it is available only by act of Congress for the payment of this claim.

The man did the work upon a contract with the State officers, with the approval of the War Department, and has now waited eight or nine years for pay which he fully expected to receive when he acted upon the assurance of the War Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, because he acted upon the assurance of State officials, the State adjutant general. There is nothing in the report, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that warrants the statement that this contractor acted at the suggestion of any official of the National Government.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman read the letter of E. M. Weaver, colonel, Coast Artillery Corps, chief of division, for the War Department, of April 21, 1910, assuring the disbursing officer that this would be a proper charge against this fund?

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. BOX. On page 3. The contract was thereafter made, the work was thereafter done and accepted, and the fund was found to be exhausted, and it could not be paid because it was exhausted, and a subsequent fund is available; not available for other purposes, however.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, however, I notice they refer to this fund as a balance to the credit of the State of Oklahoma. What does that mean? They can not draw the money out, can they? They can not pay any bills out of it, can they?

Mr. BOX. I understand that it is the fact that they can not pay bills out of it.

Mr. MANN. How can a fund remain to the credit of a State that can not withdraw it and can not use it?

Mr. BOX. I wonder, though, if it was money covered into the Treasury—

Mr. MANN. I wondered when I looked at this whether there was such a fund or not.

Mr. BOX. My information is it is the unexpended balance remaining for the equipping of the militia under the act passed prior to 1918.

Mr. MANN. The National Guards' apportionment to the States at that time, and the Secretary of War refers to that as though it were available. It may be, but when I saw the bill I doubted whether there was such a fund on the books.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, which provides a continuing appropriation of $200,000 for the purpose of providing arms and equipment for the whole body of the militia. There are some appropriations which are continuing—

Mr. MANN. I understand that, and I assume the appropriations are all available for the payment of certain bills, but here is an appropriation which apparently can not be used. The Secretary says it can be used for any bills occurring since 1910. Has this bill occurred prior to this time?

Mr. BOX. Yes; 1910.

Mr. MANN. Evidently it may have been used to pay bills prior to that time, but if it can not be drawn out and can not be used, what is the use—

Mr. BOX. Answering the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I desire to call attention to the letter of Secretary Weeks, on page 7, in which he stated:

There would appear to be no objection on the part of the War Department if such expenditure is favorably viewed by Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read that. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Frank Carpenter, out of the unexpended balance in the Treasury of $14,813.33 now to the credit of the State of Oklahoma under the appropriation "Arming and equipping the militia," under section 1661, Revised Statutes, which is no longer available for expenditures incurred since July 1, 1918, the sum of $3,700, in full payment for work done in the construction of a rifle range at Chandler, Okla., in accordance with the provisions of a contract entered into by the said Carpenter with the State of Oklahoma December 31, 1910.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PRINGEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TIMBER IN THE STATE OF ARIZONA FOR AGRICULTURAL, MINING, AND OTHER DOMESTIC PURPOSES.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 561) to grant citizens of Washington and Kane Counties, Utah, the right to cut timber in the State of Arizona for agricultural, mining, and other domestic purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a little explanation of why we should pass legislation of this sort.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, under the law as it now obtains, citizens of one State can not, under the general provisions of the law, cut and remove timber from an adjoining State. The strip of land affected by this bill lies north of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado in Arizona. It is accessible only from the Utah side. The land is covered with a growth of timber, not merchantable timber but used principally for fuel, although there is some used for mining purposes. This bill would authorize the citizens of Utah living adjacent to this timber to secure a permit, upon proper application and notice, to cut timber in Arizona and remove it to Utah, where it can be used. The governor of Arizona joins with the governor of Utah in recommending this legislation, the county commissioners of both counties in Arizona are perfectly willing that it shall be enacted, as the wood will simply decay unless it is used.

Mr. WALSH. Was it because it happened to be a State line that national legislation is required?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman will yield, is this timber to be cut for commercial purposes?

Mr. COLTON. No; for domestic purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by an act approved March 3, 1891, chapter 559, page 1093, volume 26, United States Statutes at Large, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits, under the provisions of section 8 of the act of March 3, 1891, to citizens of Washington County, and of Kane County, Utah, to cut timber on the public lands of the counties of Mohave and Coconino, Ariz., for agricultural, mining, and other domestic purposes, and remove the timber so cut to said Washington County and Kane County, Utah."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I notice the act refers to two other provisions which seem to have been passed on the same day. Is that accurate, or was there an error in designating the date?

Mr. COLTON. It has not been called to my attention before, and I can not answer the gentleman's question just now.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It says:

That section 8 of an act entitled "An act to repeal the timber culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by an act approved March 3, 1891.

Of course it might well be.

Mr. COLTON. I was wondering if the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands could answer.

Mr. MANN. He was not here then.

Mr. COLTON. I am unable to answer.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The question is whether the amending act was passed on the same day.

Mr. SINNOTT. I think I looked that up once. The singular coincidence of the two dates struck me, and I think I looked it up. I think that is the situation, although I am not clear on it now.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Of course, if the addition is to section 8, and it is a part of section 8, then line 10 should not recite that it is under the provision of section 8.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have the act here. It is "An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled 'An act to repeal the timber culture laws, and for other purposes.'" That is the title of it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, Mr. Speaker, if this is the amending act, then the language that is added is still in section 8, and there should be an amendment to line 10 in the reading of this section.

Mr. COLTON. I did not catch the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. SINNOTT. That act has been amended a number of times in that same way.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, if that language has been followed, I shall not make the point. But it seemed to me that when you are amending the section you ought not to refer to section 8.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COLTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WALTER I. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2649) to extend the benefits of section 260 of the Judicial Code to Walter I. Smith, United States circuit judge.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think the beneficiary of this act has deceased recently. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill lie on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF OWNERS OF THE SCHOONER "HORATIO G. FOSS."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4367) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that this bill carries compensation for the detention of the schooner in addition to damages by collision. Of course, I know that where there is an authorization to sue in court they get demurrage. What is the purpose of putting that in?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I suppose the question of demurrage would be settled by the court, as well as the question of damages.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it would without that language in.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not think, for one, that I would object to an amendment of that character.

Mr. MANN. Where we have forms of bills of this kind I think we should adhere to them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, arising out of a collision between said schooner and the United States collier Jupiter off Winter Quarter Light Vessel on the 18th day of May, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said schooner Horatio G. Foss by reason of damages to and detention of said schooner, may be submitted to the United States Court for the District of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court, sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same right of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill, on page 1, line 9, by striking out, after the word "to," the words "and detention of."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 1, line 9, strike out, after the word "to," the words "and detention of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting, on page 1, line 12, after the word "court," the word "of."

The SPEAKER. There is the same omission in line 4. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 1, line 4, after the word "out" insert the word "of," and on line 12, after the word "court," insert the word "of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERHILL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROBERT RUSSELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5791) for the relief of Robert Russell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. KNUTSON. I wish the gentleman from Wisconsin would withhold his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold my objection if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. KNUTSON. On what ground can the gentleman object?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not acquainted with the law in Minnesota as to the liability of the property owner where he refuses to remove snow and an injury results. I know that in Wisconsin there is no liability on the part of the property owner for an injury received unless the party is actively at fault. There is no actionable negligence here on the part of the Government. If we pass this bill, it will be held as a precedent in many, many cases. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota to state for what reason we should pass this bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor. I will say to the gentleman that it is my understanding that the laws of Minnesota hold property owners responsible in a case of this kind. The circumstances of this case are substantially as follows: Two years ago yesterday Mr. Russell slipped on the icy steps of the Federal building in St. Cloud, Minn., and fell down and suffered a compound fracture of his right hand, which has rendered him a cripple for life, in so far as the use of his hand is concerned.

The city of St. Cloud has an ordinance which provides for the removal of ice and snow from sidewalks within a specified time. The custodian of the Federal building at St. Cloud failed to observe this ordinance, and I contend that through the negligence of the custodian of the Federal building the Government is liable for the injuries sustained by Mr. Russell.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that the United States is bound by the city ordinance of St. Cloud, Minn., with reference to the removal of snow and ice from the Federal building sidewalk?

Mr. KNUTSON. I would say morally so; yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman thinks that the United States of America is subordinate to the city council of St. Cloud, Minn.?

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not see why the United States Government should be permitted to allow snow and ice to remain in front of its property any more than a private owner should. This idea that the Government can do no wrong does not make much of a hit with me.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we ought to have that doctrine elaborated very much. I think we ought to have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BARGE "HAVANA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4368) for the relief of the owners of the barge Havana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Staples Transportation Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, owner of the barge Havana, arising out of a collision between the United States steamship Quincy and said barge Havana at Hampton Roads, Va., on February 4, 1920, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said barge by reason of damages to and detention of said barge, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States of America, upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases of admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I move in line 10, page 1, after the word "to," that the words "and detention of" be stricken from the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. UNDERHILL: On page 1, line 10, after the word "to," strike out the words "and detention of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM MALONE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1463) for the relief of William Malone.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to pay, out of any money of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to William Malone the sum of $75, being the cost of an abstract of title sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in August, 1916, and lost by some employee of that office.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FORREST R. BLACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 314) for the relief of Forrest R. Black.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, I think we ought to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, this claim of Forrest R. Black is for jewelry and money. When he volunteered for enlistment in the Navy he checked his valuables with the man who was designated to receive them. They were rushed for help, and while one of the men went out to get his lunch during the noon hour the man who had charge of the checking left the checking booth and went to assist in taking the measurements of the men.

When Mr. Black came back from his physical examination these valuables were gone. The Navy Department, both under the previous administration and under this administration, has recommended the payment of this claim. There is no question at all that these valuables were stolen while in the custody of the Government agent.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Has the Government been paying for such lost valuables?

Mr. BEGG. Always.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. As I understand it, the man who was up for examination left his valuables with the man designated by the officer in charge?

Mr. BEGG. Designated by the Government.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And immediately following the examination the property was gone?

Mr. BEGG. When he turned in his check calling for his valuables they could not find them. They called in a policeman, locked the doors, and searched everybody, but evidently the thief had gone, because they did not find these valuables.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And in placing his money and jewelry with this particular person he was following out the request of the department?

Mr. BEGG. Not only the request but the orders of the department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Gladly.

Mr. MANN. I was so impressed with the statement in this case that I thought the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] had made a mistake in introducing the bill for only $142, when it appeared that the man had lost under these exceptional circumstances property of the value of $190. What was the $50 of which we rob him?

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that Mr. Black makes the statement that he did not put in a claim for all he lost, for instance, his fraternity pin. He did not put in a claim for things of that kind.

Mr. MANN. He did put it in.

Mr. BEGG. There were some items that he did not include.

Mr. MANN. Here is his claim for $192.

Mr. BEGG. It is $142.

Mr. MANN. What part did the gentleman from Ohio jew him out of?

Mr. BEGG. I did not jew the gentleman out of anything, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Forrest R. Black, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $142, in reimbursement for money and valuables lost while they were properly in the custody of the United States Government.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BEGG, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEO BALSAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6251) for the relief of Leo Balsam.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Leo Balsam, of Plattsburg, N. Y., the sum of $1,282.50, in full compensation for repair at contract price of 950 pairs of shoes destroyed by fire when the gymnasium at Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y., was destroyed on November 28, 1917, said payment being due the said Leo Balsam in the opinion of the Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the figures 1917 in line 10.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN: Page 1, line 10, after the figures "1917" strike out the remainder of line 10, all of line 11 and line 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNELL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BERTRAM GARDNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1543) for the relief of Bertram Gardner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York how many of these stamps there were.

Mr. HICKS. Sixteen hundred, worth 10 cents apiece.

Mr. WALSH. The bill says 600.

Mr. HICKS. There were 1,628.

Mr. WALSH. That would amount to $162.80. Does the gentleman intend to offer an amendment?

Mr. HICKS. If it is thought necessary.

Mr. WALSH. The report says 1,628, and the bill which was introduced before the report says there were 600. It is immaterial, but if you have the number in the law it ought to be the correct number. If this is going to be corrected I will withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Bertram Gardner, collector of Internal Revenue Service, first district of New York, $162.80 for the loss of 600 export distillery spirit stamps which were destroyed by fire.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, in line 6, after the word "of," I move to strike out the two words "six hundred."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 6, after the word "of," strike out the words "six hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HICKS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANNIE M. LEPLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4504) for the relief of Annie M. Lepley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Annie M. Lepley, as postmaster at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., on her account as postmaster of said place, in the sum of $2,055.83, the same being the amount of certain moneys, money orders, and postage stamps taken and stolen by burglars from the post office at Plymouth, Amador County, Calif., at nighttime at about 10 minutes past 1 o'clock antemeridian on March 13, 1915, by unknown persons, and that the said Annie M. Lepley be, and she is hereby, relieved and released from payment to the Treasury of the United States of the said sum of $2,055.83, and every part thereof, as such postmaster, and that her account be credited as postmaster with said amount of $2,055.83 by reason of said loss caused by such burglary.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I thought the bill was under consideration. I would like to ask the gentleman from California as to the form of the bill. I suppose it is desirable to make the thing certain, but the bill first directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit Annie M. Lepley with the sum of $2,055.53 on account of this loss. I should think that would be sufficient. Then the bill goes on and says, "said Annie M. Lepley is hereby relieved and released from the payment to the Treasury of said sum." Having done it twice, then it goes on and provides again that her account as postmaster be credited with this sum.

Mr. RAKER. Let me say to the gentleman that the matter was taken up with the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department, and the Post Office Department has made an order that until this legislation is disposed of they can not relieve her from making that report. The statement was, as I gathered from them, that she would have to be released from the Treasury account and then her report would be credited with this amount, so as to clear her record in the Post Office Department.

Mr. MANN. If they credit her account with $2,055.53, that would close up the transaction. If we relieve her from the payment of $2,055, that of itself would close up the transaction. Then her account is to be credited with $2,055. That of itself would close up the transaction. Why do it three times?

Mr. RAKER. I took the advice of the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department, and these matters were submitted to them, and we have had them before them a great many times.

Mr. MANN. We have passed a great many bills of this kind.

Mr. RAKER. This was their judgment, and I took it because of the fact that the Treasury had to be credited, and then her account had to be credited in making the report to the Post Office Department.

Mr. MANN. It is not necessary to do a thing three times, even in the statute.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MONROE B. SHEALY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7272) for the relief of Monroe B. Shealy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Monroe B. Shealy, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,083.36 for damages to his automobile by an Army truck belonging to the Government.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, strike out the figures "$1,083.36" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$414.66."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULMER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RUPERTO VILCHE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5251) for the relief of Ruperto Vilche.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is of the same class as bills which have been passed over in order to permit the committee to determine a policy in respect to accidents resulting from the discharge of guns in the hands of soldiers. I object.

TAHOE NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8832) to provide for the exchange of certain lands of the United States in the Tahoe National Forest, Calif., for lands owned by William Kent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to certain lands owned by William Kent and situate in the county of Placer, State of California, in section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and within the Tahoe National Forest, free and clear of all encumbrances, more particularly described as follows:

Beginning at a point on the shore of Lake Tahoe, said point being the northeast corner of that part or parcel of lot 55 as delineated and designated upon that certain amended map of Sunnyside tract entitled "Sunnyside tract, property of N. D. Rideout, part of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, and part of section 19, township 15 north, range 17 east, Placer County, Calif.," filed in the office of the county recorder of the county of Placer, State of California, on the 18th day of November, 1907, conveyed by Hulda S. and Chris Nielsen to M. L. Effinger by deed dated September 24, 1906, and recorded in the county recorder's office in said Placer County in deed book No. 105, page 221; thence west from said point along a line parallel to the south line of said lot 55, 220 feet more or less, to a point on the east line of Sunnyside Avenue where said line intersects said east line of Sunnyside Avenue; thence north on said east line of Sunnyside Avenue 145 feet more or less to a point on the north line of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, where said east line of Sunnyside Avenue intersects said section line; thence east along said section line 220 feet more or less to the shore of Lake Tahoe; thence in a southerly direction along the shore of Lake Tahoe 145 feet more or less to the place of beginning.

Beginning at a point on the west line of Sunnyside Avenue 100 feet north of the point of intersection of the extended south line of lot 55 as delineated and designated upon that certain amended map of Sunnyside tract entitled "Sunnyside tract, property of N. D. Rideout, part of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, and part of section 19, township 15 north, range 17 east, Placer County, Calif.," filed in the office of the county recorder of the county of Placer, State of California, on the 18th day of November, 1907; filed in the county records of the city of Placerville, State of California, on the 18th day of November, 1907; thence west on a line parallel to said extended south line of said lot 55, 300 feet more or less, to the east line of a tract of land deeded by William Kent to the United States of America on February 28, 1920, said deed being recorded in the records of said county of Placer in book 175 of deeds at page 381; thence north on said east line of said tract deeded by William Kent to the United States of America to the north line of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian; thence east along said section line to the point of intersection of the west line of Sunnyside Avenue with said section line; thence south along said west line of Sunnyside Avenue 150 feet more or less to the point of beginning.

And in exchange therefor may issue patent for certain lands owned by the United States within the Tahoe National Forest and situate in the county of Placer, State of California, in section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, more particularly described as follows:

Lot 51 and the south half of lot 52, as delineated and designated upon that certain amended map of Sunnyside tract entitled "Sunnyside tract, property of N. D. Rideout, part of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, and part of section 19, township 15 north, range 17 east, Placer County, Calif.," filed in the office of the county recorder of the county of Placer, State of California, on the 18th day of November, 1907; also all that tract of land in the northeast quarter of section 24, township 15 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and more particularly described as follows: Beginning at a point on the westerly side of Sunnyside Avenue as laid down and delineated on that certain above-mentioned amended map as Sunnyside tract, which point is 65 feet west of the southwest corner of lot 51 of said Sunnyside tract, and from said point of beginning running parallel to the north boundary of the tract of land conveyed to Alice M. Schmiedell by deed dated the 23d day of March, 1908, and recorded in the office of the county recorder of Placer County, in book 110 of deeds, at page 261, said boundary being parallel to the south line extended of lot 42 of said Sunnyside tract; running thence westerly 300 feet; thence north 1 degree 37 seconds east 150 feet to a point on the southerly line of a parcel of land conveyed by William Kent to William McFadden by deed dated the 12th day of September, 1912, and recorded in the office of the county recorder of said county in book 137 of deeds at page 201, said point being 300 feet west of the west line of Sunnyside Avenue; thence south 88 degrees 28 seconds east 300 feet more or less along said southerly boundary of the lands so conveyed to William McFadden to the west boundary of said Sunnyside Avenue; thence south 1 degree 37 seconds west 150 feet more or less along said west boundary of Sunnyside Avenue to the point of beginning.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 6, strike out the word "forty-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty-two."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be permitted to correct the spelling of the word "intersects" on line 22, page 2.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ROBERT E. DANFORTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6196) for the relief of Robert E. Danforth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are there any precedents for an action of this kind?

Mr. VAILE. There are a number of precedents where a homestead entry has been taken and for some reason or other the entryman does not fall quite within some of the provisions of law. I do not remember any precedent for this particular case.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There are precedents, however, for specific congressional action in the granting of a patent?

Mr. VAILE. Oh, many of them.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to Robert E. Danforth conveying the south half of the northeast quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 19, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 20, township 15 south, range 78 west, sixth principal meridian, Colorado, and the north half of the north half of section 20, township 15, range 78 west, sixth principal meridian, Colorado, being lands embraced in the homestead entries of said Robert E. Danforth, Leadville, serial Nos. 02846 and 02845, made April 5, 1920.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill, on page 2, line 1, by striking out the comma after the word "Leadville."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the comma after the word "Leadville."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HENRY T. HILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5385) for the relief of Henry T. Hill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why is not the customary reservation carried in the bill that no pension shall accrue to this man prior to the passage of the bill?

Mr. KEARNS. We have provided that no pay and allowance due him shall be allowed.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the invariable practice in bills of this kind to incorporate the feature I speak of.

Mr. KEARNS. That no pension in the future should be allowed.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; that a pension should not accrue to him prior to the passage of the bill.

Mr. KEARNS. Would there be any way for him to get it?

Mr. STAFFORD. If he applied for a pension.

Mr. KEARNS. He has not applied.

Mr. STAFFORD. We do not know whether he has or not. If he applied, and we give him this right, it will date back.

Mr. KEARNS. If the gentleman will offer the amendment, I have no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Very well, Mr. Speaker; I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Henry T. Hill, formerly a private of Company D, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company on the 19th day of May, 1902: Provided, That all pay and allowances due him on said date shall be allowed him.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 9, strike out the word "all" and insert in lieu thereof the word "no."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the period after the word "him" in line 11 and inserting the words "and that no pension shall accrue to him prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the period after the word "him" in line 11 and insert "and that no pension shall accrue to him prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEARNS a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE W. POSEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4894) for the relief of George W. Posey.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill shows that this soldier was not only guilty of one desertion, but of two desertions, and did not seem to have any regard whatsoever for the rules of the Army as far as enlistments were concerned. I object for the time being.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

W. W. McGRATH.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2722) for the relief of W. W. McGrath.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation from some member of the committee as to why we should adopt a precedent in this case of paying a claimant an amount practically for demurrage, for the expenses he was put to in hiring a car when he was engaged in exchanging his old car for a new car.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not know what the usual practice is and it would ill become me to try to explain something I do not believe myself, and I will leave that to some other member of the committee.

Mr. GLYNN. It was the opinion of the committee that this physician's car was damaged and for 90 days he was deprived of the use of his car, and the committee felt that an allowance of $3 a day for those 90 days would be reasonable.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the report in this case shows that the damage was occasioned by an Army truck running into a Maxwell sedan, and that the Government offered to the claimant through departmental officials an amount which they considered a full amount of the damage, but the claimant declined to receive it because he wished to have incorporated in his award an allowance for the use of another car while his damaged car was out of commission. The report shows that he exchanged this damaged car for a high-priced new car. I question whether there is much merit in this bill and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

GRANTING CERTAIN LANDS IN FREMONT COUNTY, COLO., FOR A PUBLIC PARK.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7053) to grant certain lands in the city of Canon City, Colo., for a public park.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the city of Canon City, in the State of Colorado, the south half of the southwest quarter, the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 5; the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 6; the north half of the northeast quarter of section 7; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, and the north half of section 8, township 17 south, range 70 west, sixth principal meridian; to have and to hold said lands for use as a public park: Provided, That the grant hereby made is, and the patent issued thereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises or any part thereof, and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States: Provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, or other mineral deposits that may be found in the lands so granted and all necessary use of the lands for extracting the same: And provided further, That the lands hereby authorized to be conveyed, as hereinbefore set forth, and all portions thereof shall be held and used by or for the said grantee for the purpose herein specified, and if the lands shall cease to be so used for a period of three years at any one time, they shall revert to the United States, and this condition shall be expressed in the patent to be issued under the terms of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARDY of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERRY H. KENNERLY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8256) authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Perry H. Kennerly for land allotted to him on the Blackfoot Reservation, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of some member of the committee why the committee did not follow the recommendation of the department and incorporate the suggested amendment as found in the last paragraph of the letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior as follows:

Said patent to be issued upon approval of said allotment and schedule containing the same.

I hear no response, and under the circumstances I—

Mr. MANN. Do not object; let us put the amendment in.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the committee wishes to adopt the committee amendment, I shall withdraw the reservation.

Mr. MANN. It is simply an inadvertence in making the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to Perry H. Kennerly, allottee No. 772, on the Blackfoot Reservation, Mont., for the 80 acres of land allotted to him on said reservation under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L., p. 16).

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: In line 9 change the period to a comma and add the following, "said patent to be issued upon the approval of said allotment and the schedule containing the same."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: In line 9, after the parentheses, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following language, "said patent to be issued upon the approval of said allotment and the schedule containing the same."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JEROME KENNERLY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8669) authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Jerome Kennerly for land allotted to him on the Blackfoot Reservation, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to Jerome Kennerly, allottee No. 773, on the Blackfoot Reservation, Mont., for the 80 acres of land allotted to him on said reservation under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L., p. 16).

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: In line 9 change the period to a comma and insert the following: "said patent to be issued upon the approval of said allotment and the schedule containing the same."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, after the parenthesis strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following language: "said patent to be issued upon the approval of said allotment and the schedule containing the same."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES T. FARRILL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1482) for the relief of James T. Farrill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BUILDING AT FORT DAVIS, ALASKA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 249) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to donate and grant certain buildings in Alaska to the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate and grant to the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church not exceeding three of the frame buildings on the abandoned Fort Davis Military Reservation in or near Nome, Alaska, the material so donated to be used for the erection of a hospital by said society for the use of white and native residents of the Nome district, Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURRY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

KETCHIKAN POST, NO. 3, AMERICAN LEGION.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8460) to authorize the occupation and use of certain lands in Alaska by Ketchikan Post, No. 3, American Legion, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, does anybody have charge of it?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Delegate from Alaska [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. MANN. This is to give permission to a post of the American Legion to erect buildings on public lands. I notice that the committee provides that in case the lands shall cease to be used for that purpose, they may revert or come back. It provides:

That the title of all buildings and improvements erected on said lands by the permittees shall remain on them at all times, and said permittees may remove said buildings or improvements at any time.

They might build a sewer there, perhaps. Is it not ridiculous to say that if they erect a building with a sewer there, they own the sewer if the land comes back to the Government?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will explain to the gentleman that that is tideland, with tidewater. There is no possibility of a sewer being built there.

Mr. MANN. What could be constructed there except the buildings?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Nothing. It is buildings constructed on piles.

Mr. MANN. What necessity is there for this language?

Mr. CURRY. It was inserted by the committee.

Mr. MANN. It has no business there. There is no objection to the removal of the buildings, but if they had something on the ground that is to remain there, they ought not to own it.

Mr. CURRY. An amendment can be offered to cover that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby is, authorized to permit Ketchikan Post, No. 3, American Legion, to erect a building upon and use and occupy, for post purposes, so much of that certain tract of land adjacent to Tongass Narrows, Alaska, described as follows: Beginning at corner No. 1, within the corporate limits of the town or city of Ketchikan, Alaska, from which a stone marking the intersection of Mission and Stedman Streets bears north 16 degrees 16 minutes east 22 feet distant, and United States locating monument No. 4 bears south 37 degrees 15 minutes east 1.289.27 feet distant; thence south 49 degrees 7 minutes east 100 feet along the southwest side of Stedman Street to corner No. 2; thence south 81 degrees 39 minutes west 165.30 feet to corner No. 3; thence north 8 degrees 21 minutes west 75.74 feet to corner No. 4, on the south side of Stedman Street; thence north 81 degrees 39 minutes east 100 feet along the southerly side of Stedman Street to corner No. 1, the place of beginning; containing 10,046.91 square feet.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 17, after the word "feet," by inserting the following:

"Provided, That the permit hereby authorized may not be assigned, shall be subject to such terms and conditions as to occupancy and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be revocable by the Secretary of the Interior, after due notice to the permittee, when, in his opinion, the public interests so require: Provided further, That the title to all buildings and improvements erected on said lands by the permittees shall remain in them at all times, and said permittees may remove said buildings or improvements at any time; and if the permit be lawfully revoked, a period not exceeding one year shall be allowed for removal of buildings or improvements."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out, in lines 23 and 24, on page 2, the words "and improvements."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 23, after the word "buildings," strike out the words "and improvements."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend, on page 3, line 1, by striking out the words "or improvements."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 1, of the committee amendment, strike out the words "or improvements."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk spell correctly the word "exceeding," in line 2 of page 3, and on line 3 what is supposed to be the word "buildings."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the spelling will be reformed.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURRY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will defer his point until I can call up and have considered No. 147 on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. On the Private Calendar?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes; on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have to wait.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I have one before that.

Mr. MANN. I will withhold temporarily.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a most excellent thing if it were possible to go through the Private Calendar and finish it to-morrow, taking up the bills that are not objected to. Gentlemen on both sides are interested in having that done. If we can do that, in all probability we can adjourn quite early to-morrow afternoon, and nothing else would be taken up.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that to-morrow we may consider bills on the Private Calendar that are unobjected to in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, in continuation of the Private Calendar, we may consider bills unobjected to in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman agree, if the House should by accident find itself without a quorum some time to-morrow and discovers it, the House would then adjourn?

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if it would be just the thing to call the Members here to-morrow if the point of no quorum should be made; but my hope is that we can begin at noon and go through the remainder of the Private Calendar without the point of no quorum being made.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, for the first time in seven years I have objected twice to-day. In justice to myself I feel that I should make a brief statement.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think any explanation is necessary. The gentleman was within his rights.

Mr. SEARS. I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold that a moment, I will ask the Chair to submit my request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Florida will withhold it, the Chair will put the gentleman's request.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois—

Mr. MONDELL. What objection has the gentleman from Florida to our going on with the Private Calendar?

Mr. SEARS. All I wanted was to explain, but the gentleman from Illinois did not seem to care—

Mr. MANN. I do not care a bit. The gentleman need not explain his actions in the House. His actions speak for themselves.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust the gentleman will withhold his point of no quorum long enough to allow the Speaker to submit my request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Florida insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, following out my usual custom, notwithstanding my genial, smiling friend from Illinois, I will withhold it. I wish to be more fair to him than he is fair to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, we have made more progress to-day on the Private Calendar than we have made at any time before during this session or the last session. I do not see what the great emergency is that would require two days' continuous consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. There will be another Friday coming a little later, when this will be in order.

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if we will find time for some weeks to come, and if I may remind my friend from Massachusetts, this is the first time we have taken up the Private Calendar since we reconvened.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but formerly we had a very good custom of having evening sessions for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. MONDELL. And the gentleman has his opportunity to object to any measure. There are some very meritorious measures that have been waiting a long time. I trust the gentleman from Massachusetts will not object.

Mr. REED of New York. There are soldiers' claims that have been waiting for months and months to be adjusted—claims of soldiers of the World War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. GENSMAN, indefinitely, on account of illness; and

To Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has twice prevented that to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, February 18, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

540. A letter from the Public Printer, transmitting a list of useless papers with request that authority be granted him to dispose of same; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

541. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, in the sum of $31,500 (H. Doc. No. 185); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

542. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, in the amount of $10,000 (H. Doc. No. 186); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KINKAID: Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands. H. R. 9606. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to extend the time for payment of construction charges on reclamation projects, units of reclamation projects, or in individual cases, for not exceeding three years, and for other purposes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 709). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. J. Res. 268. A joint resolution extending the operation of the immigration act of May 19, 1921; without amendment (Rept. No. 710). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: A bill (H. R. 10477) fixing the fees necessary to be paid by applicants for admission to the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, and providing that funds so derived shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIAMSON: A bill (H. R. 10478) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 10479) to amend the Judicial Code and to further define the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of appeals and of the Supreme Court, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCORMICK: A bill (H. R. 10480) to amend section 4 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and subsequent amendments thereof; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 10481) to incorporate the National Association of American World War Mothers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MONTAGUE: A bill (H. R. 10482) to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the eastern district of Virginia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 10483) to authorize the purchase of a suitable painting or portrait of Abraham Lincoln, within the limit of the appropriation herein named, to be placed on the House side of the Capitol; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 10484) granting a pension to Effie Edwards; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FAUST: A bill (H. R. 10485) for the relief of Edgar B. Willoughby, deceased; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 10486) granting an increase of pension to Jacob H. Martz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 10487) for the relief of Abraham Lincoln Harper; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KREIDER: A bill (H. R. 10488) for the relief of Peter Swartz; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H. R. 10489) granting an increase of pension to Susan J. Garland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10490) granting an increase of pension to William F. Rogers; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10491) granting a pension to Jesse Kivette; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10492) granting an increase of pension to Roy Elrod; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROSE: A bill (H. R. 10493) granting an increase of pension to Peter McVay; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SABATH: A bill (H. R. 10494) for the relief of William Knourek; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KNUTSON: Resolution (H. Res. 288) providing for payment of $900 to Fannie Arminda Cordell; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

4133. By the SPEAKER (by request): Resolution adopted by the Builders' Association of the Borough of Manhattan, New York City, urging that the Sherman antitrust act be amended so that upon conviction for a violation of the said statute the punishment therefor shall be imprisonment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

4134. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, opposing the pending bonus bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

4135. By Mr. BURROUGHS: Petition of the following motion-picture theater owners of New Hampshire, affiliated with motion-picture theater owners of America: Arthur M. Twombly, Opera House, Alton; Moore & Varney, Broadway Theater, Dover; G. M. Yeaton, manager Ioka Theater, Exeter; Couture Bros., owners of the Crown Theater, Manchester; Flora Kendall Edmond, Empire Theater, Manchester; W. S. Canning, Palace Theater, Manchester; Edward W. Fullerton, Premier Theater, Meredith; Philip L. Randall, Masonic Hall Theater, North Conway; Fred A. Couture, Scenic and Colonial Theaters, Rochester; Peter M. Gagne, Somersworth and Strand Theaters, Somersworth; and Joseph M. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 18, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Lord, with our waiting hearts we move toward Thee with reverence. In our unworthiness we have only joy, gratitude, and wonder to express. When we are weak we know the source of strength; when we stumble we know the hand that lifts, for our hope and trust are in Thee. Spirit divine keep us joined obediently and patiently to all our tasks, and always make Thy will effectual. Persuade us to accept Thy chastisements, and may they help us to a nobler life. Continue to arm us with truth, honor, and virtue, and thus sustain the ideals of a free people. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point.

Mr. BLANTON. I renew the point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas renews the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this call 299 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, you who were Members of the Sixty-fifth Congress I am sure remember still the tremendous fight carried on against the bill I introduced appropriating $1,500,000 for a hospital at Dawson Springs, Ky., contingent on the fact that the land was to be donated to the Government by the citizens. I am glad to say that that bill passed carrying that appropriation and that at this session of Congress $750,000 additional appropriation was passed, making a total of $2,250,000 for the erection of this hospital, which is now completed. It is composed of 22 buildings, each one of which is absolutely fireproof and pronounced by the officials of the Government who are now in charge as one of if not the best hospital in the United States of America to-day. [Applause.]

I am satisfied if you gentlemen could see that magnificent institution you would not be proud of the vote you cast against it. This hospital is to be dedicated next Wednesday, Washington's Birthday, and on behalf of the generous and patriotic citizens of Kentucky, who so liberally contributed of their means to buy the land upon which the institution is erected, I extend a hearty invitation to every Member of the House to be present on that occasion, and if any of you can not attend I want to say that in the future if you have ill health and want mineral water which is a panacea for all ills come to Dawson Springs. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its chief clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 77) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Clearwater, St. Joe, and Selway National Forests.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1010) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7158) to amend the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, so as to release appropriations for the completion of the acquisition of real estate in certain cases and making additional appropriations therefor, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2703. An act to allow the printing and publishing of illustrations of foreign postage and revenue stamps from defaced plates.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10009. An act to authorize the State of Alabama, through its highway department, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Moscow Landing, in the State of Alabama;

H. R. 9386. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near Pireway Ferry, county of Columbus, N. C.; and

H. R. 8818. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Pittsburgh, a municipal corporation of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near its junction with the Allegheny River in the city of Pittsburgh, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8010) to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont., in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following order:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2024) for the relief of Blanche Winters.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2703. An act to allow the printing and publishing of illustrations of foreign postage and revenue stamps from defaced plates; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1010. An act to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BLANCHE WINTERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following order:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 17, 1922.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate S. 2024, an act for the relief of Blanche Winters.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Committee on War Claims will be discharged from further consideration of this bill, and the bill will be returned to the Senate.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take up for consideration bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar, beginning at the point where we concluded yesterday, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House continue its consideration of the Private Calendar from yesterday, the bills to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSOLIDATION OF CERTAIN FOREST LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 77) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Clearwater, St. Joe, and Selway National Forests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon calls up the conference report; which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 77) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Clearwater, St. Joe, and Selway National Forests, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
JOHN E. RAKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
G. W. NORRIS,
H. L. MYERS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 77) for the consolidation of the forest lands within the Clearwater, St. Joe, and Selway National Forests, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report.

Senate amendment No. 1 would have permitted an exchange of lands within 6 miles of the exterior boundaries of the said forests. The elimination of the Senate amendment No. 1 confines the exchange to lands within said forests.

Senate amendment No. 2 makes it clear that the reservation includes oil.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
JOHN E. RAKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield and give us some explanation of this?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a simple proposition. It relates to an exchange of lands within the Clearwater, the St. Joe, and the Selway National Forests in the State of Idaho.

The House bill confined the exchange to lands within national forests. The Senate broadened that so as to embrace lands within 6 miles of the exterior boundaries of the forests. The Senate has receded from that amendment and that has been eliminated. The second amendment of the Senate, to which the House has agreed, is as follows: The House bill provided for a reservation to the United States of all of the coal and other minerals in the land. The Senate put in the word "oil," which really was not necessary, because the term "oil" is embraced in the language "other minerals," according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Burke v. Southern Pacific Railway, 234 U. S., 676. However, we thought it best to leave it in, to make it absolutely certain.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the call of the Private Calendar.

FORT SEWALL MILITARY RESERVATION.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9059) providing for the conveyance to the town of Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts, of Fort Sewall Military Reservation for public use.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are three House bills of this character on the calendar, two immediately following the bill under consideration. There is also a Senate bill covering all three of the propositions carried in the three House bills. Personally, I have no objection to the passage of the Senate bill, but it seems to me there is no use considering the House bill, and I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it might not be possible to take up the Senate bill at this time, in lieu of the House bills, by unanimous consent.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I intended to do as soon as unanimous consent was obtained to take up this matter. I was going to ask unanimous consent to take up the Senate bill instead of these three individual bills, because the Senate bill includes all three of them, and it would be unnecessary then for the individual bills to go through the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make that request?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I make that request now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have the bill reported?

Mr. MANN. Let us have the Senate bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2736) providing for the conveyance of certain unused military reservations in the State of Massachusetts to the city of Salem and the town of Marblehead.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the town of Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land, together with all structures and improvements thereon owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation known as Fort Sewall, situated at the west entrance to Marblehead Harbor, in the State of Massachusetts, and containing approximately 2½ acres: Provided, however, That the town of Marblehead shall not have the right to sell or convey aforesaid property nor to devote the same to any other than a public use; and in the event the said property shall not be used as above provided the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall revert to the United States.

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the city of Salem, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land, together with all structures and improvements thereon owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation known as Fort Lee, situated on Salem Neck, in Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, and containing approximately 2½ acres.

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the city of Salem, in the State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public park or other public use, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in those certain tracts of land, together with all structures and improvements thereon owned by the United States, embraced within the military reservation known as Fort Pickering, situated at Salem, in Essex County, in the State of Massachusetts, including a tract on Hospital Point and a portion of Winter Island, in the harbor, and containing an aggregate area of approximately 32 acres.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "acres," strike out the following language: "Provided, however, That the town of Marblehead shall not have the right to sell or convey aforesaid property nor to devote the same to any other than a public use; and in the event the said property shall not be used as above provided the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall revert to the United States."

Page 3, line 5, after the word "acres," insert the following: "Provided, however, That said conveyances shall be subject to the conditions and reversions herein provided for and shall be used for public park purposes, or other public use only, and shall be subject to the right of the United States at any and all times and in any manner to assume control of, hold, use, and occupy without license, consent, or leave from said city or said town any or all of said land for any and all military, naval, or lighthouse purposes, free from any conveyance, charges, encumbrances, or liens made, created, permitted, or sanctioned, thereon by said city or said town: Provided further, That the United States shall not be or become liable for any damages or compensation whatever to the said city or said town for any future use by the Government of any or all of the above-described land for any of the above-mentioned purposes: And provided further, That if said land shall not be used for the purposes herein above mentioned the same or such parts thereof not so used shall revert to the United States."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under the reservation of objection, I want to ask a question or two about the bill. It seems to me a departure from the rules that have regulated all of these military reservations. I do not know of any other instance where they have been donated to cities as public parks.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, the lands in all these cases were donated by the cities to the Government in the first instance, for the purpose of having the Government construct defensive works upon them. The Government plans to abandon these as forts. Part of the land has never been taken possession of by the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet on some of them I judge from the phraseology used there are improvements that have been made; there are buildings—structures that may be worth considerable money.

Mr. MANN. Of no special value, as I understand it.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. If I may answer the gentleman, those structures were put up by the local community on 22 acres of land that were donated by that community to the Government, and the Government handed it right back again, or at least the War Department did, under a provision for reversion which was in the original deed.

But now what they want is authority to make a quitclaim deed back of all these parcels of land, and in the Senate they put the three in one bill.

Mr. BLANTON. In reference to this 32-acre tract—

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Twenty-two acres.

Mr. BLANTON. It is spoken of as 32 acres.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. That is Fort Pickering.

Mr. BLANTON. And the other two tracts involved in this bill, each of which embraces about 3 acres of land upon which there could be structures and improvements in quite a large amount, and the gentleman says nothing—

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Well, I do not understand that there are any structures there except a lighthouse, which is owned by the United States, and which under this bill the Government has the privilege of continuing.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. As it is in my district, I think I can explain to the gentleman. I will say that in the case of Marblehead there are no structures, and it has been used as a public park since 1892. In the case of Fort Lee, there are no structures at all except the fortification, and it has long been used as a public park. All three of these tracts are on the sea, in a very picturesque and slightly position, and have been used for the benefit of the public since time immemorial, and the question only arises now because the Secretary of War has asked permission to dispose of these tracts which were no longer useful for war purposes, and on that account the people of the communities concerned, having enjoyed the right all these years, were anxious that the Government should dispose of them in such a way that the tracts might not come into the hands of speculators but might be used for the public by whom they have been so long enjoyed.

Mr. BLANTON. On the question of policy I am rather impressed with this idea. When we do get into war, which occurs once in a while at least, whenever the War Department thinks it needs 2½ acres here or 2½ acres there or 32 acres somewhere else, it takes possession of it in most cases and does not stop at how much the land is worth, and it takes possession of it in some instances at an enormous price. As soon as the war is over the War Department seems to want to get rid of it and thinks it might be donated to some cities for public parks, and then the further question of policy arises that we may be called upon later to maintain these public parks which we have donated to these cities, some of which the gentleman says are picturesque and which the people enjoy.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The gentleman is quite right, and it is because of that objection which he has made that this proviso was put in all of these bills which was not in all the Senate bills.

Mr. BLANTON. Have all three of these bills been investigated by the Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Every one of them.

Mr. BLANTON. It came from the Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean the Military Affairs Committee of the House.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Military Affairs Committee of the House made reports on all three of them?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. On all three by the House, and reported them independently of the Senate, where they were put in one bill, and now the desire is to have one bill, which was put through the Senate, accepted in place of those three individual bills.

Mr. BLANTON. Neither gentlemen, I understand, have any subsequent intention in years to come to ask the Congress to help provide maintenance for these public parks?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. No; that is taken care of in the proviso. The idea of the Military Committee is to put that proviso in all these classes of bills in the future.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Military Affairs Committee of the House has passed upon and favorably reported it, I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Yes; and I have charge of these bills on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again reported.

The amendments were again reported and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FROTHINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I also move to lay on the table the three House bills.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

LAND FOR PARK PURPOSES, CRAWFORD, NEBR.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8193) to amend the first proviso in the act entitled "An act to grant a certain parcel of land, part of the Fort Robinson Military Reservation, Nebr., to the village of Crawford, Nebr., for park purposes," approved June 25, 1906.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first proviso contained in the act entitled "An act to grant a certain parcel of land, part of the Fort Robinson Military Reservation, Nebr., to the village of Crawford, Nebr., for park purposes," approved June 25, 1906, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That the said tract shall be used for park and water-power purposes, and that not to exceed 5 acres thereof may also be used as a site for a pavilion to be used for the exhibition and sale of live stock and for auditorium purposes."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. N. CALHOUN AND ZAIDEE BOATNER CALHOUN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7862) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and patent certain lands to William S. N. Calhoun and Zaidée Boatner Calhoun, residents of Catahoula Parish, La.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and patent to William S. N. Calhoun and Zaidée Boatner Calhoun, residents of Catahoula Parish, La., the fractional west half of the east half of section 20, township 7 north, range 5 east, Louisiana meridian, containing 35½ acres, more or less, land which they and their grantors have occupied under claim and color of title, and of which they have had actual possession, beneficial use, and enjoyment, believing themselves to be owners in good faith for more than 30 years: Provided, That application for the purchase of the described tract of land be filed at the United States land office at Baton Rouge, La., within 90 days after the passage and approval of this act, and that no adverse claim thereto be officially of record as pending when the application is allowed and the sale consummated.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 9, strike out "four-tenths" and insert in lieu thereof "four one-hundredths."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FRANCES KELLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9275) for the relief of Frances Kelly.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Frances Kelly is hereby granted right of selection of 160 acres of nonmineral unreserved public lands of the United States, in lieu of lands described as follows: The west half of the east half of the east half of the northwest quarter of section 32, township 35 north, range 2 east, Boise meridian, for which patent was issued her upon her final homestead certificate, but which it subsequently appeared was included in the land patented under Indian allotments Nos. 1133 and 1134, in the Nez Perces Indian Reservation.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 3, after the word "That," insert "the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized in his discretion to issue patent to," and in line 4, strike out "is hereby granted right of selection of" and insert "for," and in line 7, after the word "States," insert "within the State of Idaho," and in line 9, after the word "quarter," insert "and the west half of the east half of the northwest quarter," and on line 2 of page 2, after the word "was," insert the word "partly."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ISRAEL BUTTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8358) for the relief of Israel Butts.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Northern Pacific Railway Co., upon its filing with the Secretary of the Interior a proper relinquishment disclaiming in favor of the United States all title and interest in or to the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter section 11, township 53 north, range 23 west, fourth principal meridian, in the Duluth, Minn., land district under its indemnity selection, list No. 551, embracing said tract, shall be entitled to select and receive a patent for other vacant, unreserved, nonmineral public lands of an equal area situate within any State into which the company's grant extends; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to permit, after the filing of such relinquishment by said railway company, the homestead entry of Israel Butts to remain intact as though said entry had been properly allowed, accept the proof offered, and duly issue patent thereon.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WINTHROP, MASS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9047) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to the town of Winthrop, Mass., a perpetual right of way over approximately 755 square feet of the Fort Banks Military Reservation for the purpose of widening Revere Street.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to grant to the town of Winthrop, Mass., a perpetual right of way over approximately 755 square feet of the Fort Banks Military Reservation for the purpose of widening Revere Street at or near the intersection of Hutchinson Street in said town of Winthrop, Mass., upon such location as the Secretary of War may approve, and subject to such conditions, restrictions, and reservations as the Secretary of War may impose for the protection of the reservation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

During the reading of the bill the following colloquy occurred: Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KEARNS. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. What has become of all the pension cases that have been passed by this House in the last year? None of them has been enacted into law. What has become of them?

Mr. FULLER. They are all pending before the Senate Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEARNS. Has the Senate Committee on Pensions acted upon these in any way?

Mr. FULLER. They have not reported any of them.

Mr. KEARNS. What is the trouble?

Mr. FULLER. Search me.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, there has been a change in the chairmanship of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and the new chairman expects to report very shortly all these bills that have been passed by the House.

Mr. KEARNS. When?

Mr. KNUTSON. At the first opportunity.

Mr. KEARNS. I certainly want to know what is to become of the bill when we pass it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to get himself elected to the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEARNS. I am satisfied with the House. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER. I understand there has been considerable trouble in getting a quorum of the Senate Committee on Pensions. Senators are on so many committees that they do not seem to have time to pay much attention to that committee.

Mr. MANN. No Pension Committee in either House pays any attention to a quorum.

Mr. FULLER. The excuse they have presented over at the other end of the Capitol for not reporting these bills is that they have not had a quorum.

Mr. KEARNS. As I understand it there are about a thousand of these cases that are now pending in the Senate. The bills have passed this House.

Mr. FULLER. We have done the best we could on this side, and we are not responsible for their inaction over there. I think as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] says under the new chairman we will very soon get action in the Senate on all of these bills.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MUNICIPAL PARK FOR THE CITY OF BUTTE, MONT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5762) providing for a municipal park for the city of Butte, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, in his discretion, upon application by the municipality of Butte, Mont., to designate and segregate for municipal recreational development any lands, not to exceed 3,600 acres, within the Deerlodge National Forest which, in his opinion, are available for such purposes, and he is hereby authorized to enter into such form of cooperation with the said municipal authorities as, in his opinion, will permit the fullest use of the lands for recreational purposes.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "lands," insert the words "not to exceed thirty-six hundred acres."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "establish," insert the words "lands so designated and segregated under the provisions of this act shall not be subject to the mining laws of the United States."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALFRED P. RECK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 858) for the relief of Alfred P. Reck.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if it is the practice where an officer in the Army has been designated for promotion and does not receive his promotion for some time to pay the difference in the salary between the time when he is designated for promotion and the time when he accepts the promotion?

Mr. REED of New York. I do not know what the practice is. We have had no bill just like this.

Mr. MANN. Of course, this sort of a case has arisen hundreds of times.

Mr. REED of New York. This boy was captured by the Germans, and that was the only reason why he was not in a position to receive his commission. He was in the red-hot battle at the Marne and was captured and held in a German prison camp, which prevented him from accepting his commission.

Mr. MANN. There might have been one of a hundred other reasons for not receiving the commission, and any of them might have been good reasons.

Mr. REED of New York. That was the reason given by the War Department in their communication.

Mr. MANN. I know. I have read it.

Mr. REED of New York. We investigated it very thoroughly, not only the subcommittee but the full committee, and we felt that it was a very meritorious case.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about that. Still a man usually is in luck who receives a promotion—not always. I did feel that it would be desirable to know whether where a man was promoted from one rank to a higher rank and for any reason did not accept his commission in the higher rank, we would then be called upon to pay the difference in salary between the lower rank and the higher rank for the time during which he waited. Of course, it was not through any fault of his, but these cases arise quite often.

Mr. REED of New York. This is the only one that has happened to come before our committee.

Mr. MANN. This may be the only case in which they have thought that they had the nerve to ask for the extra pay. Usually the officers are thankful to get the commission.

Mr. REED of New York. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Alfred P. Reck, of Lima, Ohio, formerly second lieutenant of Infantry, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $672.41, being the loss of pay incurred by him between July 15, 1918, and January 17, 1919, by reason of his inability, prior to January 18, 1919, to accept a commission as second lieutenant of Infantry issued June 1, 1918, because of being wounded and taken prisoner by the Germans on July 15, 1918.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. REED of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PENINSULAR & OCCIDENTAL STEAMSHIP CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1941) to provide for the refund of entrance and clearance fees erroneously collected by the customs authorities from the Peninsular & Occidental Steamship Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] what merit there is in this proposed legislation?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I am glad my colleague asked that question. In 1919 I introduced a bill for the relief of this company. The Claims Committee referred it to the department, and I understand a favorable report was made by the department, although I have not that report. I have a letter from my colleague [Mr. EDMONDS] stating that the claim was referred and favorably reported by the department, but we were unable to get consideration. In 1920 I again introduced the bill, but again we could not reach it. The bill has now been reached and reported, and if the gentleman will look on page 3 of the report that he has in his hand he will find that Mr. Hoover writes Mr. EDMONDS as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 28, 1921.

Hon. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: I am in receipt of your letter of May 23 inclosing copy of H. R. 1941, for the relief of the Peninsular & Occidental Steamship Co., and beg to inclose herewith a memorandum from the head of the Bureau of Navigation on this subject.

Yours, faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

The memorandum says that the company is clearly entitled to a refund in the amount asked for in the bill, to wit, $7,717.20, as being the amount erroneously collected.

My colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE], reported this bill, and at my own suggestion—perhaps I should not have done so—you will notice in the report that the claims properly sworn to were not incorporated in the report, but were on file with the committee. This was done solely to save extra cost of printing. I have the papers here, and you will note it would have taken many pages to print it, and so, as stated, to save expense I requested that it be not printed.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Why did not they apply for a refund within the time?

Mr. SEARS. They have.

Mr. WALSH. Under the law if they had applied within a year the department would have been in a position to act upon it. They did not do it, and now they are trying to get it by legislation.

Mr. SEARS. The letter of the auditor says there was voluminous correspondence carried on with the department which caused considerable delay. In 1914 the papers were presented to the collector of customs trying to get a refund. Then later on, I believe in 1915 or 1916, they submitted it to one of our Senators, and he took the matter up for them, but for some reason no action was taken—just why I can not tell.

Mr. WALSH. Because it was after the year had elapsed. It was 1914, two years after the last trip and too late for the department to act upon it.

Mr. MANN. The law allows a refund to be made where application is made within a year.

Mr. SEARS. That is true.

Mr. MANN. These people could have secured the money without a special act of Congress, but they just neglected to file their claims.

Mr. SEARS. I think they filed their claims.

Mr. MANN. No; if they had filed their claim the department could have acted upon it. Of course, they filed their claim, but it was after the year had expired. They were allowed the claim, and that is the only merit the bill has.

Mr. SEARS. They filed a claim for a refund January 6, 1915, which would be within the year.

Mr. MANN. They filed a claim October 14, 1914, but they paid money long before that. The first claim they filed according to the report was October 14, 1914, and the collections commenced in 1909. They may have kicked about it, I do not know, but they did not file claims. However, I think the money was wrongfully collected, and it may be that they were doing such a prosperous business with Cuba at that time that they did not attend to it. It was not quite as prosperous then as it has been since. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. They only had a triweekly service then, and now it is three times a day. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEARS. I hope my colleagues will not object. This money was paid to the Government without law, and therefore the Government is not entitled to it, and I assure you the bill has been carefully considered by the committee. Senator Bryan's secretary died, and the papers could not be located, which caused a further delay, as new papers had to be prepared.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, may I state to my colleagues that the equities of this case are clearly with the company. On yesterday gentlemen had an opportunity to raise objection to a similar bill. It seems to me if we are going to use one company in one way, we ought to use the other equally as well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Peninsular & Occidental Steamship Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,717.20, covering entrance and clearance fees erroneously collected by the customs authorities at Key West, Miami, and Knights Key, Fla., during the period from January 3, 1909, to February 20, 1914, and in violation of section 2792, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act approved May 28, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 424).

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SEARS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REIMBURSEMENT OF SACRAMENTO, CALIF., FOR PART COST OF SACRAMENTO WEIR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9048) to authorize the California Débris Commission to reimburse the city of Sacramento, Calif., for money expended by said city in the construction of the Sacramento weir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from funds appropriated and contributed for the control of floods on the Sacramento River in pursuance of the flood control act, approved March 1, 1917, the California Débris Commission is hereby authorized to pay to the city of Sacramento, Calif., the sum of $167,557.08, as equitable reimbursement of money expended by the said city in the construction of the weir at the head of the Sacramento by-pass leading into the Yolo by-pass, such structure being an essential part of the project adopted by the aforesaid act as set forth in House Document No. 81, Sixty-second Congress, first session, as modified by the report of said commission submitted February 8, 1913, approved by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 5, Sixty-third Congress, first session, in so far as said plan provides for the rectification and enlargement of river channels and the construction of weirs.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 7 strike out the figures "$167,557.08" and insert in lieu thereof "$161,557.08."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CUREY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

H. C. MULLINS AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1009) for the relief of H. C. Mullins, his wife and minor children.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I was going to offer a committee amendment to strike out all on line 1, page 2, after the figures "1918."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] wants an opportunity to explain this bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, in June, 1918, there was quite a serious airplane accident at the R. M. A. field, in Tarrant County, Tex.

An airplane had been disabled through the faulty operations of the engine and had been assigned to an experienced pilot in order that he might correct the troubles that existed. That pilot had made several flights with this machine. The plane was not assigned to any cadet on account of its condition. He tried to rise from the ground in the vicinity of a public road, skirted on each side by a barbed-wire fence, and he allowed one and one-half times the usual distance for rising. There were a great many people assembled on this public road witnessing the flying at the field. The machine, although it was in the hands of an experienced operator, lacked the power to clear the fence, even by zooming. That was resorted to unsuccessfully. The undercarriage of the airplane picked up the top strand of the barbed wire fence and pulled it across some people who were there as spectators on the public highway in their automobiles. One little girl of a different family from this, named Blanche Utley, was horribly scarred and disfigured for the remainder of her life. During the Sixty-sixth Congress a bill for her relief was passed by both bodies and approved by the President, carrying $5,000. At the time of the introduction of that bill I did not know of these other unfortunate circumstances attendant upon the same accident, but shortly afterwards I learned of this case and introduced the bill now under consideration. The injuries here complained of and for which relief is sought were sustained by the family of H. C. Mullins. His wife was severely injured, and the report of the surgeon to the commanding officer at Tallaferro Field showed that she sustained a lacerated wound of the right breast 2 inches long, 2 inches deep, sutured; multiple scratches of the right breast, superficial; incised lacerated wound 2 inches long, lower upper right arm, sutured multiple scratches on lower right arm, involving skin only. The child, Ina Mullins, aged 3, suffered a lacerated wound on the right cheek, lateral side of nose, 1 inch long, sutured; wound on left cheek, obliquely from side of nose—

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have read the report.

Mr. LANHAM. Then, in addition to that, the 4-months-old infant was killed or died from the effects of the injuries. A board of investigation regularly appointed through military channels passed upon this case and made recommendations for financial compensation, and it is upon that report that the bill is based. The only change that has been made in that amount by the Committee on Claims has been a reduction of the compensation because of the injuries resulting in the death of the infant child, and that is reduced from $5,000 to $2,000, and a committee amendment will be offered to that effect.

I do not think this case is analogous from the standpoint of policy to the cases of which complaint was made yesterday. It is a different kind of accident. It grew out of the operation of a faulty machine, known to the Government to be faulty, a machine which was not assigned to any cadet but which was placed in the hands of an experienced pilot, who took, perhaps, every precaution he could to avoid accident. It was purely an accident, and yet it was the result of military operations. If any claim of this character could have merit, it seems that this must have.

Mr. MANN. There is no claim that there was any negligence on the part of the Government.

Mr. LANHAM. Negligence only to the extent that the Government knew the faulty nature of the machine. Every proper precaution was taken.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GLYNN. My recollection is that the officer who ran this machine said that he would not allow his cadets to use it because it was not working properly, and he went back one-half the distance farther from the road than he ordinarily would have gone because of the lack of lifting power in the machine.

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. The negligence, if there was any, was on the part of the people gathered to watch the machine, although possibly I would have done the same thing if I had been there.

Mr. LANHAM. They were on the public highway. They were not trespassing on the Government's property.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I know that. Why was not the report of the board printed in this report? A lot of testimony has been picked out, and, of course, one picks out the testimony one wants; but the committee has been careful to omit the report of the Army board on the subject.

Mr. LANHAM. As I say, there was a companion case to this which passed the Sixty-sixth Congress. That report was practically the same as this one. I have it here.

Mr. MANN. But I have not and other Members have not.

Mr. LANHAM. It is available through the committee and is now on the desk.

Mr. MANN. It is not even referred to in the report.

Mr. LANHAM. The letter of the Secretary of War referring it to the committee is in this report.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and it does not say anything.

Mr. LANHAM. The committee evidently thought that the printing of this voluminous report—

Mr. MANN. Oh, the report is not voluminous.

Mr. LANHAM. There are extracts from it that are pertinent to the various features of it.

Mr. MANN. Extracts are from testimony taken, but that is not the report of the Army board.

Mr. LANHAM. The committee has the report here.

Mr. MANN. It may be of great value to the committee, but not much to the rest of us.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Was one of these injured persons a child 3 years old?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. You could not in any court attribute negligence to a child 3 years old.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not think so, and in addition to that I do not suppose there was a flying field in the United States where the people did not assemble and sometimes even trespass on the Government's property.

Mr. MANN. Oh, if people had gone up here on Columbia Road near Eighteenth Street, after the Knickerbocker Theater roof had fallen in, and had insisted upon staying there close to the walls, they would have been grossly negligent, even though they were on the public street.

Mr. LANHAM. I would say to the gentleman that the distinction in this case is that the public had no notice of the faulty nature of this airplane.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not criticize the people for being there. That is human nature. Still they do take chances when they go to such a place. However, I talked over this case with the lady from Oklahoma [Miss ROBERTSON], and she convinced me that it ought to pass, although I think that the committee which has the report from the War Department of an investigating board ought to include that report in its report to the House.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say that the lady from Oklahoma has been very much interested in the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to H. C. Mullins, of Fort Worth, Tex., the sum of $7,522.50, in full compensation for injuries sustained by the said H. C. Mullins; his wife, Ovella Nelson Mullins; his minor child, Ina Flora Mullins; and for the death by reason of said injuries sustained by his minor child, Leona Pearl Mullins, due to an airplane, owned by the United States Government, while engaged in practice flying in Tarrant County, Tex., on the 20th day of June, A. D. 1918, striking a barbed-wire fence near an automobile standing in a public road in which said parties were sitting, knocking said barbed wire loose from said fence and against the occupants of said automobile in such manner and way as to injure and cut the said H. C. Mullins, his said wife, and two minor children, and from which said injury and cutting the said minor child, Leona Pearl Mullins, died.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, is there not a committee amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$7,522.50" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$4,522.50."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after "1918," in line 1, page 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the figures "1918," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN B. H. WARING.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 667) for the relief of John B. H. Waring.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. MANN. However, I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been twice passed by the Senate, three times reported unanimously by the Senate committee and has been reported unanimously twice by the committee of this House. That upon its face would indicate a great deal of consideration. The committee, I may add, has given it very long and earnest consideration, developing facts which in ordinary equities of life would justify the relief that is proposed by this bill.

Capt. Waring was a surgeon in the Army, faithful in the performance of his duties. By reason of service, as I now recall, in the Philippine Islands, he incurred a serious trouble of the eye known as solar retinitis, resulting from rays of the sun in that climate. He was taken before a board for examination, I think, once or twice and finally he was pronounced cured and immediately assigned to duty in a similar climate, and under circumstances that brought on the original trouble, against which he made a very respectful protest, urging his willingness to serve anywhere within the Temperate Zone or outside the peculiar sun rays incident to a tropical climate. I should observe that that protest was unavailing. Of course, he broke down again. He was examined by surgeons of the Army, I regret to say, who knew nothing of this particular trouble. They were not experts upon this remarkable and infrequent disease. He was examined by the most eminent surgeons in America outside of the Army, and they all agreed, without knowing the opinion of each other, in the same identical conclusion. He was then accused of malingering by virtue of his physical inability to perform his service, a charge wholly unfounded. Then he was brought before a retiring board for temporary disability, brought before that board to consider only his physical infirmity, when during the progress of the proceedings the allegation was shifted to congenital mental nervousness, not theretofore preferred even by implication in any of the proceedings. He then asked for a continuation of his case in order to bring evidence to refute this charge or allegation against him. No heed whatever was given to the request or protest, but the board, having only the legal power to retire him temporarily, went beyond its legal scope and discharged him permanently from the Army, a cruel finding and an unauthorized finding.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by "permanently retired"? What does he mean by that expression?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I mean by that he was entirely put out of the Army.

Mr. MANN. That is not being retired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman is correct; Waring was wholly discharged from the Army. The Judge Advocate General said:

It is at least open to doubt whether such a conclusion wholly retiring Capt. Waring is altogether just to the officer.

Now, this bill passed the Senate twice, has been reported twice by this House. I may be mistaken, but in my judgment, after consideration of the facts and the equities of the case, the whole treatment of this officer has been pathetic in its cruelty and he should have his remedy.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman further reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN. I would like somebody who knows something about this report to tell us about some things that are not in it.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that with more than 10 years' experience on the Committee on Military Affairs I do not believe that any case that has been handled by that committee during my service has received as much careful thought as this case. Capt. Waring served in the Philippine Islands, and contracted disease of the eye referred to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] because of the sun glare in that particular section. He was sent back to the United States for treatment. In a hospital in California he received treatment at the hands of an Army surgeon, who severely burned his eyes and rendered him almost blind.

He then went to a civilian surgeon, and there the trouble started. The testimony and the records in this case from that time on up verify that statement. His securing civilian treatment seemed to arouse the ire of certain officers of the Medical Department, and he was given to understand that his days in the Army were numbered.

After he was reported to be able to perform duty, he requested that he be sent to some other place than the South, but he was sent to the Hawaiian Islands. And again, when he was placed in a hospital and requested to be placed in a dark room, because of the condition of his eyes, he was placed in an enameled room, where the room and everything in it was white. Then he was charged with malingering. Those charges, as I now recall, were not sustained.

I do not now remember all the details of the case. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAIG] reported the bill, and I have not followed it as carefully as I would a bill that I had reported myself, but if my memory serves me aright—and if it does not some member of the Committee on Military Affairs will correct me—he was once discharged or found guilty by a court-martial, which was not confirmed by the War Department, and then this board was assembled to pass upon his case. One of the members of the board was brought from the Mexican border to Chicago, I believe it was; another one from the Pacific coast.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And brought forward to try this special case of Capt. Waring?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes; to try this special case for Capt. Waring. They stated that they were not experts upon diseases of the eye. That is in the record that is before the committee.

Each of the two witnesses who testified before this board made the statement that he was not an expert on diseases of the eye. The board was assembled, apparently in order to get the man out of the Army—if they retired him for disabilities incurred in line of duty they must place him upon the retired list with retired pay—therefore, to his surprise and to the surprise of everybody else who has looked into the records of this case, they charged that his trouble was congenital, that he had inherited it, and had it before he entered the service. Witnesses had testified that they were not experts upon diseases of the eye, and when they brought this charge he asked for a continuance of the case. They refused to grant a continuance. He then asked them to defer action long enough to give him an opportunity to file testimony in rebuttal. That request was not granted.

I will say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, that of all cases of railroading that I have ever seen in the Military Establishment or any other establishment I think this is the most glaring one. It started and was carried on to the final result because this man secured civilian treatment after he had been made practically blind by an Army surgeon.

Mr. MANN. Both gentlemen and the report make a serious charge against the War Department, against the officers of the Army. Now, do these gentlemen think that we ought to approve their indictment against the Army without even having a statement from the Army on the subject? Without particulars to support it the Congress is going to say that the Army railroaded a man out of the Army under the most unjust conditions, and has not even asked the War Department for the particulars.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hearings contain full information on this case.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to hunt up the hearings.

Mr. FIELDS. I want to say that I am not indicting the War Department.

Mr. MANN. You have indicted the War Department and the Army of gross injustice.

Mr. FIELDS. I want to say without reservation that the board that tried this officer—each member of that board, and the men who had to do with this deal—ought, each one, to be fired out of the Army, and if I had my way I would fire them all out.

Mr. MANN. That shows the gentleman's feeling against the department.

Mr. FIELDS. Oh, I have no feeling against the department, but against the men who did this thing.

Mr. MANN. The board was not the last tribunal in this case. It went up to the Secretary of War, and it went up to the President of the United States and was approved by him.

Mr. FIELDS. The President of the United States evidently was not in possession of the facts.

Mr. MANN. That is an accusation of neglecting to let the President know the facts. That is another accusation against the Army. I think they ought to have a chance to reply to it.

Mr. FIELDS. Right in that connection, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this report was written by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAIG], of the Committee on Military Affairs; and those of us who have served with him for years on that committee know that that gentleman is not going to let any unjust indictment against the War Department go unchallenged.

Mr. MANN. I challenge it.

Mr. FIELDS. He knows the record; he knows what it is. I will say that in my opinion the report is not as full as it ought to be. There are many facts that ought to be in the report that are not contained in it.

Mr. MANN. I never heard of this gentleman before, but I understand that Capt. Waring has been around urging his bill, and evidently he is a persuasive talker. He may have a good case. I do not know.

Mr. FIELDS. I have never seen Capt. Waring.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has seen some one who is prosecuting his case for him.

Mr. FIELDS. I have seen his father some four or five times, and I have read everything in connection with this case.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not read everything in connection with every case in his committee by a long shot. Somebody with a persuasive tongue got the gentleman to read the evidence in this case.

Mr. FIELDS. The persuasion of no man caused me to reach the conclusion I have reached. The evidence in the record of the case caused me to reach that conclusion.

Mr. MANN. I do not take much stock in the charge that a discharged officer makes, that the Army has railroaded him out of the Army. It may be true sometimes. I certainly would not vote to indorse such a proposition without hearing a statement from the Army in regard to it, and that is what we are asked to do here.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for just one statement?

Mr. MANN. If my distinguished friend from Ohio has been captured by this, I want to hear him.

Mr. FESS. I have not been captured; but in view of the fact that Capt. Waring lives in my district, I think it proper to say that he has not been in Washington. At least I have never seen him.

Mr. MANN. He has somebody who is very active in his behalf. A man who gets a bill passed three or four times through the Senate and reported three or four times from the House Committee on Military Affairs, which has great numbers of bills before it that it never reports at all, has not been sleeping on his rights.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will plead guilty to the charge that I have appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs, where there were very liberal hearings on this case, and where they did me the honor to listen to me for half an hour on the subject.

Mr. MANN. I do not wonder at that. I would listen to the gentleman for two hours on any bill with great pleasure to myself.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There must have been a great deal of merit in the bill, or they would not have reported it after listening to me for half an hour.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman can talk for an hour on any bill without any merit in it with much pleasure to all those who hear him. [Applause.]

Mr. MONTAGUE. I regret that the gentleman has not looked into this case, because I am sure if he had he would favor the bill.

Mr. MANN. I have not examined this case at all, except the report that is made, and naturally I have a feeling against Congress sticking up a man and putting him on the retired list of the Army just because he wants to go there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman is mistaken. He did not want to go on the retired list.

Mr. MANN. I will say that when such serious charges are made against the War Department there will have to be some reply from that department. I want to know whether they admit or deny those charges.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill remain on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. It does remain on the calendar.

Mr. KEARNS. And that the privilege be given of filing a supplemental report.

Mr. MANN. In order to file a supplemental report you will have to recommit the bill to the committee.

Mr. KEARNS. I do not want it recommitted. I want it to remain on the calendar. How then may an additional report be filed in the case?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Bring it in.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can introduce a bill in slightly different words and have a report on that, and then when the present bill is reached he can ask unanimous consent to substitute the modified bill.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. On what subject?

Mr. FREAR. On the soldiers' bonus.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HEIRS OF OSCAR CHRYSLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3346) for the relief of the heirs of Oscar Chrysler.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Birdseye Knox Chrysler, Laura A. Chrysler, Harriet L. Chrysler, and Frederick Knox Chrysler, widow and minor children of and heirs at law of Oscar Chrysler, late surgeon in charge at the National Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee, Wis., who was killed while in discharge of his official duty on October 29, 1913, without fault or negligence on his part.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 5, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,400."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERHILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FRANK WILLIAM BROWN AND CLARA BRYAN BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5634) for the relief of Frank William Brown and Clara Bryan Brown.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to Frank William Brown and Clara Bryan Brown in full for all claims they or either of them may have against the Government on account of the death of their son, Harry Brown, who was fatally injured in or near the city of Orange, in Orange County, Tex., on the 23d day of March, 1918, by being struck by a falling airplane, then and there owned and operated by the Government of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Box, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. SLAINE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9069) for the relief of William H. Slaine.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman reporting this bill and the next one whether this claim for reimbursement is merely for damages to the automobile or is to compensate the owner for loss of the use of his automobile?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is merely to compensate the man for the damages to the automobile itself. No personal injuries whatever are included.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say in compliment that this claim is reasonable. Yesterday we had a man who refused to take the award determined by the department as the real damages. He wanted damages in addition for rent of a car which had been junked and was later exchanged at a higher value than it was worth.

Mr. MCKENZIE. There is no use going into that, but that is not a fair statement of that claim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William H. Slaine the sum of $475 for damages to his automobile by a mail truck belonging to the Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LINTHICUM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EUGENE FAZZI.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3461) for the relief of Eugene Fazzi.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Eugene Fazzi, the sum of $2,500, as compensation for the loss of a foot on March 8, 1916, while in the discharge of his duty as a deckhand on the steamship General Joseph E. Johnston, in the service of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "2,500" and insert "768."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LEHLBACH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, in 8-point type, a memorial address on the life of Frances E. Willard delivered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, Hon. A. P. NELSON, in Statuary Hall of the Capitol, on February 17, 1922.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD, DELIVERED BY HON. A. P. NELSON, OF WISCONSIN, IN STATUARY HALL OF THE CAPITOL, FEBRUARY 17, 1922.

Madam President, ladies, and gentlemen, we meet to-day in this "Hall of Fame" surrounded by statues in bronze and marble of the great heroic and sublime spirits of our noble past, to pay a tribute of respect and love to the memory of the life of one of its supreme characters, the gentle, brave, courageous, and heroic Frances E. Willard.

Frances E. Willard is the first and only woman in our Nation to be honored by a place in our national temple of fame and glory. She was born at Churchill, N. Y., September 28, 1839, and died in New York City shortly after midnight, February 17, 1898.

Her marble statue, chiseled and fashioned in its marvelous beauty and perfection by the hand of Miss Helen Farnsworth Mears, of Wisconsin, was placed here by the great Commonwealth of Illinois on February 17, 1905, as its glowing tribute to one of its foremost citizens.

Frances E. Willard's early life was spent in the rugged pioneer wilds of Wisconsin, near Janesville. Thus this great life, springing from the noble stock of New England Puritan ancestry and reared in the privations of the rugged pioneer life of our Western States, laid the foundation for her iron will, her unyielding courage, and her matchless achievements, and enabled her to write her name among earth's immortals, and as the foremost woman of her generation.

She achieved renown and undying fame in every sphere in which she labored and applied her marvelous and matchless gifts. But she stands out preeminent and triumphant as the leader in the field of moral and spiritual reform, and the "more abundant life." She was the vigorous organizer and inspiring leader in moral, social, educational, and political reforms. Temperance, equal suffrage, social purity, broader education, and a nobler home life found in her their great advocate and successful leader.

Frances E. Willard's range of activities touched every sphere of human uplift. She was brilliant as a teacher, preacher, author, orator, editor, lecturer, and organizer. But her greatest achievement was, no doubt, her wonderful leadership of women throughout the world in the capacity of president of the National and World Woman's Christian Temperance Unions.

Through this organization she did much to reunite the spirit of the North and South who met around a common cause and clasped hands in their united efforts of all the best and noblest endeavors of womanly forces for the moral, social, and spiritual uplift of home and native land. Yea, "the great thought of her great heart was to gather the women of the world" for a worldwide effort to save childhood and rescue manhood and womanhood from sin, misery, and shame, and to make the world a cleaner and safer place in which to live and labor for "God, home, and native land."

Her great ambition and noble aspirations were to unite the Christian womanhood of the world to fight for a larger and truer interpretation of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, to the end that we might secure not only for our own beloved Nation but for all the world a sweeter childhood, a more consecrated fatherhood, and a more holy and devoted motherhood. Her great epigram, "The golden rule of Christ will bring the golden age to man," is indeed epitomized in her golden words and noble deeds, the outward expressions of her inner great and noble soul.

The spirit of Frances E. Willard to-day inspires not only womankind but all mankind to loftier ideals and greater achievements. She has helped to make all the streams of our national life flow swifter, purer, and nobler to the end that under our glorious Government all citizens shall be accorded a freer course in the pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness.

She helped to give to the world a better discipline, a richer scholarship, a finer culture, a deeper patriotism, and a more consecrated character. It is not too much to say that our civilization to-day is abler in intellect, purer in heart, and stronger in civic and national righteousness because of Frances E. Willard's inspiring and self-sacrificing life and service.

The three paramount forces of our civic and national glory—the intellectual, the ethical, and the spiritual—found their highest expression in the noble life and labor of Frances E. Willard. With her high moral nature, she infused into her activities a moral and spiritual atmosphere that caused the seeds of noble character to blossom into the flowers of brave and illustrious deeds.

She led in the great task of making the principles of the meek and lowly Nazarene a living, breathing, and pulsating power in our civic, State, and national life.

Ah, if I could walk to-day through the floral gardens of the world and be permitted to pluck the flowers of rarest beauty and sweetest perfume, and then could "select from the crowns of kings and queens the rarest jewels," I would arrange them with the sweet roses of love, sacrifice, and service, and fashion them into a more glorious crown and place it upon the radiant brow of Frances E. Willard, "America's uncrowned queen."

In her ministrations she touched millions of lives and did more to elevate, sweeten, and change the moral purposes of mankind than any other woman of her generation. Her effort was to touch the home and the child, the cradle of the Nation's safety and perpetuity. Many of the great reforms for which she plead and fought so heroically have been written into our Constitution and national statutes.

To-day, in this solemn presence, in the memorial service of this brief hour, no poor words of mine can adequately express our love and admiration for this lofty soul and inspiring genius, who though dead in body yet lives in soul and spirit to ever bless and inspire civilization and mankind. We praise God to-day for her life and service which forever go on. Truly, we crown her to-day and every day "the mother of true reforms; the brave champion of the oppressed; the great leader and queen of womankind." Her life is an inspiration, her achievements a benediction, and to-day we unite with millions to do her homage. Her name will forever shine as one of the brightest stars in the galaxy of the world's foremost leaders in the uplift of humankind, and this statue stands to-day for the commemoration of all that is "truest, best, and divinest in American womanhood."

O, pure white life divine,
Translated into everlasting day,
Thou shalt pass never from our hearts away,
For Christ's own loves were thine.

Her spirit to-day beckons us all to higher purposes and nobler resolves, and to sing with Oliver Wendell Holmes:

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll,
Leave thy low-vaulted past,
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

EDWARD SHORT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 546) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay war risk insurance to the foster parents of Edward Short.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman who reported the bill make some explanation as to the reason why we should appropriate this money at all?

Mr. BULWINKLE. My recollection is that this young man's father and mother died when he was quite young, and he lived with Charles A. Thornton and his wife, Elizabeth Thornton, who supported, maintained, and educated him. He enlisted in the Army and took out a life insurance policy, payable to his estate. Upon his death he had no father or mother and no next of kin that could be found. His foster parents were very poor and in needy circumstances. Mr. Mason, then Representative from Illinois, who is now deceased, introduced this bill, and upon recommendation of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and other recommendations I reported the bill from the subcommittee.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the deceased soldier did not designate any beneficiary?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; the policy was made payable to his estate, and he left no will. Under the law no one could draw the money.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. When this man died leaving the insurance to his estate, claims were filed by three sets of people for that money. One were the foster parents, one was somebody else who claimed to be related, and the other was somebody else, I suppose, who claimed to be related. If we pay the money now to the foster parents, under the law can somebody else who is an heir of this man sue in the Court of Claims and get judgment for the payment to him, the heir?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I do not think so; I do not think you will have that contingency. If the gentleman will notice, on page 2 of the report, under the war risk insurance act as originally enacted, foster parents were not within the permitted class of beneficiaries, and Short could not designate Mr. and Mrs. Thornton as beneficiaries.

Mr. MANN. That does not touch what I am asking about. A man designates himself and he dies; his heirs are entitled to the money, are they not?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If we pay the money to somebody else, can the heirs still recover the money?

Mr. BULWINKLE. In this particular case they have never been able to locate any heirs. And it is but right that the Thorntons should receive the benefit of the insurance.

Mr. MANN. People have claimed that they were the heirs; perhaps they were unable to prove the relationship. Ten thousand dollars lying around is quite a temptation. Ought not the bill to provide that the money shall be paid to the foster parents and not to anybody else?

Mr. BULWINKLE. We would accept an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, before we get to the amendable state, would not this precedent open up many cases where the Government would be called upon to pay insurance where the deceased soldier left no designated beneficiary and made it payable to the estate?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Suppose it does; how is the Government hurt?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because the original intention of the war risk insurance act was merely for the benefit of certain designated beneficiaries; it was not intended originally that the war risk should be on the same scale or the same plan as the ordinary life insurance. There are many persons who failed to take out insurance because of the limitations that then characterized the war risk insurance. Why should we vote $10,000 which under the law as it existed at the time of the soldier's death did not permit to be paid to the foster parents?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Because we accepted the man's premiums all the time. It is a debt that the Government owes to his estate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to go over this matter in detail, and for the time being I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

L. A. McMULLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1892) for the relief of L. A. McMullen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the policy of the Committee on Claims whenever a public officer loses his clothing by fire to have the Government reimburse him for the clothing?

Mr. UNDERHILL. This does not establish a precedent. It has been done. This fire fighter was told where to leave his clothing. It was through no fault of his or negligence on his part that his clothing was lost.

Mr. MANN. It was through no fault or negligence on the part of the Government either. Does the Government insure a man's clothing when he goes into the employ of the Government?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not necessarily, but the Government does take care of the equipment and clothing, whether it be civilian clothing or a uniform, of a man in the National Guard. If there was a fire in an armory, the Government used to take care of that.

Mr. MANN. The Federal Government did not. I do not know what the State governments may have done.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The man was performing a service for the Government, for the people, and he lost his clothing while in the performance of that duty, through no fault of his. It seems to the committee that he has made out a very fair case.

Mr. MANN. I supposed that when he went into the employ of the Government to fight fires he knew that he would have to do something besides just look out for his clothing, that he had other duties to perform. I do not know whether we have that policy or not. I have no desire to interfere with any policy. It may be that we ought to insure the clothing. That question has come up a great number of times, and usually it has not been allowed. I will not say that it ought not to be allowed in this case.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Here was a very exceptional circumstance. The man left his clothing at the camp, where he supposed it was perfectly safe. It was later packed upon the backs of some mules. The mules were stampeded and the clothing was lost or destroyed. I do not know whether it was the fault of the Government that they supplied mules that were not controllable, that stampeded. We did not go into that question. It would be pretty hard to decide whether a mule supplied by the Government was at fault or not. Surely somebody was at fault, and not the man who lost his clothing.

Mr. MANN. If an accident happens anywhere, then the Government ought to pay for it, but if an accident happens to a poor citizen who is just a taxpayer, he has to stand the result of it. He does not get any help from the Government.

Mr. UNDERHILL. May I say that the committee this year has taken a little different attitude perhaps than it has taken heretofore, and where a citizen is injured through the fault of some Government agency the committee has considered the claim of that citizen as though the citizen himself were an employee of the Government. Through no fault of his own he has been injured, and has suffered damage or loss.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the committee has gone a great deal further than that. It was only a few years ago that the committee would not report any bill for personal injuries. Then the committee undertook to report bills upon the basis that the injured person was a Government employee and that the Government would allow an amount equal to but not exceeding a year's salary. Now the committee reports similar claims without regard to any negligence upon the part of the Government, but simply because somebody has been injured, if it is against the Government. If it is against the State or the city they do not get anything; if it is against a private corporation they do not get anything; if it is against a private individual they do not get anything; and where we used to say we would not pay any of these claims, we have now gotten to the position where we pay all of them. Perhaps that is right; I do not know.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think a citizen is entitled to as much consideration from the Government as one who happens to draw pay from the Government. We have established a policy in almost every State in this Union of paying workmen's compensation, whether the loss or injury happens through accident or design, or, in some instances, whether it happens through the fault of individuals. It simply is a question of whether the Government is going to meet obligations along a line which it expects from the States and which it has established itself through the workmen's compensation act, applying it to all of its employees, and whether or not we are going to give the citizens a measure of protection and justice also. I do not know exactly how far the gentleman would go. I congratulate Congress on taking a more humanitarian view of these questions than it did a few years ago. It used to be said that the king could do no wrong—that the Government could do no wrong—but we have begun to look at it from a different standpoint. There is no reason why the Government should get out from under in cases of injuries any more than an employer, or my own State, or my own city. The State of Massachusetts, the city in which I live, allow suits to be brought against them. The Government does not. In my city and in my State a citizen has same protection.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and they defend suits where they are not negligent, but we have gotten to the point where it does not make any difference, where any claim is good if it is against the Government.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman could see the hundreds of claims pigeonholed over in the Committee on Claims office—

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the Committee on Claims is doing exceedingly good and careful work. I do not want to be misunderstood. That is the reason they are putting through so many bills without anyone raising any question about them. Yesterday we passed 32 bills, and we have passed more to-day. That will be a record for the same length of time since I have been in Congress. It is owing to the efficiency of the Committee on Claims. Still, sometimes they let something slip by that ought to be more fully considered, and I shall object to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

J. A. LESLIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1764) for the relief of J. A. Leslie.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue in favor of J. A. Leslie a duplicate certificate of indebtedness for $1,000 in lieu of certificate of indebtedness No. 23115 for $1,000, dated December 19, 1918, and maturing May 20, 1919, alleged to have been destroyed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, after the word "directed," in line 4, strike out "to issue in favor of J. A. Leslie a duplicate certificate of indebtedness for $1,000 in lieu of certificate of indebtedness No. 23115 for $1,000, dated December 19, 1918, and maturing May 20, 1919, alleged to have been destroyed," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to redeem 4½ per cent United States Treasury certificates of indebtedness No. 23115 for $1,000, series 5-B, dated December 19, 1918, and maturing May 20, 1919, with interest from December 19, 1918, to May 20, 1919, in favor of J. A. Leslie, of Tazewell, Va., without presentation of the certificate, the said certificate of indebtedness having been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said J. A. Leslie, of Tazewell, Va., shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said certificate of indebtedness of the United States of America, in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost or destroyed certificate of indebtedness hereinbefore described."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the committee amendment be amended in this respect. Manifestly there is a typographical error in the word "certificates" in line 10. I ask that the "s" may be stricken from the word, so that it may read "certificate" instead of "certificates."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMES KELLY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7984) for the relief of James Kelly.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to former Master Sergt. James Kelly, Signal Corps, now a warrant officer in the United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of money, which amount is hereby appropriated, that has been paid by him from private funds in replacement of public funds for which he was responsible when a major, Signal Corps, United States Army, and acting as a financial agent at Port Newark, N. J., and which was lost through theft.

SEC. 2. That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Maj. Kelly the amount of difference between the amount to be paid to him in refund and the total shortage of $3,029.46 charged against him.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all the bill after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,029.46 to War-rant Officer James Kelly that has been paid by him from private funds in the replacement of public funds for which he was responsible when a major, Signal Corps, United States Army, and acting as a financial agent at Port Newark, N. J., and which was lost through theft."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MAUDE H. MOSHER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1274) for the relief of Maude H. Mosher.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice in the report of Secretary Baker that he says:

The present case of the claim of Miss Maude H. Mosher does not come within the class for which there is precedent for recommending to Congress the relief requested.

And in the opinion of the Acting Judge Advocate General the statement is made in the report:

The present case of the claim of Miss Maude H. Mosher does not come within the class of cases for which there is precedent for recommending to Congress the relief requested.

If the same were allowed, it would establish a precedent under which almost every personal-injury claim arising from a tort of an officer or an enlisted man of the Army might be presented to Congress, and for this reason I think the Secretary of War should submit the papers to Congress as requested with an expression of opinion that the case is one which according to precedent relief would not be given. Now, does the gentleman think we ought to pass a bill of that sort by unanimous consent without consideration at all?

Mr. GLYNN. I will say this, if the inquiry is directed to me.

Mr. MANN. It is directed to anybody who will answer it.

Mr. GLYNN. As the gentleman from Illinois has stated, if this claim were allowed we would be establishing under it almost every personal-injury claim arising from a tort of an officer or an enlisted man of the Army, but personally I am inclined to think that when there is an injury either to person or property which arises from the tort of a man in the employ of the United States that this Government ought not to hide behind its immunity, but place itself in a position where, if it or its servants have been the cause of that injury, we would be willing to settle just as any ordinary person would be.

Mr. MANN. If that be the case, if this is going to be the position taken by Congress, there ought to be some way of having the case tried to give the Government a chance under general legislation. It is perfectly patent to anyone that the Committee on Claims can not consider all the cases that arise where an accident or injury occurs to people of the United States in some governmental occupation. They do not attempt it. Now, if we are going to adopt the policy of giving everybody compensation, we ought to do that in some kind of general legislation where there will be a body constituted which can pass upon these things. Even if the Committee on Claims could consider all these cases, which it is not possible for them to do, they will not get them passed in Congress—

Mr. GLYNN. I do not think the Committee on Claims is very anxious to pass all the bills—

Mr. MANN. I understand that—

Mr. GLYNN. It is because there seems to be no other remedy.

Mr. MANN. That has never been the policy of the Government. If it is to be made the policy of the Government, does the gentleman consider that we ought to do it in the House with a few Members present, almost all of whom are interested in some bill on the Private Calendar, voting for every one that comes up practically by unanimous consent?

Mr. GLYNN. It is not our fault that it is unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Nobody is blaming the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact we have already passed on this calendar without objection bills on all fours with this. It is true the War Department was opposed to it. There is no difference in principle, however, between this bill and the one we passed yesterday by unanimous consent giving $5,000 to the husband of a woman who was killed by an automobile driven by an employee of the Post Office Department. In that case the gentleman from Wisconsin had the word "gross," as modifying the word "negligence," stricken out of the bill. In this case the War Department itself admits that there was gross negligence on the part of its employee. In this case the woman is permanently injured. In the other case the woman was killed. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois what is the distinction between the two cases?

I also wish to call his attention to the fact that last year he reserved the right to object to this very claim, and the bill passed the House last year but failed to pass the Senate. He did not then object to its consideration.

Mr. MANN. I will not undertake to say what the distinction is. We passed a bill here this morning to pay a family injured by an airplane operated under the Army, and we had a report from the War Department on the subject which was apparently favorable. Here is a report from the Secretary of War, not the present one, it is true, but the last one, a past one, in which he says that this is a precedent entirely new, and that if we allow this—that is what the acting Judge Advocate General says—if we allow this we will allow almost every case. I question very much whether, out of courtesy and kindness and friendship to the gentleman from Massachusetts, whom we all admire and love, we ought to let a bill go through that will saddle all these claims on the Government just because we like him.

Mr. DALLINGER. If the gentleman will yield still further, the statement of the Secretary of War is not correct. He was misinformed. Congress has repeatedly passed bills of this sort; Congress, since I have been here, has passed numerous bills of this character. Here is the case of a woman permanently injured through the gross negligence of an automobile chauffeur driving a truck belonging to the War Department. Yesterday we passed a bill giving $5,000 to the husband of a woman who was killed by an automobile operated by an employee of the Post Office Department, and, as the gentleman has said, to-day we passed a bill giving damages or compensation to the dependents of a man killed by the negligence of the operator of an airplane. In other words, the statement of the Secretary of War is not in accord with the facts—not that he made any intentional misrepresentation, but he was misinformed. Congress has established this precedent, and we have been following that precedent here.

Mr. MANN. I wonder if we have had any other case where we allowed large compensation just because the injured party imagined she was hurt?

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to what Gen. Crozier says. He says:

It is recommended, that if Congress should see fit to grant compensation in this case, the amount of such compensation be sufficient to cover all expenses incurred by the injured person on account of the accident; loss of wages during her illness, and any permanent disability, in any degree, resulting from the accident, as well as pain and suffering as adequately and accurately as may be; and in view of the considerations hereinbefore mentioned, it is the opinion of this office that such compensation should not exceed the sum of $5,000.

This bill calls for $2,500. So apparently Gen. Crozier did not think the woman's injury was imaginary.

Mr. MANN. In what sum did we pass the bill before?

Mr. DALLINGER. It was an annuity before; $25 a month for a period of not more than 10 years. I understand there was some objection to that form in the Senate. This bill provides for a lump sum of $2,500.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Maude H. Mosher the sum of $2,500 as compensation for injuries sustained by being knocked down and run over by an automobile truck belonging to the arsenal at Watertown, Mass.

With a committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "of," strike out the dollar mark and the blank and insert "$2,500, in full settlement against the Government."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LOUISA FROW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 982) for the relief of Louisa Frow.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Louisa Frow, widow of John Frow, who was killed as the result of an accident caused by a United States Navy seaplane, the sum of $1,200.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has already been given.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to have some information about that. I would like to ask whoever has charge of this bill how they came to decide on $1,200 as the amount in this case?

Mr. SEARS. I will say to my colleague that the bill as originally introduced was for the sum of $10,000. I introduced a bill some time ago, but the Senate passed the bill which we are now considering and allowed this lady only $1,200; and I, not desiring to have the bill go to conference, because she is 65 years old and the Red Cross is now assisting her, accepted the Senate bill and asked the Committee on Claims to report that amount. I want to call attention to the fact that yesterday we gave one claimant $5,000. This is only $1,200.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SEARS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

REMISSION OF DUTY ON CARILLON OF BELLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5495) to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. In the meantime I wish to make a few observations. I think that before we consider any more of these bills we ought to have present at least two of our Treasury watchdogs, because I think the one present will be overworked unless he is joined by a colleague.

In addition, I would like to say this, that this bill appears to be for the purpose of remitting the duties on some bells for the use of a church. If we are going to start a precedent and remit the duties on all bells to be imported by churches, the churches of every denomination will import bells; and if we enact this bill, the result will be that quite a hole will be cut in our revenue. I would like to hear from some one having the bill in charge some further facts concerning it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I shall be glad to give the gentleman from Oklahoma what enlightenment I think he may need. This bill does not establish any new precedent. The same thing has been done previously for churches. Such applications come in very seldom, and I think if the gentleman from Oklahoma would peruse the report accompanying this bill his objection would be entirely removed. The people for whom the importation is made have raised the money to pay for the bells by church societies and in various ways over a long period of years. As a rule, they are poor families of fishermen who brought over to this country certain customs from Portugal, which they would like to continue here. The Treasury Department is entirely agreeable to this remission of duty. It would make practically no difference to the Treasury of the United States, but would be a distinct hardship for the church.

Mr. HERRICK. I will say to the gentleman, upon his informing me that this is not a precedent, but that such action has been taken in the past, I think it is a very bad precedent and this would be a very good time to discontinue it. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TREADWAY. I wish the gentleman would reserve his objection.

Mr. HERRICK. No; I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ST. ANDREWS, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7968) granting to the city of St. Andrews, Fla., the right to remove shells, sand, and gravel from certain public lands for road-building purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of St. Andrews, a municipal corporation chartered under the laws of Florida, be, and is hereby, granted and conveyed the right to remove and use for road-building purposes shells, sand, and gravel from lots 1, 2, and 3, section 22, township 3 south, range 15 west, comprising 39.93 acres, all in Bay County, State of Florida, reserving, however, to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits within said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, as well as all other right, title, and interest in and to the said lands not herein granted and conveyed.

Sec. 2. That this grant shall be terminated by the Secretary of the Interior whenever he shall be notified by the mayor of the city of St. Andrews that the interest in the said lands herein granted is no longer desired by the city of St. Andrews for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, on page 1, line 5, the words "and conveyed."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 1, line 5, after the word "granted," strike out the words "and conveyed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "west," insert the words "Tallahassee meridian."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding a new section, as follows:

Sec. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 2, after line 10, insert a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITHWICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

IKE T. BOYLES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5648) for the relief of Ike T. Boyles.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Ike T. Boyles, postmaster at Stiles, Tex., in the sum of $343.57, due to the United States on account of postal funds, money-order funds, and postage stamps on account of losses resulting from fire January 24, 1916.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HUDSPETH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CORNWELL CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 449) for the relief of the Cornwell Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has any additional facts other than those contained in the report? It does not seem to me that the information in this report makes out a case under which relief ought to be given to a concern that has pleaded guilty and paid a fine of $8,000 and now comes in four or five or more years afterwards asking special legislation to have the money repaid simply because another concern in some other jurisdiction appealed their case and secured a reversal.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have no additional information, but these are the facts: Swift & Co. shipped beef to the Saginaw Beef Co., which company has since changed its name to the Cornwell Co. The stockholders are exactly the same. Suit was brought against Swift & Co. and the Saginaw Beef Co. for shipping carload lots of beef and on the way taking some of the freight from the car before it reached its final destination and delivering it to some other people along the line of the railroad. The Government claimed that was a violation of the traffic laws and brought suit against Swift & Co. and the Saginaw Beef Co. In the lower court a judgment of $8,000 was rendered against the Saginaw Beef Co. and $60,000 against Swift & Co.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to state that this was by indictment and fine.

Mr. FORDNEY. I thank the gentleman for the correction. The attorney for the Saginaw Beef Co. advised that company that it would cost practically as much to go into court and fight this claim all the way to the Supreme Court as it would cost to pay the fine. On the advice of the attorney, the beef company paid the $8,000 fine. Swift & Co. refused to pay and followed the matter to the court of appeals. Now, Cornwell Co. paid for exactly the same offense, the same carload of stuff or carloads of beef that were shipped by Swift & Co. to the Saginaw Beef Co., which was the offense under which both companies were indicted, and the Saginaw Beef Co. paid the fine because it thought it would cost more to fight it through the courts than it would to pay the fine. I have felt and do now feel that it is no more than fair that the money paid by the Saginaw Beef Co. for an act that was declared not to be a violation of law should be reimbursed. That is all there is to this claim.

I introduced a bill some two years ago and the Committee on Claims reported the bill at the last session of Congress, but it failed to receive consideration in the House. It was not taken up as I now remember it because the claim was not reached on the calendar at that session. I reintroduced the bill at the beginning of this Congress and the Committee on Claims reported it favorably and recommended the payment of this money to the Cornwell Co. I feel that it is a just claim. I would not present it if I did not feel that I was justified in claiming that these people should be reimbursed for what the courts have held was not a violation of law. It is true they pleaded guilty, but it was on the advice of the attorney as the cheapest way out.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has stated nothing except what is contained in the report, and has left out one or two matters. The Swift people did not plead guilty. The Saginaw people did plead guilty and were fined $8,000 in another jurisdiction. If they had appealed it would have gone to another circuit court.

Mr. FORDNEY. It was the same shipment, the same carloads of meat.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. There was quite a controversy in the country as to whether under carload rates shipments could be made, stopped in transit and a part of the load removed, carload rates being much cheaper than the ordinary pound rate. The Government endeavored and did test that question in this case. They brought an indictment in two courts against Swift & Co. and these people for a shipment of beef by Swift & Co. to Michigan in carload lots, at carload rates, which was stopped in transit and part of the meat removed. The Government claims that was a violation of the antirebate law in that it effected a rebate under the guise of carload lots at carload rates. The lower court sustained the contention of the Government. This case came up in Michigan and these people pleaded guilty. Swift & Co. claimed that the contention of the Government was erroneous, and the Court of Appeals held that it was erroneous. Now, that is the practice so far as that decision was concerned. Of course, these people pleaded guilty; they were guilty of the fact. There was no dispute about the facts, they pleaded guilty because the fact was there, but the question was a construction of law and it was of no use their contesting it when it was going to be tested by Swift & Co.

Of course, it makes no difference to me; I am not specially interested in the people of Michigan, although I have a great deal of regard for them. After all the question is whether we will let off the big fellows and soak the little ones.

Mr. FORDNEY. That was what was done in this case.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, as the Attorney General pointed out, if the Saginaw Beef Co. had appealed, which they did not, the Circuit Court of Appeals in that circuit might have taken an entirely different view of the law than it did in the seventh circuit.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but the Attorney General and the Government acquiesced in the decision of the Court of Appeals in Chicago.

Mr. WALSH. Hardly that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; they did not ask that the case should be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. They tried to get a rehearing.

Mr. MANN. They tried to get a rehearing, but they came to the conclusion that the decision of the court was correct, as it plainly was under the law. That became the law and would be followed by the court anywhere else in the country just as much as though it had gone to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was acquiesced in. If the court in Michigan had had a whack at it, it might have construed it the other way, and the court at Chicago might have followed it, but as a rule in courts of appeal where one decides a question the other follows it, when it is not contested in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am going to do something that I do not do very often—permit myself to be persuaded by the arguments of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but I think we are making a mistake. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich., successor to the Saginaw Beef Co., the sum of $8,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, being the amount of money collected from the Saginaw Beef Co. by fine imposed by District Judge Sessions, at Grand Rapids, Mich., on August 28, 1914.

Such fine was imposed following an indictment returned at Grand Rapids, for the same offense as an indictment returned at Chicago against Swift & Co., who were convicted thereon and a fine of $60,000 imposed, but in which case the judgment of the lower court was reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in December, 1918.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend by striking out all of the bill after line 10 on page 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GLYNN: Page 1, line 10 strike out the remainder of the bill, beginning with line 11.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill for the relief of the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

KRISTINA FURJAK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 160) for the relief of Kristina Furjak.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Kristina Furjak, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $495, being the amount deposited with the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island for safe-keeping pending determination of her right to enter the United States, said sum having disappeared from the safe and all efforts made to determine the responsibility for the loss having proved unsuccessful.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HICKSON, JR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1951) for the relief of John Hickson, jr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this proposed legislation. It seems to be a little different. It involves an automobile accident, but it is going a little further than we have heretofore gone, it seems to me.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who made the report is not here, and I suggest that the bill be passed over.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; there is no occasion for passing it. It is perfectly plain. The accident occurred without any fault on the part of these people. It is perfectly plain in respect to the cost of the machine.

Mr. STAFFORD. How does the committee arrive at the sum of $1,075?

Mr. MANN. The total expense was a little more than that, but the bill was introduced for that amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. We find enumerated on page 5 of the report a number of monthly payments of the same amount—$82.41. What are those payments for—the use of some other machine?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. Those were payments made by the owner of the machine in the purchase of the machine. The value of the machine was shown. It was just being paid for.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman explain how they arrived at the sum of $1,075?

Mr. WALSH. It was worth only $125 after the accident, and they subtracted that amount from the amount paid for it originally.

Mr. MANN. The man paid $1,200, although he claims it was worth more, because he had made some improvements on it. I think he claimed $1,400 or $1,500. The committee took the value of the machine at the time he purchased it—$1,200—and took from that the price for which the machine was sold after the accident, which, I believe, was $125. The machine was ruined, according to the testimony in the case. There is nothing added in this bill, as there has been in some of the others.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will some member of the committee explain how they arrived at the sum fixed in the bill for reimbursing this owner?

Mr. WALSH. It is $1,200 less $125.

Mr. MANN. I have explained to the gentleman how the committee arrived at it, as shown from the report. The committee took the value of the machine at $1,200. The man had just bought it. He had added some improvements and claimed it was worth fourteen or fifteen hundred dollars. The committee did not take his valuation of the machine, but took the price which he was then paying. It had not all been paid for. They deducted from that price the value of the machine after the accident, which was fixed by the amount that he got for the machine when it was sold.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Hickson, jr., of Lynchburg, Va., owner of a Chalmers automobile, the sum of $1,075 in full settlement to reimburse such owner for loss sustained as a result of damages caused to such automobile through a collision which occurred at Miami, Fla., on May 21, 1920, with a trailer which became detached from a motor truck belonging to the Navy Department while such truck and trailer were being operated by an employee of the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES E. CONNORS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7695) for the relief of James E. Connors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how did the committee arrive at the rate of compensation in this measure? Here a boy loses his foot, and we are giving him $2,500. We just passed a bill where a person lost his life, and we gave the parents or the surviving husband and wife $1,200. What kind of a schedule has the committee got for these automobile accident cases with reference to loss of life and injury?

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, I think it might be well to state the facts in this case, as they were brought out before the committee. In 1918, in October, on a Sunday, there was a fire in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The whistle blew. It attracted the attention of a great many people to that locality. A policeman was stationed at the gate to the navy yard whose duty it was to keep spectators away to avoid the possibility of accidents. When the whistle blew the little boy Connors, less than 8 years old, was attracted by the piercing sound of the whistle and he went onto the pavement in front of the gate leading to the navy yard, and was clearly within his rights. The gates were opened by the watchman. While he opened the gate on the right hand side the boy was standing by a stone buffer at the gate on the opposite side, at which time the big truck complained of was heading for the street. The testimony all goes to show that the truck driver made no alarm of any kind. This little boy Connors, as I take it, under any law, was entitled to be where he was. He was not a trespasser in any sense, and hence contributory negligence could not be successfully sustained against him.

Mr. WALSH. Did he have anybody there watching out for him?

Mr. ROSE. Oh, yes; the navy yard had a policeman at the gates at all hours of the day. At the hearing the watchman was sworn and testified. His testimony forms part of the report. He said it was his business to guard the gates; that he opened the gate on one side and while he was there this little boy came out and stood by the stone buffer.

Mr. WALSH. The little boy was not in charge of the policeman?

Mr. ROSE. No.

Mr. WALSH. There was nobody looking out for him?

Mr. ROSE. No. But when this truck came along it made a very short turn to the right and the rear wheel ran over this little boy's foot. Nobody claims that there is any liability attaching to the Government for this distressing accident. His mother, I understand from the evidence, makes her living at the wash tub, or menial labor of that kind, and is unable to buy a foot for this little boy. I have a picture here, which I will be glad to show any Member who cares to examine it. This committee took into consideration the age of the boy, the financial condition of the mother, and that she would be without his services for a long time, and that the boy would be a cripple for life. The bill as introduced called for $25,000. The committee did not allow the $25,000, but recommended $2,500 after reading the testimony in the case. While it is true in some cases, where a death has ensued, the committee has not allowed the amount that has been allowed in this case, yet because of the distressing condition of this little boy, who had the right to be where he was, it certainly appealed to the members of the committee and they unanimously voted that $2,500 would not be an excessive sum to reimburse this woman for the loss of the services of the little boy and the mental agony that is bound to follow and which can not be paid nor measured by pecuniary reward.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is a very fine sentiment, eloquently expressed. If this were a case to be tried against a private employer or something, and it was found that this little boy was not where he had the right to be probably, and, furthermore, they permitted him to be out there unattended, it might have been found to be contributory negligence. But I can not quite see how the committee reached this figure when we just passed a bill of $1,200 in a case involving death.

Mr. ROSE. Where a man is in the employ of the Government it is the policy of the committee to allow one year's salary. In this case no such condition obtains, and that is why the gentleman will find these various amounts which have been recommended by the committee under similar conditions. Every case rests upon its own merits, so that it is impossible to establish a hard and fast rule in fixing awards. We have done what we believe to be just and right under the circumstances and under the testimony adduced.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If the gentleman will yield, the committee has tried to base all of its findings upon the table submitted to them by the United States Compensation Board. In every instance where it could be applied it was used. Of course, where a bill is introduced for the death of an individual, the committee has not considered it within its province to raise the amount named in the bill. If the bill originally called for $1,500, the committee did not raise the amount to $5,000. If there is an injury sustained by a citizen, we try to apply to that individual's case the table furnished by the Compensation Board of the United States. In the instance of this boy, the table could not be arranged, it could not be figured on scientifically, and the committee were justified in adopting a sum which they thought would be commensurate with the loss of the services of this boy to his mother, whose only support he would be as time goes on.

Mr. WALSH. How does the gentleman know if he gets a new foot that his mother is going to lose his services?

Mr. UNDERHILL. We do not know she is going to lose his services.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly the services of a boy 8 years old are of no value to her now.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will ask the gentleman if he or any other Member of the House knows of a better method whereby the committee may arrive at its conclusion. The committee would certainly welcome the suggestion on the part of anyone.

Mr. WALSH. I am not criticizing anyone, but I am trying to find out about this amount. We have passed so many bills here and there is such a difference. In case of death, one gets $5,000, another $2,500, another $1,200. I think this is too large an amount.

Mr. UNDERHILL. In almost every State under the workmen's compensation law a total disability or death amounts to $7,500. The committee has adopted as a maximum $5,000.

Mr. WALSH. The committee does not raise the amount in some of these bills, as the gentleman has stated?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No.

Mr. WALSH. We have had bills here where they have asked for $25,000. Now, you reduce it. Upon what basis do you fix the compensation where death occurs?

Mr. UNDERHILL. We fixed it on the basis of the table of the actuary.

Mr. WALSH. Then, if you have a basis, why hesitate about increasing the bill simply because the Member only puts the bill in for $1,500?

Mr. UNDERHILL. We would have a fine chance of getting through a bill asking for $1,500 or $2,000 which was increased by the committee to $5,000 when the gentleman from Massachusetts was on his job here in the rôle of objector.

Mr. WALSH. It just shows the committee has established a rule that will only work one way.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman willing to reduce this amount to $1,500?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Personally I would be willing to accept any suggestion as to how we may best arrive at the amount which we ought to pay in such cases as this. We can not arrive at the exact sum at which the life of a 4-year-old child, or a 6-year-old child, or a 3-months-old child shall be placed. We can not do that. If a Member objects to the amount found by the committee it is up to the House or the gentleman who is interested, or who has the report to defend, whether it is a just amount or not.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I object to the bill and make the point of no quorum besides.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 20, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

543. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination and survey of the Ohio River, from Pittsburgh to its mouth, with a view to establishing such ice piers for harbors of refuge as may be found necessary (H. Doc. No. 187); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

544. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of canal connecting Lake Erie with the Ohio River via the Miami and Erie Canal, Ohio, or other routes, including a branch canal connecting Lake Michigan, etc. (H. Doc. No. 188); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 1591. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, with amendments, an act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia," approved July 7, 1838, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 711). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Miss ROBERTSON (by request): A bill (H. R. 10495) to reimburse certain Eastern Cherokees who removed themselves to the Cherokee Nation under the terms of the eighth article of the treaty of December 29, 1835; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10496) to provide for the free transmission through the mails of certain publications for the blind; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 10497) increasing the limit of cost for a Federal building at Juneau, Alaska; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WILLIAMSON: A bill (H. R. 10498) providing for the conveyance to the city of Sturgis, in the State of South Dakota, of a part of the Fort Meade Military Reservation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: A bill (H. R. 10499) making an appropriation for the relief of suffering coal miners and their families in the States of Kentucky, West Virginia, Alabama, Ohio, and Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. MOORES of Indiana: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 272) transferring to the custody of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution certain relics now in the possession of the Department of State; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURROUGHS: A bill (H. R. 10500) granting a pension to Mary E. Martin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 10501) granting a pension to Thomas A. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10502) granting an increase of pension to Lizzie Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10503) granting a pension to Peter C. Jackson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10504) granting a pension to William Heilmann; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10505) granting a pension to Anton Aggermann; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10506) granting a pension to Ferdinand Heinen; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 10507) granting an increase of pension to Melvina Cannon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINEBERGER: A bill (H. R. 10508) granting an increase of pension to Abbie P. Haskell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MALONEY: A bill (H. R. 10509) granting an increase of pension to Harriet F. McGinniss; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MILLSPAUGH: A bill (H. R. 10510) granting a pension to Clara A. McCarty; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 10511) granting an increase of pension to Alice C. Downey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 10512) granting a pension to Lorenzo A. Talcott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 10513) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. McCann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REAVIS: A bill (H. R. 10514) for the relief of Chester D. Barnes; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 10515) to correct the military record of George Patterson, deceased; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

4153. By Mr. ANSORGE: Petition of the Audubon Community Council of Defense and the Washington Heights Tenants' Association, of New York City, in favor of reducing the freight rates on material used in the construction of dwellings; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4154. Also, petition of the Audubon Community Council of Defense and the Washington Heights Tenants' Association of New York, in favor of placing on the free list material which goes into the construction of dwellings; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

4155. By Mr. CHALMERS: Resolution adopted by Toledo Lodge, No. 105, International Association of Machinists; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

4170. Also, resolutions adopted by Brier Hill Grange, No. 744, at Brier Hill, N. Y., favoring the passage of the Voigt bill (H. R. 8086); to the Committee on Agriculture.

4171. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Boston Municipal Council, Department of Massachusetts, United Spanish War Veterans, requesting that the Spanish War Veterans be included in the proposed soldiers' bonus bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 20, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, though the heaven of heavens can not contain Thee, yet Thou hast condescended to dwell with those of an humble and contrite heart. Thou hast promised Thy help constantly to those who, dependent upon Thee, are seeking to fulfill their duties to their fellows. Be pleased to visit this Chamber this morning, granting necessary help in all the duties of the day, and so assuring to each one the consciousness of Thy grace as to enable each therefore to fulfill his duty for the welfare of the land we love and in harmony with the best interests of the world at large. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I regret to observe that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is not in his seat, because I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to a matter which relates to a discussion participated in, I think, on the 16th by the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and myself, together with some others, relative to the modification of certain rulings as it was alleged they were requested by the Secretary of Commerce. Inasmuch as in the course of that discussion some rather hostile criticism was indulged in, I think it only fair that the position of the Secretary of Commerce should be made clear.

Mr. NORRIS entered the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIS. I notice that the Senator from Nebraska has come into the Chamber. I was just about to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a statement that has come to me from the Secretary of Commerce relative to the matter which the Senator was discussing one day last week, and concerning which he will remember that the Senator from Utah, myself, and others participated.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator have it read?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I will be glad to have it read.

Mr. NORRIS. I may desire to make some comment upon it. I of course have not had an opportunity to examine it. However, if it is lengthy and the Senator wants to have it printed in the Record, I shall not object to it, and will examine it in the Record.

Mr. WILLIS. That will save the time of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record in regular 8-point type the letter from Secretary Hoover and the accompanying copies of letters which passed between him and the Attorney General, if that is agreeable to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I certainly did not desire to take advantage of his absence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letters will be printed in the Record as requested.

The letters are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 17, 1922.

HON. FRANK B. WILLIS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: I notice in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for yesterday a debate on the question of some recent correspondence between this department and the Department of Justice with regard to the relations of this department with trade associations. Senator NORRIS's quotations were from condensed newspaper statements and are an absolute distortion of the basis and intent of this correspondence. As a matter of fact, any student of these matters will observe that an adherence to the lines laid down in this correspondence absolutely eliminates the activities in restraint of trade from such associations.

I send you herewith the complete correspondence on the subject and call your attention to the following paragraph in my letter to the Attorney General in asking his opinion as to the relation of this department to certain activities of these associations as showing how utterly wrong Senator NORRIS's statement as to our favoring conspiracies to restrain trade really is. Far from there being any suggestion of support to open-price associations, or any other doubtful infringement of the Sherman law, I quote one of my statements to the Attorney General which should sufficiently indicate my own views on the subject, which you will see are diametrically opposite to those which were attributed to me:

"However, to make my position clear regarding the trade associations, the existence of which I advocate, I desire to say that I have always taken the view that no body of men can combine in the form of a trade organization and do any act or thing forbidden by law if they were undertaken by them outside of a trade organization. The character of trade organization, the existence of which should be preserved, is one that carries lawful purposes in harmony with its declared purposes. The articles of association, with their lawful, declared purposes, must not be used as a mask to hide unlawful purposes. In other words, the organization can not be used to conceal or disguise any contract, combination, conspiracy, agreement, or understanding, secret or otherwise, on the part of the officers of the organization or on the part of the membership or any part thereof to engage in activities in restraint of trade or otherwise in violation of the antitrust laws."

So far as concerns so-called open-price associations, as Senator NORRIS says, I quote the following from this same letter:

"Information lawfully secured regarding trade and economic conditions made public for the information of everyone can not be harmful. Information secured for the benefit of members solely and of a character that puts the membership, by reason of the information, in a position of advantage as compared with the public without such information, can not be sanctioned by sound public policy. The act of securing the information and the use of it by the members of a particular organization may be perfectly lawful in itself, but it is my belief that good morals and a sense of fair dealing require the giving of the information secured in this collective manner to the public generally, to the end that all persons engaged in commercial transactions involving the information in question will be on an even footing."

Another statement by Senator NORRIS, equally in entire contravention of the fact, is with regard to the question of credit black lists. The actual question propounded to the Attorney General was so far from his statement as to read:

"May a trade association collect credit information as to the financial responsibility, business reputation, and standing of those using the products of the industry, and may the association furnish such information to individual members upon request therefor, provided such information is not used by the association or the members for the purpose of unlawfully establishing so-called 'black lists'?"

In giving his reply the Attorney General stated among other things:

"I can now see nothing illegal in the exercise of the other activities mentioned, provided always that whatever is done is not used as a scheme or device to curtail production or enhance prices, and does not have the effect of suppressing competition."

I would therefore be obliged if as a matter of public justice the statements made could be corrected.

Yours, faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

[Confidential. Released for Thursday morning, Feb. 16, 1922. Correspondence between Department of Commerce and Department of Justice upon the activities of trade associations.]

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 3, 1922.

HON. HARRY M. DAUGHERTY,

Attorney General, Department of Justice,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: The situation regarding the activities of legitimate trade associations is more disturbing now than at any time since we first discussed the matter, and since Mr. Lamb was advised by Col. Goff and Mr. Fowler that it was your desire that I present an informal interdepartmental inquiry regarding the present status of the law relating to legitimate trade associations and the extent that they may engage in legitimate cooperative activities I have made a further survey of the matter, and the questions hereinafter presented seem to me to be vital to trade associations based on present information secured through recent investigation.

It may not be out of place to call your attention to the organic act which created the Department of Commerce, which imposed upon the department the duty "to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, and the transportation facilities of the United States." In obeying the commands of the statute it seemed to me that the department should employ all available legal means to get into the closest possible touch with industry in all its forms and secure the best information possible regarding the needs and necessities of trade and commerce. If the department has to help, aid, and assist industry, it must, of course, be conversant with the facts and conditions influencing the carrying on of trade. The existence of a large number of trade associations being well known prompted me to make inquiry regarding their forms of organization and the functions they were performing, to ascertain whether or not they could be utilized as a means for securing trade information that would properly aid the department in performing its duties. My inquiry into the affairs of trade associations was not with the idea of creating a new scheme for carrying on business, but solely for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they could properly be utilized in furnishing information that would not only be helpful to the department and to the commercial world but to the public generally, always keeping in mind that whatever activities were carried on by such associations they should of necessity be within the terms of existing law. In the course of my inquiry I discovered that certain trade associations were involved in litigation which questioned the legality of their performances, and by reason of the litigation there was much doubt and confusion regarding the legal limits within which trade associations could properly operate. This situation seemed to call for conferences with your department, which you have graciously afforded; and although no definite determination has heretofore been reached regarding the policy to be pursued I realize the difficulties that confront you in attempting to reach a proper conclusion, and while a public announcement from you would have been most helpful to all I most heartily acquiesce in your suggestion that the matter be presented as an informal interdepartmental inquiry for my guidance in performing the duties imposed upon me by the organic act creating this department.

So much has been said in the various conferences, coupled with lapse of time, in order to obviate excusable failures in memory as to the matters that have heretofore been discussed, and to make clear the position and views of this department, I desire to offer some preliminary observations regarding trade associations before asking the specific questions heretofore set forth in various informal memoranda and upon which I desire the informal expression of your views.

Commercial progress in industry has always been measured by the advance in knowledge of those engaged in industry. It is impossible for men to acquire or secure all possible knowledge at one time. Its acquisition is a growth resulting from continuous, intelligent inquiry. The knowledge of an industry that is necessary and essential to its success must embrace all facts and circumstances that will in any way influence that industry. These facts and circumstances must include economic conditions as well as scientific facts to the extent that science is called into play in its operation and all commercial conditions that make for efficient production, merchandising, and distribution. No one will dispute the foregoing statements; they are fundamental and necessary to the life of trade and commerce.

The difficulty seems to lie in the determination of the means and methods that may be adopted to secure this necessary information. Little, if any, trouble is experienced in securing the admission that an individual may secure knowledge of these facts by any means that would not constitute an individual crime, and that he may use the information in such manner as his best judgment may tell him will bring him the greatest benefit.

But when two individuals engaged in the same line of industry undertake to provide a means for securing facts necessary and essential to the economic and efficient conduct of their respective organizations, this form of endeavor seems to at once assume an aspect of difficulty that, in my judgment, is in no way justified by a proper consideration of the underlying necessities thereof.

The individual sets up some form of instrumentality to secure the information without which, in the management of his business, he would be groping in the dark. His competitor across the street does the same thing, and each, securing his information in his own way, uses it as he sees fit, and the action of either one has not offended the majesty of the law. Yet if the two seek to join the instrumentality each has used for information purposes and the same information is received through one instrumentality and the information given to each, and it is used in the same way that it was before, it is suggested that the collective activity in the use of the consolidated instrumentality should not be permitted because of the greater ease and facility thereby afforded for the two individuals to make improper use of the information so acquired. In other words, the objection does not go to the instrumentality but to the abuse of the information that may be secured through the collective means.

The principle is the same whether two or two hundred join together in securing the information.

No form of legislation has ever yet been devised nor has man, with all his genius for invention, ever been able to devise a rule or regulation that would prevent men from committing crimes if they are so minded. The best that can be done is to forbid the doing of certain acts or to command the doing of others, prescribing proper punishments in the case of the commission on the one hand and the omission on the other, and when legislation takes that form rules and regulations and administrative constructions which have for their objective the making of the prohibited thing more difficult will always include within their terms the law-abiding citizen as well as the prospective criminal.

We have had criminals since the beginning of time, and human nature can not be changed by legislation. The criminally inclined represent a small minority, and it may be said in a general way that excepting offenses against persons and property most of the criminal statutes regulating trade and commerce and forbidding acts that seem against sound public policy have been made necessary for the control of the minority. None of these statutes, however, has undertaken to prevent the doing of a thing that would result in benefit to the public, but the restriction has been against the doing of the thing in an unlawful way. These statutes have not condemned lawful institutions or instrumentalities for the carrying on of commerce merely because some one might possibly abuse their use. The laws have condemned the abuse, and punishments have been prescribed for those who may be found guilty of the abuse. Therefore the fact that the minority may be known to violate given laws does not establish a principle that the primary means, lawful in itself, which they have adopted for the purpose of performing the unlawful acts should be entirely abolished and its use forbidden by law-abiding citizens. Each unlawful use of the means is merely an individual case of the violation of a law.

Trade associations have been in existence for many years. The great majority are legitimate, both in form of organization and in activity. The minority, while lawfully organized under articles expressing lawful purposes, may engage in activities that are evidence of purpose contrary to and outside of the declared purposes in the articles of organization.

Again, a trade association may have lawful form of organization and the activities of its officers may be clearly within the purposes declared in the association charter and yet members of the organization may by unlawful confederation use the information lawfully secured for unlawful purposes. It may, therefore, truthfully be said that the line dividing the good association and the bad, the proper activity from the improper one, and the lawful activities of the officers of an association from the unlawful acts of the membership can not be determined in every instance with singular ease. It is my belief, however, that it is more easy to determine the forms of organizations and activities that are generally recognized as good than to determine in advance those that may be bad, because in the latter instance the peculiar facts relating to each association the subject of inquiry may determine whether the organization or its members are operating in violation of law.

It is with much earnestness that I claim there is propriety, generally speaking, in trade associations. Their lawful field of endeavor is large, and their activities work for promotion and advancement of the public welfare and for progressive economic organization. In making this statement I am not unmindful of the fact that the impression exists with a small minority that individual prohibited acts may be accomplished by organization under the disguise of a trade association. However, to make my position clear regarding the trade associations, the existence of which I advocate, I desire to say that I have always taken the view that no body of men could combine in the form of a trade organization and do any act or thing forbidden by law if they were undertaken by them outside of a trade organization. The character of trade organization the existence of which should be preserved is one that carries lawful purposes only in its articles of association; its activities must be in harmony with its declared purpose. The articles of association, with their lawful, declared purposes, must not be used as a mask to hide unlawful purposes. In other words, the organization can not be used to conceal or disguise any contract, combination, conspiracy, agreement, or understanding, secret or otherwise, on the part of the officers of the organization or on the part of the membership or any part thereof to engage in activities in restraint of trade or otherwise in violation of the antitrust laws.

There has been much information collected by legitimate trade associations in which the general public has no interest whatsoever, yet information of this class has always been freely offered to the daily and the trade press, as well as to any governmental agency that might desire the information as a matter of statistical record. On the other hand, certain statistical data are collected by trade organizations that would be of vast value to the public generally if published in practical, available form.

Many of the trade associations securing and disseminating the statistical data mentioned have restricted the same to its membership, while others have undertaken to give the same to the public through the daily and the trade press concurrently with its members. The trade associations of the latter class are in the minority.

Information lawfully secured regarding trade and economic conditions made public for the information of everyone can not be harmful. Information secured solely for the benefit of members and of a character that puts the membership, by reason of the information, in a position of advantage as compared with the public without such information can not be sanctioned by sound public policy. The act of securing the information and the use of it by the members of a particular organization may be perfectly lawful in itself, but it is my belief that good morals and a sense of fair dealing require the giving of the information secured in this collective manner to the public generally, to the end that all persons engaged in commercial transactions involving the information in question will be on an even footing.

The activities of trade associations that have received the greatest criticism involve the collection of statistics relating to volume of production, capacity to produce by districts of production, wages, consumption of products in domestic and foreign trade, distribution thereof, including volume of distribution by districts, together with figures as to stocks on hand, wholesale and retail, by districts, coupled with information as to price, either in the form of individual reports of each member distributed to every other member or the individual prices reported to the association and by the latter compiled and averaged by districts for certain specified periods.

If information regarding production, capacity, and distribution by districts, with average prices for grades, brands, sizes, styles, or qualities sold in the respective districts for specified periods of time could be given to the public at the same time that such information is available to the members of an association, in my judgment, great public good would result. With this information available, everyone dealing in the products of a given industry, whether buyer or seller, would have the same information regarding conditions and, in dealing with one another, would have knowledge of the same facts upon which to form their judgments as to the proper course to pursue.

A majority of the associations collecting data of the nature indicated have distributed same only to members of the association, while others have undertaken to give the information to the public through the daily and trade papers. Publications of the information by these associations in the daily press has not been general, and its availability to the public has been largely through the medium of trade papers, and through the daily press to the extent that the latter may have been utilized. When published through trade papers this information should be released to members only after such publication.

It should be borne in mind that the criticism aimed at this form of activity has not involved the instrumentality for securing it or the subject matter of the information, but has been directed to the use or possible use that might be made of the information and the fact that no means existed for distributing the information to the public at the same time that it was received by the members of the association. These observations likewise apply to the criticisms directed to the furnishing of average price of given commodities according to grade, size, brand, or quality by districts for specified periods of time, based on past and closed transactions.

With these observations, which have been extended at greater length than I intended, I desire the informal expression of your views as to the following activities on the part of trade associations and their members wherein neither the form of the association nor the activity, which appear perfectly fair and lawful on the surface, is used to hide or conceal some contract, combination, conspiracy, agreement, or understanding, secret or otherwise, on the part of the association, the membership, or any part thereof to actually restrain trade or otherwise violate the Sherman Act:

(1) May a trade association provide for its members a standard or uniform system of cost accounting and recommend its use, provided that the costs so arrived at by the uniform method are not furnished by the members to each other or by the members to the association and by the latter to the individual members?

(2) May a trade association advocate and provide for uniformity in the use of trade phrases and trade names by its respective members for the purpose of ending confusion in trade expressions and for harmony of construction as to the meaning of trade phrases, names, and terms?

(3) May a trade association, in cooperation with its members, advocate and provide for the standardization of quality and grades of product of such members, to the end that the buying public may know what it is to receive when a particular grade or quality is specified; and may such association, after standardizing quality and grade, provide standard form of contract for the purpose of correctly designating the standards of quality and grades of product; and may it standardize technical and scientific terms, its processes in production, and its machinery; and may the association cooperate with its members in determining means for the elimination of wasteful processes in production and distribution and for the raising of ethical standards in trade for the prevention of dishonest practices?

(4) May a trade association collect credit information as to the financial responsibility, business reputation, and standing of those using the products of the industry; and may the association furnish such information to individual members upon request therefor, provided such information is not used by the association or the members for the purpose of unlawfully establishing so-called "black lists"?

(5) May a trade association arrange for the handling of the insurance of its members, including fire, industrial, indemnity, or group insurance? In other words, can the members of an industry, through the agency of a trade association, arrange for or place all of the insurance of the members?

(6) May a trade association, in cooperation with its members, engage in cooperative advertising for the promotion of trade of the members of that association engaged in the particular industry; and may the association engage in such form of promotion by furnishing trade labels, designs, and trade-marks for the use of its individual members?

(7) May a trade association, for and in behalf of its members, engage in the promotion of welfare work in the plants or organizations of its members, which welfare work includes sick benefits and unemployment insurance for employees, uniform arrangements for apprenticeship in trade education, the prevention of accidents, and the establishment of an employment department or bureau for cooperation with employees?

(8) May a trade association, in cooperation with its members and acting for and in behalf of its members, handle all legislative questions that may affect the particular industry, regarding factories, trades, tariff, taxes, transportation, employers' liability, and workmen's compensation, as well as the handling of rate litigation and railroad transportation questions?

(9) May a trade association, in cooperation with its members and acting for and in their behalf, undertake the promotion of closer relations between the particular industry and the Federal and the State departments of government which may have administration of laws affecting the particular industry in any form?

(10) A. May a trade association collect statistics from each member showing his volume of production, his capacity to produce, the wages paid, the consumption of his product in domestic or foreign trade, and his distribution thereof, specifying the volume of distribution by districts, together with his stock, wholesale or retail?

B. And may such trade association, on receipt of the individual reports of each member, compile the information in each report into a consolidated statement which shows the total volume of production of the membership, its capacity to produce by districts of production, which in some instances include a State or less area, the wages by districts of production, the consumption in foreign or domestic trade by districts, the volume of distribution by districts, and the stocks on hand, wholesale and retail, by districts?

C. And if, after compiling the information as aforesaid, the information received from the members as well as the combined information is not given by the association to any other person, may it then file the combined statement with the Secretary of Commerce for distribution by him to the members of the association through the public press or otherwise and to the public generally and to all persons who may be in any way interested in the product of the industry, it being understood that the individual reports for the members should cover either weekly, monthly, quarterly, or longer periods as may be deemed desirable by the members, and, when a period is adopted, the report for each member shall cover that period, and the combined report shall be for that period?

(11) A. May a trade association at the time it collects the production and distribution statistics above outlined, at the same time have their members report the prices they have received for the products they have sold during the period taken, specifying the volume of each grade, brand, size, style, or quality, as the case may be, and the price received for the volume so sold in each of the respective districts where the product is sold?

B. And may the association, without making known to any person the individual price reports of any member, consolidate all of the reports into one and show the average price received for the total volume of each grade, brand, size, style, or quality, as the case may be, distributed in each district covered by the distribution statistics for the period covered by each individual report?

C. And may the association, after making such compilation, send the compiled report as to average price, as aforesaid, to the Secretary of Commerce, to be by him distributed to the public and to any or all persons who may be interested in the particular industry making the report?

In order to avoid repeating this question in connection with each one of the activities outlined in the 11 preceding questions, may trade associations engage in any or all of the activities named without violating the law, provided the organization and the activity engaged in are not for the purpose of hiding or concealing some agreement, contract, etc., to actually restrain trade or otherwise violate the antitrust laws?

As stated in the beginning, I do not ask you to express your views in a formal opinion, but it is my hope that you may see your way clear to give me the advice that will enable me to adopt the proper administrative action in undertaking the duties imposed upon the Secretary of Commerce by the organic act creating the department. It is unnecessary for me to say that the general, unsettled condition regarding the proper provinces of trade associations justifies as early a reply to these inquiries as your other numerous official duties will permit.

Yours, faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER,
Secretary of Commerce.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1922.

HON. HERBERT HOOVER,
Secretary of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your communication of the 3d instant relating to the practices in which trade associations may lawfully engage was received. I recognize the force of your able discussion of the subject, and after careful consideration of the several activities which you suggest can be exercised lawfully, I beg to say:

With reference to the first paragraph, there is no apparent objection to a standard system of cost accounting, but I think associations should be warned to guard against uniform cost as to any item of expense. For illustration, a strong effort has been made by some lumber associations to take as a basis for estimating costs of production a uniform charge for stumpage. Of course the cost of the timber in the tree to the different manufacturers who own their timber in the woods greatly varies, and as to each it should be charged at its actual cost. It is as clearly a violation of the law to agree upon the cost of an item that constitutes a substantial part of the total cost price when its cost actually varies, as to agree upon the sales price, because the sales price is substantially affected by such agreement. It has been ascertained that the members of one association go so far as to fix a uniform cost price, leaving to each member to determine what per cent profit he will add, thus eliminating entirely competition in so far as affected by the cost of production.

Furthermore, I have serious doubts about the advisability of the latter part of the sixth paragraph. I can see no objection to cooperative advertising designed to extend the markets of the particular article produced or handled by the members of an association, but when the several producers or dealers use uniform trade labels, designs, and trade-marks, it seems to me the inevitable result would be a uniformity of price. Where two competing articles are advertised in precisely the same way and bear exactly the same label or trade-mark, it certainly would be difficult for one to be sold at a higher price than the other, although its quality may be superior. In a way this is illustrated in the cement industry. There a standard of quality has been adopted; that is, it is necessary for all cement to comply with a certain standard, but in practice no manufacturer undertakes to make, or at least no one advertises that he does make, a grade of cement superior to that standard. The result is that there is no competition in the sale of cement so far as quality is concerned. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be well to eliminate the latter clause in paragraph 6, to wit, "and may the association engage in such form of promotion by furnishing trade labels, designs, and trade-marks for the use of its individual members?"

I can now see nothing illegal in the exercise of the other activities mentioned, provided always that whatever is done is not used as a scheme or device to curtail production or enhance prices, and does not have the effect of suppressing competition. It is impossible to determine in advance just what the effect of a plan when put into actual operation may be. This is especially true with reference to trade associations, whose members are vitally interested in advancing or, as they term it, stabilizing prices, and who through the medium of the associations are brought into personal contact with each other. Therefore the expression of the views that the things enumerated by you, with the exceptions stated, may be done lawfully is only tentative, and if in the actual practice of any of them it shall develop that competition is suppressed or prices are materially enhanced, this department must treat such a practice as it treats any other one which is violative of the antitrust act.

Yours, sincerely,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 9, 1922.

HON. HARRY M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General, Department of Justice,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I have your letter of the 8th instant, in reply to my letter to you of February 3, 1922, in which I made informal inquiry as to the legality of certain activities of trade associations enumerated in 11 questions. It is very pleasing to me to note that our views regarding these matters are in such close harmony.

Your observations regarding the last clause in question (6) in my letter are wholly sound, based on the language of that clause. It was not, however, my idea that each constituent member of a trade association would use a community trade-mark on his product, i. e., the same trade-mark that was used by every other member of the association, and, therefore, the last clause in that question was unhappily worded. The question really relates to trade promotion through cooperative advertising, in which certain trade slogans are used, such as "Made in Grand Rapids," which was adopted by the furniture manufacturers at that furniture center. Generally, activities covered in question (6) are conducted by a trade association in a given local community. An organization at Chicago advertises for its entire membership, which includes every line of commercial endeavor in Chicago, that the city is the great central market. It is cooperative advertising of this class that tends to promote trade extension in given lines or collected lines of industry. Certain of the trade associations, however, do devise trade-marks, not for use by all members, but for individual members. It is a well-known fact that when some manufacturer or producer is fortunate enough to select a trade-mark that appeals to the public, it becomes a great aid in selling his commodity and, as a result, it is well advertised until it becomes a household word. Other producers or manufacturers of the same kind of an article, in order to take advantage of this situation, will devise a trade name or trade-mark as near to that of the successful competitor as he thinks he can go and still escape suit under the trade-mark or unfair-competition laws. The activities of a trade association regarding trade-marks to which I referred in my letter of the 3d relate to the straightening out of instances of unfair competition or infringement as between the members by undertaking to design trade-marks for the individual members of the association making the same product that would absolutely prevent confusion on the part of the public as to the producer or manufacturer of the given article and, at the same time, remove all claim of infringement or unfair competition. In other words, the trade-mark activity referred to was that of making the trade-marks of each individual member distinctive instead of common. You may, therefore, consider the part of my question (6) referred to in your letter as eliminated from the question, and that the question was really intended to cover the matters stated herein. With this explanation I feel sure you will agree with me that our views on the matters presented are in complete accord.

Yours, faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER,
Secretary of Commerce.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1922.

HON. HERBERT HOOVER,
Secretary of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Your letter of the 9th instant relating to paragraph 6 of the questions you had previously propounded with reference to the activities of trade associations was duly received, and in reply thereto I will say:

Not being familiar with the practices of such associations in respect to trade names, trade-marks, labels, etc., I did not clearly understand the meaning of the latter clause of paragraph 6, and your explanation places the matter in a somewhat different light. However, I hardly feel that I can express assent to the adoption of a rule by a trade association or to its membership's engaging in a practice whereby the difference between trade names, trade-marks, labels, etc., used by the different members of an association and questions of unfair practices arising out of such use may be determined by the association or a body constituted by it, and a resort to the courts by those believing themselves aggrieved for the determination of such questions of unfair practices be prevented. It seems to me that if it were recognized that associations could exercise such a power, a door would be opened for the adoption of many schemes the use of which might result in the regulation of prices and the suppression of competition. The principles adopted by the courts with reference to such practices are well defined and the courts are open at all times for the redress of such injuries, while an association has no fixed principle for its guidance and it would be inclined to take such action as would best conserve the interests of the several members.

However, I can see no objection whatever to cooperative advertising by community trade-marks or trade names as illustrated in your communication.

Yours, very sincerely,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK BUILDINGS IN NEW YORK CITY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board in response to Senate resolution 228, agreed to January 25 (calendar day, January 28), 1922, transmitting copies of all bids and contracts in connection with the construction of the Federal reserve bank buildings in the city of New York, which, on motion of Mr. CURTIS, was, with the accompanying papers and documents, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING. I present a resolution adopted by the Newark Community Club, of Newark, S. Dak., urging the re-establishment of the United States Grain Corporation so as to fix a fair minimum price for wheat, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. I also present a resolution adopted by the Retail Merchants' Association of South Dakota, asking for revisions of the transportation act of 1920. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and printed in the RECORD.

The motion was agreed to.

The resolution is as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY-TREASURER
RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Aberdeen, S. Dak., February 11, 1922.

HON. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Following is the text of a resolution which has been adopted by the board of directors of this association, which we take pleasure in submitting to you and ask that it be given your consideration:

"Resolution.

"Whereas there is proposed at this time a revision of the 1920 transportation act; and

"Whereas the problems of transportation, rates, jurisdiction over rates and service and equipment, and the question of claims for errors or loss and damage, are all problems which affect the retailer directly and indirectly; indirectly largely in the effect upon the prices of agricultural products, and directly in the effect upon commodity prices in general: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the board of directors of the Retail Merchants' Association of South Dakota recommend and urge the following revisions of the 1920 transportation act, together with such other revisions as in the opinion of Congress may seem necessary or beneficial to the general public:

"1. That section 15-A, which in effect guarantees an income of 5½ per cent to 6 per cent upon the aggregate value of all railroad properties, be repealed.

"2. That the jurisdiction of the States over intrastate rates and facilities be preserved or, in the case of previous removal of such jurisdiction, that it be restored, provided that the Interstate Commerce Commission be given such power to change or overrule the acts of the State railroad commissions only when rates fixed by the State commissions are proven to be noncompensatory or discriminatingly injurious to interstate shippers.

"3. That provision be made requiring the payment of claims for overcharges which obtained during the period of Federal control, extending the time for filing such claims to December 31, 1922, or later.

"4. That the Interstate Commerce Commission be given the power to suspend any rate, fare, or charge for a period of 120 days and to extend the time an additional six months when necessity justifies such extension.

"5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the members of the Senate and House Committees on Interstate Commerce, to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from South Dakota, and to the newspapers of the State for publicity."

The resolution quoted above is self-explanatory. We only want to add by way of repetition our request that the subject matter of the resolution be given careful consideration. We feel that the recommendations made are both timely and reasonable, and that they are in the interest of the whole people.

Very truly, yours,

RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
By E. U. BERDAHL, Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1922.

An order urging the Federal Government to send the steamship Leviathan to the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Whereas the steamship Leviathan, property of the Federal Government, is now being repaired under the direction of the Federal authorities; and

Whereas said repairs are extensive and will require considerable outlay of money therefor; and

Whereas the making of said repairs would provide work for many citizens of this Commonwealth if the same were done at the Boston Navy Yard; and

Whereas the employment of citizens of the Commonwealth on such work would greatly relieve the unemployment situation in Massachusetts. Therefore be it

Ordered, That the Members of Congress from this Commonwealth are hereby urged to use their influence with the Federal Government in securing the transfer of the Leviathan to the Boston Navy Yard in order that the repairs may be done in this Commonwealth; and be it further Ordered, That copies of this order be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the Members of Congress from Massachusetts.

In the House of Representatives, adopted February 2, 1922.

A true copy. Attest:

F. W. COOK,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of C. W. German, president, and the executive committee of the Missouri Bar Association, praying for the enactment of legislation creating additional Federal judges in both the eastern and western districts of Missouri, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Petition to Congress of executive committee of Missouri Bar Association to provide additional judges in Missouri.

To the Congress of the United States:

The executive committee of the Missouri Bar Association respectfully represents that the business in the Federal courts in both the eastern and western districts of Missouri has multiplied in the last three or four years to such an extent that the dockets have become badly congested, and that although the judges of these courts are highly efficient and working hard and faithfully all of the time, they have been unable to dispose of the business coming before them, and that the civil docket in the western district is now nearly one year behind; that the business in both districts is growing constantly, and that there is more than sufficient business in each district to provide constant work for an additional judge in each district.

Speaking for the bar of Missouri generally, we urge upon the Congress the creation of judgeships in both districts of Missouri. If the creation of new judgeships as suggested is not provided, it will result in the practical denial of justice to litigants in these districts.

We are sincere in stating that in our opinion there are no districts in the United States that are more in need of additional judges than the districts of Missouri.

C. W. GERMAN, President.

KENNETH C. SEARS, Secretary.

VINTON PIKE, Vice President.

D. D. DUTTON, Treasurer.

J. P. MCBAIN, Vice President.

JOHN E. CARR, Vice President.

R. B. OLIVER, JR., Vice President.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution adopted by the city council of the city of Duluth, Minn., favoring the enactment of legislation for improvement of the St. Lawrence River so as to admit ocean-going vessels to the Great Lakes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Marion County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Kaw Valley Lodge, No. 313, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, of Kansas City, Kans., favoring the passage of Senate bill 2901, to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes," approved November 23, 1921, and protesting against the so-called Volk sales tax bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the American Flint Glass Workers' Union of North America, of Newark, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation permitting the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by students of Oxford College for Women, of Oxford, Ohio, favoring ratification of the several treaties as negotiated by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Toledo (Ohio) Lodge No. 105, International Association of Machinists, favoring the enactment of legislation to manufacture all war equipment in Government plants, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LADD presented the petitions of T. A. Kidd and 3 others, of Denbigh; Stephen Isaacson and 2 others, of Cando; M. N. Oien and 2 others, of Bowdon; Mrs. F. Cosebeer and 2 others, of Lisbon; George M. Sherwood and 19 others, of Englevale; Knut Nelson and 8 others, of Roseglenn; A. P. Anderson, of Douglas; Nick Everling and 39 others, of Dunseith and vicinity; and J. A. Dobmeier and 65 others, of Park River, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by officers and members of the Elkhorn Farmers' Club of Divide County, N. Dak., favoring the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Fowler Local No. 585, of Meeker, Okla., praying for the passage of Senate bill 2604, the so-called Ladd honest money bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions signed by 108 employees of the Root Co., of Bristol; 123 employees of the Lux Clock Manufacturing Co. (Inc.), of Waterbury; 86 employees of the New Haven Clock Co., of New Haven; and of 11 citizens of Waterbury, all in the State of Connecticut, favoring inclusion in the permanent tariff bill of the American valuation plan, so as to better meet foreign competition and maintain the American standard of living, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Ridgefield (Conn.) Grange, No. 165, Patrons of Husbandry, urging the Senate to ratify treaties as negotiated by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stratford, Conn., urging the Senate to ratify the treaties as negotiated by the Conference on Limitation of Armament, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition signed by sundry students of the Freshmen Girls' Science Classes of the Stratford High School, of Stratford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation enlarging the forest reservations and the conservation of existing reservations, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the New England Farmers, of New Haven, Conn., representing 25,000 New England farmers, protesting against the proposed duty on potash as contained in the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Independent Colored Voters' League, of Hartford, Conn., favoring the passage of the so-called Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Abe Humiston Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Plymouth, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation making a national military park at Yorktown, Va., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of C. B. Bowen Camp, No. 2, of Meriden; Allen M. Osborn Camp, No. 1, of New Haven; William H. Hamilton Camp, No. 20, of Danielson; A. G. Hammond Camp, No. 5, of New Britain; and John B. Quinn, department commander, of Stamford, all of the United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Connecticut, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to widows and dependents of Spanish War veterans, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution adopted by the Georgia Press Association, in midwinter session, protesting against the enactment of the so-called Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Georgia Press Association, in midwinter session, urging Congress to accept Henry Ford's proposal to develop the Muscle Shoals project, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment:

S. 2967. A bill to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by an act approved June 12, 1916; and

S. 3156. A bill to change the terms of the District Court for the Northern Division of the Southern District of Alabama.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 534) to amend an act entitled "An act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, as amended by an act approved January 23, 1913, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 506) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3171) for the relief of the trustee of the estate of Hillsboro Dredging Co., a corporation, bankrupt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 3172) granting an increase of pension to Richard H. Atkinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 3173) for the relief of George Ciszek and Anna Ciszek (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 3174) confirming and validating the title of certain purchasers from the State of Louisiana of certain lands formerly included in the Fort Sabine Military Reservation in Cameron Parish, La., now abandoned; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 3175) for the relief of William H. Lee (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 3176) for the relief of Fred Sumpter; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SMITH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) directing the Secretary of Labor to reconvey to the city of Charleston, S. C., certain land located in said city; to the Committee on Immigration.

IMPROVEMENT OF LOCKLIES CREEK, VA.

Mr. SWANSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9700) for the improvement of Locklies Creek, Va., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. HARRIS and Mr. FLETCHER each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURSUM submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10329, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 52, after line 2, to insert: "For construction of a gymnasium and an assembly hall, including equipment for both buildings, to replace the building destroyed by fire February 12, 1922, to be immediately available, $45,000."

On page 52, after line 7, to insert: "For reimbursement of Dr. C. La Roy Brock, Government physician at the Northern Pueblo Agency, N. Mex., for the loss of his personal automobile in a flood while responding to an emergency call among the Indians, $750."

Mr. POMERENE submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10329, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

In the item for support of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, on page 107, line 13, to increase the appropriation from $95,000 to $100,000.

In the item for repairs to buildings of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, on page 107, line 16, to increase the appropriation from $9,000 to $10,000.

At the end of the items for the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, on page 107, after line 16, to insert: "For the purchase of 6.2 acres of land between Mount Olivet Road, West Virginia Avenue, and the northeast boundary of the institution grounds, at present belonging to Richard E. Pairo, $12,000."

PRODUCTION OF COTTON.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to present and have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have received from the Department of Agriculture in reference to the quantity of cotton consumed and exported for the last six months and the quantity of cotton carried over.

A brief analysis of the figures shows that there were carried over in the United States on July 30, 1921, 6,534,360 bales. The crop of 1922, while it is mentioned in the letter as 8,340,000 bales, as a matter of fact is less than 8,000,000 bales, according to the report of the Bureau of the Census. The two items would aggregate, then, 14,534,360 bales of cotton.

I also hold in my hand a report from the Bureau of the Census which contains information which is very startling to me. It says, among other things:

Reports were not obtained from all of the storage places, a number stating that it was impossible to make even reliable estimates. However, data were returned for storage places in which a total of 3,974,974 bales of American cotton were held. The quantity of American cotton, exclusive of linters, not tenderable on future contracts, returned as held in these storage places, was 970,230 bales, or 24 per cent of the total holdings in such storage places.

The impression has been that when cotton was put in the warehouses it was good tenderable cotton, but these figures are alarming as showing that nearly one-fourth of the cotton held there was nontenderable cotton. If that is true, considering the great quantity in the country, no doubt a very considerable portion was nontenderable cotton.

The figures show that we exported for six months, from August 31, 1921, to January 31, 1922, 3,532,000 bales. American consumption for the six months from August 31, 1921, to January 31, 1922, was 3,000,000 bales. Unfortunately they include in that 3,000,000 bales of all kinds of cotton consumed in the United States. They do not eliminate cotton which was imported here. I do not know how many bales there were of that, but that will augment the amount of cotton in the United States, whereas it ought to be deducted.

Assuming that one-fourth of the cotton was nontenderable, which would be 3,633,590 bales, that would leave on January 1 of this year tenderable cotton in the United States to the amount of 4,318,770 bales, with six months yet to run before the end of the fiscal year. Assuming that we consume the same amount for the next six months that we did in the preceding six months and that we also export the same amount, the total would be 6,532,000 bales. Thus it will be seen there would be a shortage of approximately 2,000,000 bales. Furthermore, when we take into consideration that there will be two months after the end of the fiscal year before there will be any cotton ready for market, it shows that there will be a great scarcity of cotton before the next crop is available. We consume and export around 1,000,000 bales per month.

What I desire particularly to call to the attention of the Senate is the great quantity of nontenderable cotton. I think that will surprise the holders of cotton, the growers of cotton, and the cotton trade. I have held this letter back for a few days while I was endeavoring to get the exact letter of the number of bales of cotton on storage in the different warehouses separate from linters. Unfortunately the reports which go out in the papers combine linters and cotton, all stated as cotton. I have had a great many replies, but I have not yet received a reply which covers the entire situation. For instance, in Charleston, S. C., it is claimed something like 110,000 bales of cotton are on storage, whereas over three-fourths of it is linters. Ten thousand six hundred and twenty-nine bales of linters in Savannah counted as cotton and 5,685 bales of linters at Houston counted the same, and so all over the country.

In my section of the country we can not grow cotton successfully without using great quantities of fertilizer. Unfortunately our people owe for some fertilizer they have used in the preceding seasons, and in the coming year they can not buy a great quantity of it. Furthermore, we have sowed more grain in my State and in the South generally than we have for many years past. In my particular county it is stated that we have sowed five times as much grain as in any one season heretofore.

These figures are very interesting indeed and show there will be a tremendous shortage before the next cotton crop comes in. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF MARKETS AND CROP ESTIMATES,
Washington, February 7, 1922.

Hon. N. B. DIAL,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR DIAL: Both of your letters of February 4, in regard to the cotton situation, have been given careful consideration.

Inclosed herewith you will find a draft of an amendment to section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, which embodies your suggestions with regard to how this section should be amended.

In compliance with your request for statistics of the present cotton situation, the following figures, which do not embrace linters, are submitted:

	Bales.
Carryover American cotton in the world, July 31, 1921, estimated about	8,500,000
Carryover American cotton in United States July 31, 1921, estimated by Census	6,534,360
Exports of American cotton during 1920-21	5,744,975
American consumption of all cottons 1920-21	4,892,672
Crop American cotton grown in 1921 estimated by Bureau of Crop Estimates	8,340,000
Stocks of cotton held in United States Jan. 31, 1921, estimated	11,591,987
Stocks of cotton held in United States Jan. 31, 1922	8,497,805
(This estimate is based on crop for 1921 of 8,340,000 bales which may be as much as 340,000 bales in excess of actual ginnings.)

	1922	1921
American consumption of all cottons for the 6 months' period, Aug. 1-Jan. 31 (about).....	3,000,000	2,333,855
Exports American cotton for 6 months' period, Aug. 1-Jan. 31 (about).....	3,532,000	3,020,595

It is difficult to state exactly what part of the stock of cotton held at any time is tenderable, but an estimate has been made which shows that 24 per cent of the stock of cotton held on July 31 last was considered undeliverable on future contracts.

Regarding what part of the crop of 1921 is undeliverable on future contracts, it must be stated that no estimate has been made, and there is no way, so far as I know, of securing exact figures. It is currently reported, however, that last year's crop was a high-grade one and comparatively a small percentage of it was of nontenderable grades. It has been further stated that a large part of the low grades held over from previous years has already entered into the usual channels of commerce for consumption.

Inclosed you will find the following reports, which will doubtless be of interest to you:

Statistics of cotton untenderable on future contracts, issued June 15, 1921.

Report on cotton of the crop reporting board of the Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, September 1, 1921.

Extract from Monthly Crop Reporter, May, 1921, on cotton snaps and bollies, etc.

Very truly, yours,

WM. R. MEADOWS,
Cotton Technologist.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, last week the Alabama Power Co. submitted a bid for Muscle Shoals. A day or two afterward Mr. Emmett O'Neal, the distinguished ex-governor of Alabama, gave out an interview in reference to the bid of the Alabama Power Co., of which I desire to read a portion; and I trust that the Senate may be glad to hear what this distinguished gentleman has to say about that offer:

The action of the Alabama Power Co.—

Says Gov. O'Neal—

In making a bid at the last moment for Muscle Shoals was no surprise to those who were familiar with the devious and sinister methods which this company has always pursued. To secure control of the Muscle Shoals—to exploit it, not in the interest of the farmer or the public, but solely to swell the dividends of its Canadian and English stockholders—has from the beginning always been the secret but cherished plan of this corporation, even when the force of public opinion compelled it to publicly announce that it would not be a competitor of Henry Ford. It announced that it was financially unable to undertake so mammoth an enterprise.

All things come to him who waits, and the Alabama Power Co. then recognized that it could not openly enter the list against the wizard from Detroit, behind whom was gathered the most united and powerful public sentiment that had ever favored any industrial enterprise. Delay, a propaganda of misrepresentation, were to be the weapons by which Ford was to be undone.

Leaving out a part of the communication, I continue:

The time had come when something must be done or the interests—the profiteering interests—would be lost. It followed that on yesterday that the Alabama Power Co. suddenly discovered that it was hopeless to expect Congress to heed their futile plea that the option which they claimed the Government was under a moral obligation to recognize for the Gorgas plant would be ignored. They discovered what every intelligent lawyer knew, that their alleged option was void and non-enforceable.

With the support of their allied interests, they appeared in the open and submitted a bid. They offered, with their usual generosity, to construct the Wilson dam at their own expense, and to furnish the Government 100,000 horsepower for the manufacture of nitrates. It is well for us to remember that at about the time the Ford offer was made the water power companies of the South and Southwest met together and through their engineers prepared a memorial to the Congress declaring that the entire Muscle Shoals project was visionary, impracticable, and without value.

While the Alabama Power Co. aided in the preparation of that report and gave it their indorsement, I am informed they asked to be excused from signing it on the ground that it might affect their political fortunes. Now this same company that aided in preparing a memorial to show that the Muscle Shoals project should be junked is suddenly converted to the belief that the Muscle Shoals is so valuable that it can afford to construct the Wilson dam without cost to the Government and present it with power necessary to manufacture nitrates. It will be noted that the Alabama Power Co. does not propose to manufacture nitrates. If their offer is accepted, the Secretary of War will be compelled to reverse his well-declared policy against embarking the Government in the manufacture of fertilizer in competition with private interests, but to organize a Government corporation to manufacture nitrates at Government expense.

God pity the farmers of the United States if the benefits they will derive from the proposed lease of the Muscle Shoals by the Alabama Power Co. do not exceed the benefits that the power consumers in Alabama and adjoining States now derive from the services of this corporation. The acceptance by Congress of the proposed lease would nullify and defeat the primary purpose they sought to accomplish by the enactment of the law establishing a nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals which was the manufacture of nitrates for powder and munitions in war and fertilizers in times of peace; it was not the primary purpose of Congress to build the Wilson dam to create hydroelectric energy for sale by a power company, but to develop the manufacture of atmospheric nitrogen. It would mean that the $85,000,000 already expended at Muscle Shoals should be exploited, not for the manufacture of nitrates and fertilizers, but the creation of power to be sold by the Alabama Power Co. to increase the dividends of its Canadian and English stockholders.

The Alabama Power Co. does not propose, as does Mr. Ford, to build any factories, develop any industrial enterprises, manufacture any nitrates, and enrich any agricultural interests; its offer simply means that the great Muscle Shoals asset should be converted into a power proposition, not to aid the farmers of the country increase our farming production, but solely to enrich the foreign stockholders of that corporation. It will be noted that by the terms of the proposed bid the Alabama Power Co. will not undertake to construct Dam No. 3 or fully develop the power potentialities of the Tennessee. During the last Congress a special committee of Congress appointed to investigate the Muscle Shoals used this language about the Alabama Power Co.: "The Alabama Power Co., when the war began, had a small system and were comparatively poorly equipped. To-day they have one of the most modern power stations in the world at the Warrior River, with coal mines electrified and a railroad connecting them with the Southern Railway Co., many transmission lines, and with a practical monopoly of electric power in the northern and western part of the State of Alabama, and this at Government expense."

This report shows that the Alabama Power Co. expended for the Government approximately $5,167,274.14, and in the report the committee states: "That there is not a cent of the expenditure made by the Government for the Alabama Power Co. can be salvaged. Even the minority report criticized the contract made with the Government as entirely unsatisfactory. The offer of the Alabama Power Co. entirely ignores and defeats the fundamental purpose of Congress, which was the development of power for the manufacture of nitrates and not the development of power for private sale."

A few months ago the Alabama Power Co. was financially unable to make a bid for the Muscle Shoals. The papers to-day announce that New York bankers are furnishing the funds to develop this property. Are not the public then justified in assuming that all the selfish special interests that have so bitterly fought the Ford offer have combined with the Alabama Power Co. as their emissary to secure control of this property? Would not the success of the Alabama Power Co. mean the triumph of the Fertilizer, Gunpowder, and Water Power Trusts and other profiteering trusts, who are opposed to Ford because they claim the acceptance of his offer would mean that labor would be demoralized by an increase of its wage and the power he would develop would be used in competition with their trusts by decreasing the cost of fertilizer and enormously enhancing agriculture by the enrichment that would follow cheaper and better fertilizers? Ford's methods are not those of Wall Street, and he would exploit this plant, not to increase his wealth but to give employment to labor at higher wages and enable the farmer, no longer sowing in tears, to reap in joy—that joy which comes from a knowledge of increased production through cheaper fertilizers and more remunerative markets through industrial development.

Mr. President, I have read from this splendid statement by an ex-governor of the State of Alabama, the Hon. Emmett O'Neal. I now want to quote a line from the present governor of the State of Alabama. He says:

It would be most unfortunate for the Alabama Power Co. to get Muscle Shoals.

Surely these two gentlemen, one an ex-governor and one the present governor, know what they are talking about when they warn Congress and warn the people of this country that this great corporation, composed, as they say, largely of Canadian and English stockholders, should not be given control over one of the greatest water-power sites in the world.

In addition, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a full statement of the Ford offer, as made by Mr. James E. Smith, vice president, in charge of the waterways division of the Mississippi Valley Association. Mr. Smith is located in St. Louis. He is as much allied with the interests of the entire section of the Mississippi Valley as any man in it. His views and opinions are always valuable in matters of this kind, and I ask unanimous consent to have printed the short pamphlet which he has written on that subject so that Senators can have the advantage of it.

There being no objection, the pamphlet referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHY MR. FORD'S OFFER FOR THE USE OF MUSCLE SHOALS SHOULD BE ACCEPTED.

[By James E. Smith, vice president in charge of the waterways division, Mississippi Valley Association, St. Louis.]

To the people of the Mississippi Valley:

The Muscle Shoals Dam and nitrate plants, which the Government began to build early in 1913 as a war measure, and which work was stopped after the signing of the armistice, has been one of the most widely discussed subjects that has been before the people of the United States since the close of the World War.

At the time the war ended the Government had expended over $100,000,000 upon this project. When the effort was made during the early part of last year to dispose of the different useless plants that had been started or constructed for war purposes, bids were solicited from different corporations and individuals for the Muscle Shoals plants, and among those to whom the request for a bid was sent was Mr. Henry Ford.

Mr. Ford submitted a bid which was delivered to the Secretary of War July 14, 1921. After that time two other bids were submitted, but it is admitted by the Government officials that Mr. Ford's offer is the best one that has been received, and in fact the only one worthy of consideration.

The Secretary of War on February 2, 1922, sent Mr. Ford's offer to Congress, and the decision is now up to the Members of the Senate and the House as to what action shall be taken by them.

Since sending Mr. Ford's offer to Congress Secretary Weeks has stated that he will soon submit the two other bids which have been made for the property; in view of the fact that both of the bidders in competition with Mr. Ford were allowed to send in their bids long after the full details of his offer had been widely published in the newspapers of the country, the fair-minded, impartial Members of Congress are not likely to give them any consideration, as to do so would be contrary to the well-established rules of fair, honorable, and ethical methods of clean business procedure.

When the conditions of Mr. Ford's offer were given to the public by the Secretary of War, the members of the different groups interested in fertilizer production and markets, as the Chilean nitrate interests, the by-product coke interests, all of the fertilizer manufacturers, the air-nitrogen fixation interests, the water-power interests, and the chemical interests, some of whom had been asked to bid for the property, and declined to do so—all these interests united in one concerted, bitter attack upon Mr. Ford's offer—and in carrying on their fight they have flooded the country with unfair and misleading statements which were evidently designed to prejudice the public mind against Mr. Ford's proposal.

Muscle Shoals is a great national project, and its completion and development along the lines proposed by Mr. Ford will benefit the whole country.

Located as it is, in the Mississippi Valley, its great possibilities for the agricultural and industrial development of the entire Mississippi Valley territory are of vital importance to the inhabitants of this important region which contains 55 per cent of our country's entire population.

The people of the Mississippi Valley are therefore entitled to the truth about Mr. Ford's offer, and this statement has been prepared with the view of giving the real facts in the case and of combating the misleading statements which have been widely distributed and which may have created false impressions in the minds of those who have read them.

The writer holds no brief for Mr. Ford. He can not even claim acquaintance with him, having met him on but one or two occasions, and only in a casual way. His only interest in this matter is that of a citizen of the United States who wishes to encourage its industrial progress. He realizes that as we are a commercial nation, that the happiness and prosperity of our people are therefore dependent upon our commercial advancement, which he wishes to aid and encourage.

Further than this, as one of the officials of the Mississippi Valley Association—although serving without compensation—which association is engaged in an effort to foster and protect the general interests of the Mississippi Valley territory, he feels in honor bound to support the Muscle Shoals enterprise, the further development of which, in his belief, will do more for the valley and its people than any one thing now being considered by them.

As a business man of long experience, he has watched with deep interest the wonderful growth and development of the great industry which Mr. Ford has built up—the greatest of its kind in the world—and he has a natural admiration for the genius and ability which has made such an achievement possible. He has also a high respect for the motives which have undoubtedly prompted the principles and policies which have been followed in the building up of this great business.

THE FACTS IN THE CASE.

Let us now consider the facts about the offer Mr. Ford has made for the use of Muscle Shoals. Having them before us, let us get down to "brass tacks" and settle the question for ourselves as to what his offer really means. His offer is couched in simple language, the meaning of which any average mind can grasp. There is nothing subtle or ambiguous in its phraseology to arouse suspicion or doubt in the mind of any fair-minded man as to what he proposes to do.

Abstract of Ford offer for Muscle Shoals:

Mr. Ford's proposal consists of two parts: One, to lease the dams; and, two, to purchase the nitrate plants and accessories.

PART I—OFFER TO LEASE THE DAM.

Provisions of offer:

1. Mr. Ford agrees to pay $55,000 annually for the maintenance of dams, locks, etc., making a total payment in 100 years of..... $5,500,000
2. He agrees to pay interest at 4 per cent on whatever the cost may be for completing both dams. If this amounts to $42,000,000 (the estimate of Mr. Ford's engineers), the total in 100 years under Mr. Ford's plan of payments will amount to..... 161,040,000
3. He agrees to a plan of amortization sufficient to retire $49,000,000 in 100 years..... 49,000,000

Total payments to the Government under Ford offer during 100-year lease period..... 215,540,000

Cost of dams (expended and proposed):

- There has been expended to date in building Dam No. 2 about..... 17,000,000
- Cost of completing Dam No. 2 by a contract already offered..... $23,000,000
- Cost of building Dam No. 3 by contract already offered..... 17,000,000
- 40,000,000

Total Government investment in Muscle Shoals' dams and hydroelectric plants will amount to a total of..... 57,000,000

Charges to navigation: Deducting the $49,000,000 which Mr. Ford repays from the $57,000,000 total cost, leaves $8,000,000 unrecovered, which is less than the amount stated by the United States engineers as chargeable to navigation, their prewar estimate being $8,575,000. (See R. & H. Com. (H. R.) Doc. No. 20, 63d Cong., 2d sess., p. 4, par. 6.)

The United States engineers have more than once recommended that $8,575,000 should be charged to the navigation improvement of the Muscle Shoals stretch of the Tennessee River under the very plans for joint navigation and power improvement now proposed.

Earnings from Government peace-time investments compared with Ford offer: To meet the terms of the Ford offer and produce a proportionate return to the Government, the Reclamation Service, representing a Government net investment of $125,870,830, would have to show an annual gross income of $10,180,132, instead of $4,191,844, which it now shows. The Panama Canal, representing an investment of $380,554,949 would have had to earn $32,450,886 gross revenue, whereas last year's total revenues were only $12,040,117. (Based on 1921 report.)

PART II—OFFER TO PURCHASE NITRATE PLANTS AND ACCESSORIES.

Provisions of offer: Mr. Ford offers to purchase nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, Waco Quarry, and the Gorgas steam plants and its transmission line for $5,000,000. He has offered to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in a state of readiness to be promptly operated in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives, thus securing the benefit of its use for the purpose for which the plant was originally planned. The Government, therefore, retains every advantage of the nitrate plant in time of war but pays nothing for the maintenance of the nitrate property in times of peace.

The war-time cost of nitrate plants and accessories amounts to a total of $85,423,078.73. This includes about $13,000,000 for the unsuccessful and almost wholly useless nitrate plant No. 1, and represents more than twice the present cost of constructing such plants. Mr. Ford will be compelled to make sweeping changes and alterations on these buildings at large expense.

Salvage to Government from war-time investments compared with Ford offer.

Government property sold.	Cost of property.	Salvage received.	Per cent of cost salvaged.
Muscle Shoals nitrate plants.....	$85,423,078.73	$5,000,000	5.85
Old Hickory powder plant.....	80,000,000.00	3,500,000	4.28
Wooden ships, U. S. Shipping Board, each..	800,000.00	5,000	.63

On the basis of the price received for the wooden ships that were sold Mr. Ford would have offered only $567,000 instead of $5,000,000 for the nitrate plants.

Annual cash saving to Government by acceptance of Ford offer: The Ford offer when accepted will stop the following annual cash expenditures:

1. Guarding and maintaining nitrate plants and accessories (fiscal year ending June 30, 1921), depreciation omitted $310,042.44
2. Guarding and maintaining uncompleted work at Dam No. 2 representing a yearly expenditure of..... 384,000.00
3. Maintaining Muscle Shoals Canal, average annual cost..... 53,079.00

Total annual cash saving..... 747,121.44

This is interest at 4 per cent on $18,678,000.

Cost to Government of the delay in accepting Ford offer.

Average annual cash return to the Government under

Ford offer..... $2,155,400.00

Annual cash expenditures saved at Muscle Shoals by Ford offer..... 747,121.00

Total annual loss to Government by delay..... 2,902,521.00

Average monthly loss..... 241,877.00

Loss due to present delay of holding Ford's offer for seven months..... 1,693,139.00

The cost of the delay in accepting Mr. Ford's offer, as shown above, has already amounted to $1,693,139 and on the cost basis of the last fiscal year the cost is piling up at the rate of $8,062.50 per day.

How long will the people stand for such reckless mismanagement?

There is an offset to this tremendous burden of expense, which was not schemed, however, by those who are responsible for the burden laid upon the people, and it is this:

MILITARY VALUE OF MUSCLE SHOALS.

As was demonstrated in the Great War, the fundamental requirement of all economic preparedness for war is power immediately available. The requirements of modern warfare are the light metals for airplanes and submarines, poisonous gases, and other essentials of chemical warfare. Nitrogen for explosives alone required 200,000 horsepower. At Muscle Shoals can be made aluminum and magnesium and their alloys, including the German mystery metal "electron"; nitrates for explosives and poison gases; hydrochloric acid and silica gel, the basis of gas masks; ferro-alloys for making high-speed steel for speeding up the output of machine shops; oxygen for phosgene gas and for cutting and welding the toughest of metals; and fertilizer, the farmers' greatest labor saver, especially needed in war time.

Hydroelectric power is by far the most dependable for such purposes, for reliable steam power calls for a reliable transportation system sufficient in a national emergency, together with coal mines that are free from strikes. This country has neither.

PEACE-TIME VALUE OF MUSCLE SHOALS.

The farmer is interested in the operation of Muscle Shoals, for it will provide him with material that is 75 per cent useful instead of the present materials containing only 12 or 14 per cent useful plant food. The farmer saves freight, bagging, handling, and distributing, etc., on 60 pounds of filler every time he buys a hundred pounds of fertilizer. The saving on bags alone will exceed $2,000,000 annually, and Mr. Ford proposes to sell the farmer this high-grade labor-saving product at a profit of not more than 8 per cent on the actual annual manufacturing cost, and a committee from representative farm organizations passes on the books to determine whether the agreement is being faithfully carried out or not.

As shown on page 4, Mr. Ford's offer for the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals will give the Government the highest rate of salvage it will have obtained from either of the war-time expenditures referred to.

As noted, the percentage of the cost offered for Muscle Shoals is 5.85 per cent. The percentage obtained for the Old Hickory Powder Plant was 4.28 per cent. For the wooden ships thus far sold and on which the sale has been approved it was 0.63 per cent.

In addition to the ships that were sold for $5,000 each a bid of $2,100 each was made for 266 more of the ships, but this bid was rejected. The percentage of salvage offered in this latter case was only 0.27 per cent.

The military cantonments constructed during the war which have thus far been salvaged have brought practically nothing. Many of them have been completely abandoned and their buildings are going to waste for the reason that they are not even worth the cost of "scrapping."

When the fact is taken into consideration that Mr. Ford's offer for the nitrate plants imposes upon him the obligation to keep the plants in reserve, at his expense, for the use of the Government in time of war for the production of explosives, his bid looms large in comparison with the prices obtained for the other war-time investments, from which no further returns will be secured. Then, too, the fact should be kept in mind that Mr. Ford was requested by the Government to make a bid for the property and that the opportunity was not sought by him. In response to the request he sent in an offer in good faith, which is freely acknowledged to be the best bid offered for the property. His offer was therefore entitled to fair, honorable, and courteous treatment, which, in the opinion of a large proportion of the people of the United States, has not been accorded to him.

The wonder is that he has not become disgusted with the very unusual and unfair treatment his offer has received and withdrawn his bid; but as that is what his enemies were doubtless expecting him to do, he probably wanted to give them a bit of a surprise.

Isn't it too bad that Mr. Ford's power of resentment was not in a sufficiently smooth running condition to properly work out the crafty designs of his opponents?

They can, however, console themselves with the reflection that the best-laid plans of mice and men often go wrong.

IF NOT FORD'S OFFER—WHAT THEN?

Looking at the situation fairly and impartially, there are but three courses to follow, viz:

1. To follow the suggestion made by the interests who are opposing Mr. Ford's offer of "scrapping" the work already done, on which more than $100,000,000 of the people's money have been invested; or

2. To have the Government go ahead and complete the dam and the installation of the hydroelectric power that will be made available and go into the business of selling power and making and selling nitrates for fertilizing and other purposes; or

3. To accept Mr. Ford's offer and thus convert a large war loss into a permanent and profitable investment which will bring beneficial results to the entire country.

The first suggestion, in view of Mr. Ford's offer, is unthinkable, and the people of the whole country would condemn its adoption.

The second plan would meet the objection of the majority of the people of the United States for reasons which need not be explained to any intelligent person.

The third proposal is the only sane and sensible plan to follow, and it is the only plan that will secure the approval of the country at large.

MISLEADING PROPAGANDA.

A group of powerful interests are "moving heaven and earth" to prevent the acceptance of Mr. Ford's proposition. The country is being deluged with their propaganda in the shape of newspaper articles, circulars, and pamphlets, filled with false and misleading statements about Mr. Ford's plans and purposes.

A very elaborate and attractive booklet has recently been issued purporting to tell the "truth about Muscle Shoals," and a large portion of the book is devoted to carefully prepared arguments to prove that the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals would be devoted to the making of sulphate of ammonia and that this product has very little influence upon the cost of farmers' fertilizer.

The fact is that there is a mistaken conception and a misrepresentation in the above statement that Mr. Ford will produce at Muscle Shoals ammonium sulphate as a nitrogen fertilizer compound. He will, of course, produce ammonia by the air nitrogen fixation process and mix ammonia with phosphoric acid produced electrically from phosphate rock obtained near by, thus making ammonium phosphate.

Thus it will be seen that the author of the statement either did not know what he was talking about or he was deliberately attempting to deceive the public.

The same pamphlet contains the statement that the cost of completing Dam No. 2 would be $33,000,000 and of Dam No. 3 $24,000,000, or a cost of $57,000,000 for the completion of the two dams. The facts are as already stated, that experienced and responsible contractors have offered to complete Dam No. 2 for $23,000,000 and build Dam No. 3 for $17,000,000, making the cost for the completion of the two dams only $40,000,000, or $17,000,000 less than their stated cost.

And the author of the above mendacious statements in a glaring headline refers to the plan offered by Mr. Ford as a subsidy, and he mentions the term in a manner which suggests a derogatory implication.

What is a subsidy?

Webster defines the word, in brief, as "aid given in money."

Mr. Ford's agreement provides for his paying to the Government, through a plan of amortization, the sum of $49,000,000, which is $9,000,000 more than the completion of both dams will cost, and, in addition, he agrees to pay 4 per cent interest for 100 years on their cost, whatever the cost may be; and again, in addition, he agrees to pay an annual charge for the maintenance of both dams for 100 years, the total amount to be paid by him during the 100-year period being $215,540,000, and then at the end of the 100-year period he agrees that the entire plant shall be turned back to the Government. The Government will get, in addition, the benefit of all improvements added to the dams and power houses that may be made during the lease period, unless the lease should be renewed upon such terms as may then be agreed upon, as provided for in the revised offer of January 25, now in the hands of Congress.

It requires a very elongated stretch of even a vivid imagination to visualize a subsidy in such a proposition. If any aid is given in money in this case, it will strike the casual observer that Mr. Ford is handing it out to "Uncle Samuel," and he is the fellow who will have the subsidy.

And then, too, the dire predictions of the failure of Mr. Ford's plans make a strong appeal to one's sense of humor.

Anyone who knows Mr. Ford or is familiar with his history or his business methods will not believe for a moment that he will not successfully accomplish the things he proposes to do at Muscle Shoals. He needs no guardian. Indeed, he has shown a rather abundant ability to look out for himself and his own affairs. In view of these evidences, the tender solicitude (?) of those who are mournfully predicting the failure of his plans are, to say the least, amusing.

The fact is that these very people who are predicting his failure know that Mr. Ford will succeed in carrying out his plans, and it is this fact that is so seriously disturbing their equanimity.

"What fools these mortals be" who evidently believe they can delude and mislead the intelligent people of the United States. Every sane citizen knows perfectly well that the only reason for the antagonism of the insidious interests who are fighting Mr. Ford is that they fear his competition will break up the monopoly which now exists by lowering the prices of the materials which they produce; and this, of course, is just what will happen.

The inexorable law of the "survival of the fittest," although objectionable to those who do not "keep up with the procession," must nevertheless prevail in order that the march of progress may be continued.

Those who know anything about the growing demand and use for fertilizing materials know that no one individual or corporation will be able to supply the enormous quantity of such materials that will be demanded and used in the United States in the future.

If Mr. Ford gets Muscle Shoals, he promises to make fertilizers cheaper than they have ever been made, and he agrees to sell them at prices which will save the farmers of the United States hundreds of millions of dollars; and, more than this, the farmers, being able to procure their fertilizing materials at a lower cost, will naturally use them to a greater extent, with the result of largely increasing the grain production of our country, thus enormously enlarging our national wealth and prosperity.

Secretary Weeks, in his testimony given a few days ago before the House Committee on Military Affairs, said that "the Muscle Shoals plant would produce only one-thirtieth to one-fortieth of the fertilizer produced in the United States, and that this small production would consequently have no effect upon the price."

The Secretary evidently obtained his information from an unreliable source. Here are the facts:

The total amount of mixed fertilizer produced in 1918 (a year of intensive farming operations) was 4,958,000 tons. In addition, about 1,500,000 tons of acid phosphate was used as such by the farmers. This makes a total of about 6,500,000 tons. Certain quantities of bone, tankage, fish scrap, and cottonseed meal were sold as such in addition to the above. The mixed fertilizer for that year carried, on an average, about 2.5 per cent of nitrogen.

Plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, operating at its estimated capacity of 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate, would produce the necessary nitrogen for 1,540,000 tons of mixed fertilizer, carrying 2.5 per cent nitrogen, or about 30 per cent of the total amount used.

If you add the acid phosphate, which carries no nitrogen, to the total fertilizer used, you lower the average content of nitrogen carried, and the tonnage of mixed fertilizer, for which the plant would furnish the nitrogen content, would be accordingly increased.

Anyone who may wish to verify the above statements can easily do so from records which are readily obtainable.

THE OPPOSITION OF FOREIGN INTERESTS.

Mr. Ford's offer is also being opposed by the Chilean Nitrate Trust, which is largely controlled by foreign capital. It is a significant fact that the nitrogen fertilizer materials produced in this country are, without exception, by-products, and those who most strenuously object to Mr. Ford's plan are those who are trying to keep up prices, not on their principal products but on one or more by-products.

The United States has paid out for Chilean nitrates since 1867 the enormous sum of $821,183,624.12.

In addition to this large sum, the people of the United States have paid to Chile as export duty on nitrates shipped from Chile since 1867, $163,647,780.63, and if we estimate the same 10 years increase in shipments of Chilean nitrates to the United States our payment to the Chilean Nitrate Trust since 1867 will in 1928, on the basis of nitrogen consumption doubling every 10 years, have amounted to $1,400,044,548.18.

Why should Mr. Ford not be allowed to make as large a quantity of these nitrates as he can possibly produce at Muscle Shoals and sell them to our people at greatly reduced prices under those they are now compelled to pay to foreign capitalists for the same materials?

Why should the people of the United States continue to pay tribute to foreign capital when the way is open for them to buy of our own producers at lower prices and keep our money at home for circulation among our own people?

Mr. Ford's enemies are also criticizing the 4 per cent rate of interest which he proposes to pay the Government on its investment at Muscle Shoals throughout the term of the proposed lease. To show how unfair and unreasonable their contention is, we herewith show how his 4 per cent interest rate compares with the Government loans now outstanding in the shape of bond issues:

Consols, 1930, 2 per cent	$500,724,050
Panamas, 1916-36, 2 per cent	48,954,180
Panamas, 1918-38, 2 per cent	25,947,100
Panamas, 1961, 3 per cent	50,060,000
Postal savings, 2½ per cent	11,774,020
Conversion, 1946-47, 3 per cent	28,894,500
War issues:
Liberty, 1932-47, 3½ per cent	1,410,074,050
Liberty, 1932-47, 4 per cent	15,130,900
Liberty, 1927-47, 4 per cent	66,362,800
Victory, 1923, 3½ per cent	497,915,100

From the above statement of facts it will be seen that the bonds issued by the Government prior to the World War were put out on a basis of from 2 per cent to 3 per cent, and that the average rate on the six issues referred to, that were put out before the war, is under 2½ per cent.

It shows further that even a number of the war issues were at 4 per cent and less, and that it was only during the later and most serious stress of the war that the issues bearing the higher rate of from 4½ per cent to 4½ per cent were put out.

Attention is also called to the fact that a number of the issues above referred to, bearing rates of 3 per cent, will not mature until from 1947 to 1961, so that during a period of 25 to 39 years Mr. Ford would be paying 1 per cent more to the Government than it will be paying as interest on these bonds.

Under the normal conditions which have prevailed during the past 50 years our Government loans have borne an average interest rate of much less than 4 per cent, and it is a fair assumption that the rate of 4 per cent which Mr. Ford agrees to pay throughout a 100-year period will be well above the normal average rates that will prevail during that period.

As already pointed out, when the War Department called for bids for the Muscle Shoals plants the different interests now opposing Mr. Ford's offer were invited to make a bid for them. At that time the "scrapping" of the work which had been done was being strongly urged, which suggestion in all probability originated in the fertile brain of someone connected with the aforesaid interests.

Instead of sending in a bid, as requested, these plotters wrote long letters in reply to the request strongly condemning the project, declaring it was impracticable, worthless, impossible, etc., doubtless with the hope in their hearts of disparaging the whole enterprise, thus causing it to be "scrapped" and destroyed and put out of their way. These letters, offered in evidence given by Maj. Gen. Lansing H. Beach before the House Committee on Military Affairs, are now in the possession of that committee.

When the splendid bid from Mr. Ford came in, it was to them a "bolt from the blue," and great was the consternation of the conspirators. Having so strongly ridiculed and discredited the project they had shut themselves out from bidding, although the opportunity was still kept open for them, even after Mr. Ford's bid in all its details was published to the world. Being thus put "out of the game" the only course left to them, or rather the only alternative that could be entertained by such sordid minds, was to start a contemptible warfare on Mr. Ford, which they have kept up relentlessly from that time. Such tactics seldom win, and the fair-minded American people who are advocates of the "square deal" will see to it that they do not succeed in this instance.

GREAT POSSIBILITIES FOR WATER TRANSPORTATION.

The building of the proposed dams on the Tennessee River will not only make available the vast water power now dormant and useless, but it will open up cheap water transportation on the upper Tennessee River, which flows through a large area of our country which is rich in natural resources, but owing to a lack of transportation facilities these resources have not as yet been developed.

On this stretch of the Tennessee River there are great deposits of coal, iron ore, marble, slate, phosphate rock, zinc, and immense forests of hardwood timber, all of which raw materials are badly needed by the rest of the country, and with the cheap water transportation which the completed navigation improvement of the river would permit these valuable materials could be transported by water to the different sections of the valley to the great advantage of the country's industrial welfare and advancement.

Many of these raw materials will be needed by Mr. Ford in the manufacture of the various products he proposes to produce at Muscle Shoals, and as he is a man possessed of modern ideas and who has the means to enable him to introduce and use the most modern methods in the conduct of his operations, he will naturally make use of the cheap water transportation facilities which will be available and the demonstration he would make of the cheapness and value of water transportation would inevitably lead to its use and extension upon all of our valley waterways.

It is well known that Mr. Ford is a strong advocate of the development and use of the water-power possibilities of the United States, and he also advocates in connection with such development the improvement and use of our rivers for transportation purposes. He realizes, as do all thoughtful men, that the growing commerce of our country can not in the future be handled alone by our railroads, and that the only possible solution of the great transportation problem, which now confronts us and which is a menace to our future growth and development, is the improvement and use of all of our navigable waterways as channels of commerce.

He realizes, also, that the full development of the resources of the large areas of our country, which as yet have scarcely been touched, can not be accomplished without the use of our God-given rivers, as mediums of transportation.

THE SENTIMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

There is no question about the attitude of the people of the Mississippi Valley as to what shall now be done with Muscle Shoals.

The press of the entire valley is demanding the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer. The commercial organizations are also advocating the adoption of his proposition. The farm organizations and the individual farmers are solidly arrayed in favor of the Ford proposal.

In order to test the sentiment of the valley on this question, a referendum was sent out in October, 1921, to the officers and directors of the Mississippi Valley Association, who are located in the 27 valley States. When the votes came in it was found that 42 were unequivocally in favor of the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer, while only three votes were cast against it. Thus it will be seen that this vote was almost unanimous in favor of Mr. Ford's offer, and the votes coming as they did from representative men from all parts of the valley, clearly indicate the general sentiment upon this question throughout this large area of the United States.

Knowing the facts about the possibilities of the proper development of Muscle Shoals, the great mass of the people of the United States who, we believe, insist upon their complete consummation.

Who will be against such development?

Only small groups of covetous men whose personal interests might suffer from the establishment of the proposed great enterprise and who, to further their own selfish ends, would hinder our national progress.

NOT A POLITICAL QUESTION.

The writer fears that politics has been injected into this project, which, if true, is indeed regrettable. It is in no sense a political proposition. It should be regarded only as a big national enterprise, and every patriotic citizen of the United States should give it his full endorsement and cooperation. Let us hope that the Members of Congress, regardless of their political affiliations, will unanimously vote for the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer, and allow him the opportunity which he seeks, of putting into use facilities which are now being wasted and which, if properly harnessed and put into service, will bring tremendous benefits to our entire nation.

If politics should be permitted to be forced into this great question it will probably be because of certain politicians being aligned with the interests who are fighting Mr. Ford, and the fair-minded Members of Congress, whatever their political beliefs may be, will not betray their constituents by giving their support to men who are guided by such questionable motives. They know that if Mr. Ford goes into the business of producing fertilizing materials, that he will do for that industry what he has done for the automobile industry. Through the exercise of his genius and ability he has produced a cheap, practical, and serviceable car, which has enabled millions of our people to enjoy the pleasure and benefits of its use, thereby adding greatly to their enjoyment of life, and no class of our people have been more greatly benefited in this way than the farmers and their families, all of whom now look upon Henry Ford as a public benefactor.

As Mr. Ford has educated the American public to use the automobile greatly to the public's advantage he now proposes to educate the American farmer in the use of high-grade fertilizer in the same way.

The United States is fortunate in having as a citizen a man of great wealth who is willing to use it in the creation of a tremendous new enterprise that will open up new fields of industry, the development of which will give useful and lucrative employment to thousands of our inhabitants and add greatly to our sources of wealth as a Nation.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR UNITED STATES LEADERSHIP.

Germany has had the world leadership in the development of chemical production. That leadership was the one thing that had brought her up to the high position which she occupied at the time she threw the world into the maelstrom of destruction through which it has so recently passed, and in which conflict her high standing and influence was destroyed.

Power is the prime requisite in the production of electrochemicals. Mr. Edison's interest in Mr. Ford's Muscle Shoals plans clearly indicates the great possibilities of what may be done with the vast power available at Muscle Shoals in connection with the necessary and valuable raw materials which are close at hand on the Tennessee River. It is evident that these two master minds are working together for the creation of new and very important industries which, in their operation, may startle the world and give to our country power and prestige never before attained, and bring benefits to our people beyond those which they have hitherto enjoyed.

The Mississippi Valley Association was created for the purpose of promoting and protecting the commercial, agricultural, and general interests of the entire Mississippi Valley territory. It is pledged to an effort to secure the economic freedom of this great region, which is the most populous and productive portion of the United States. Thus far the chief objective of the Mississippi Valley Association has been to secure cheap transportation for our people through the improvement and use of our navigable waterways, and we are making progress in this direction.

Muscle Shoals is in the Mississippi Valley. The development of the unlimited possibilities of this great enterprise will do more to further the valley's progress than would the attainment of any one object that is now within the reach of its people.

Congress should act promptly on this great question and stop the waste of Government funds at Muscle Shoals and put to work the army of idle labor that would be employed. If Congress delays action the useless waste of money will continue monthly and the unemployed will remain idle.

Let us hope that Congress will realize the full importance to the people of the United States of the successful accomplishment of this great undertaking, and that the Members of both the Senate and the House will promptly accept the advantageous offer that has been made by Mr. Ford. Let us all unite and work together for the full fruition of the big, ambitious, and wonderful plan which Mr. Ford desires to carry out and which promises so much for our commercial advancement and for the welfare and happiness of our people.

JAS. E. SMITH,

Vice President, in charge of Waterways Division,
Mississippi Valley Association.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR VETERANS OF WORLD WAR.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, in July last, when the President of the United States came to the Senate, and in the interest of payers of excess-profits taxes, of those paying high surtaxes, and of corporations which were paying a corporation stock tax, asked the Senate to recommit the bill providing adjusted compensation for soldiers until the taxpayers referred to could be relieved, stating that later the ex-service men's just demands would be taken care of, the majority party in this Senate, agreeing with the President that the corporations which were making excess profits should be relieved of the payment of $450,000,000 taxes annually, and those paying high surtaxes on incomes averaging over $68,000 net each year, amounting in the aggregate to $90,000,000, should be relieved, recommitted the bill. They said to the soldiers, whom a few years ago when we drafted them into the service we were pleased to call "crusaders for a new freedom, a new democracy," to come back some more convenient day and their wants would be attended to.

This great party, the Republican Party, which came into office and assumed full control of the Government in every branch in 1921 by reason of a propaganda that they and they alone were capable of meeting all difficulties and doing justice to everyone, professed they would reduce taxes and pay the soldiers adjusted compensation, has finally admitted its impotence. It now presents the pitiable spectacle disclosed in the letter which I am about to read. The letter which came to my desk to-day is being sent out by a Republican Member of Congress from one of the richest districts of New York. It reads as follows:

FEBRUARY 15, 1922.

DEAR SENATOR: Have you any old clothes, suits, overcoats, shirts, underwear, shoes, etc.? The "Lest We Forget" Committee have requested me to ask you to leave or send your old clothes to Keith's Theater, Fifteenth and G Streets, any time of the day for the next month. The committee will undertake to clean and repair your old clothes and put them in the hands of ex-service men who are in need.

In other words, this great party that was going to do justice to the soldier finally presents the sorry spectacle of sending out letters begging people for old discarded underwear and old shoes in order to clothe the ex-service men who are walking the streets and begging for work and for something to eat under this administration.

This indictment comes not from a Democrat; this comes from a Republican Member of Congress, from an ex-service man, a man representing one of the richest districts in the United States, appealing to people to give old clothes to ex-service men. That is what they are to receive—that and nothing else. They were told if they would wait until France and England and other countries had been forgiven their debts, if they would wait until the excess-profit takers could be relieved of all excess-profits taxes, and until the men paying taxes on incomes of $68,000 and more annually should be relieved of the high surtaxes, then they would be taken care of. The Republicans did not say just exactly how they were to be taken care of, but this letter discloses. After the rich have been relieved of all their taxes, after the profiteers have been assured that they may keep all they have, a letter is sent out, saying: "Now, then, we are ready to relieve the ex-service men; if you have any old clothes or old shoes or any old undershirts that you have thrown away, send them down; we will clothe the ex-service men."

That is a splendid picture for a great party to set before the gaze of the citizens of free America. You have given $20,000,000 to Russia; the excess-profits earners you have relieved of taxes to the amount of $450,000,000 annually; to the rich men who are making more than $68,000 net every year you grant relief; but to the men whom we proclaimed as the saviors of the world you tender a pair of second-hand nether garments and a pair of old shoes! I am sorry that is true, but I think the ex-service men had as well know now as later that you intend to pay your debt, aye, the debt of the world, to them with secondhand clothing.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may proceed with the call of the calendar at Order of Business No. 474.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I was not able to be in the Chamber at the time the calendar was last called, and I should like very much to have unanimous consent that a House joint resolution which was called at that time and passed over be now considered. I refer to Order of Business 443, being the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920.

The resolution involves a matter of considerable importance to the press of the country. It involves the use of naval radio facilities on the Pacific coast for press purposes. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed with the consideration of the joint resolution. It has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we ought to have a quorum when the bill to which the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] refers is considered, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	Ladd	Simmons
Ball	Fletcher	McKellar	Smith
Bursum	Gerry	McKinley	Spencer
Cameron	Gooding	McNary	Stanfield
Capper	Harrell	Moses	Sterling
Caraway	Harris	Nelson	Swanson
Culberson	Harrison	Page	Trammell
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Poinexter	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Kellogg	Robinson	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Kendrick	Sheppard	Williams
Edge	King	Shortridge	Willis

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROO] are absent on account of sickness.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], and the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] are detained from the Senate in attendance upon the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Jones, N. Mex. Reed.

The following Senators entered the Chamber, and answered to their names:

Brandagee	Kellogg	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Lodge	Pomerene	Warren
Ernst	McCormick	Ransdell	Watson, Ind.
France	New	Smoot	Weller
Glass	Newberry	Sutherland
Heflin	Overman	Underwood
Hitchcock	Phipps	Wadsworth

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CURTIS. I renew my request for unanimous consent that we may proceed with the calendar, at order of business 474, the point reached when the calendar was last under consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a moment ago, before the point of the absence of a quorum was made, I made a request to take up a certain measure; but I will withdraw that request until the calendar has been called, and at the conclusion of the call of the calendar I shall ask that we revert to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to proceeding with the consideration of the calendar, beginning with Order of Business 474? The Chair hears none.

LOUISE SAINT GEZ, EXECUTRIX.

The first business on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement was the bill (S. 403) for the relief of Louise Saint Gez, executrix of Auguste Ferré, deceased, surviving partner of Lapene & Ferré.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That jurisdiction is hereby given to the Court of Claims to hear, adjudicate, and determine the claim of Louise Saint Gez, executrix of Auguste Ferré, deceased, surviving partner of Lapene & Ferré, who were before and during the Civil War engaged in mercantile business in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, under the firm name of Lapene & Ferré, for cotton taken by the United States authorities, sold, and the net proceeds covered into the Treasury of the United States. Said claim to be heard and determined under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," and acts amendatory thereof; and if the court shall find that the cotton so taken was sold and the net proceeds thereof were placed in the Treasury of the United States, said court shall render judgment for said net proceeds in favor of the owners thereof, and full jurisdiction is given to said court to adjudge such claims, any statutes of limitation and all other nonintercourse laws to the contrary notwithstanding, and all relevant testimony on file in said Court of Claims taken under the rules of said court upon notice to the United States may be read in evidence in said cause. Said judgment to be subject to an appeal to the Supreme Court by either party.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator from Utah think any interest would be subserved by the reading of the report? I have read it, and I do not see anybody else in the Chamber who would be interested in it, except the Senator from Utah and myself.

Mr. KING. It is quite important, it seems to me, and I am not sure whether this is a claim which ought to be paid by the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand; but why take the time to read the report?

Mr. KING. We might let the bill go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That may be done.

Mr. KING. Let it go over, then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

TREATY WITH JAPAN.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, to report favorably the treaty with Japan in regard to the island of Yap.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The treaty will be received as in open executive session.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the treaty with Japan concerning the island of Yap, as in open executive session, reported the following resolution:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive R. Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, a treaty between the United States and Japan with regard to the rights of the two Governments and their respective nationals in the former German islands in the Pacific Ocean, lying north of the Equator, in particular the island of Yap, signed at Washington on February 11, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be placed on the executive calendar.

THE FOUR-POWER TREATY (S. DOC. NO. 130).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the message, as follows:

TO THE SENATE:

Responsive to Senate resolution No. 237, asking for records, minutes, arguments, debates, conversations, etc., relating to the so-called four-power treaty, I have to advise that it is impossible to comply with the Senate's request. Many of the things asked for in the resolution it is literally impossible to furnish, because there were many conversations and discussions quite outside the conference, yet vital to its success. Naturally these are without record.

I do not believe it to be compatible with public interest or consistent with the amenities of international negotiation to attempt to reveal informal and confidential conversations or discussions, of which no record was kept, or to submit tentative suggestions or informal proposals, without which the arrival at desirable international understandings would be rendered unlikely if not impossible.

While I am unable to transmit the information requested, I do, however, take this opportunity to say most emphatically that there were no concealed understandings, and no secret exchanges of notes, and there are no commitments whatever except as appear in the four-power treaty itself and the supplementary agreement, which are now in the hands of the Senate.

Respectfully,

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 20, 1922.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the message should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed.

Mr. LODGE. My attention was diverted. I did not hear it read.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is an important communication.

Mr. LODGE. I will not ask that it be read again, but I should like to see it. [After a pause.] I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska requests that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed. It will be so ordered, without objection. The Senate resumes the consideration of the calendar in legislative session.

ESTATE OF ALPHONSE DESMARE, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 404) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Alphonse Desmare, deceased, and others was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. That is of the same character as the bill last called, and I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

THOMAS E. OWEN.

The bill (S. 1502) for the relief of Thomas E. Owen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Thomas E. Owen, receiver of the land office at Clayton, N. Mex., for $286.67 paid during the second and third quarters, 1921, for clerk hire not previously authorized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the bill is acted upon, if any member of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys is here, I should be glad to know by what authority additional help may be authorized by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. We have a statute which forbids the creation of a deficit, making it a penal offense, and in this case apparently some official of the Land Office deliberately ordered an expenditure not provided by law, and, so far as I know, no authority is given to the officer who ordered this expenditure to direct the employment of the additional person for whose benefit this claim is.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am quite sure the Senator is not advised as to the law relating to this particular matter. There is a law, according to my understanding, authorizing temporary employment in the land offices. A report from the Department of the Interior specifically refers to the circumstances under which this employment was had. The letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior is very short, and if the Senator would like to have me read it, I should be glad to do so.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad if the Senator will read it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I may say that this letter is dated May 12, 1921, and the recommendation which the Acting Secretary has made is not timely now, as I will explain a little later; but the Acting Secretary's letter reads as follows:

The facts in this case are that under date of September 1, 1920, the Commissioner of the General Land Office authorized the register and receiver of the Clayton (N. Mex.) land office to employ a temporary clerk at $1,200 per annum for a period of three months, and that under this authority Mr. James L. Brown entered on duty on the morning of September 7, 1920.

I can not direct the attention of the Senator to the specific legislation warranting this action, but my recollection is, from my experience with that department, that there is authority for such employment, and from his letter the Acting Secretary undoubtedly assumed that there was authority for it. The letter continues:

On request for information as to the last day's service of Mr. Brown, the receiver replied under date of February 28, 1921, that Mr. Brown was still on duty and that he had been under the impression that Mr.

Brown was appointed "pending permanent appointment." In his letter the receiver requested authority to continue the services from December 7, 1920, the day following that to which his services were authorized by the commissioner's letter of September 1.

The commissioner in a letter dated March 2, 1921, authorized the employment of Mr. Brown from and after that date and, quoting the terms of the appropriation act to the effect "that no expenses chargeable to the Government shall be incurred by registers and receivers in the conduct of local land offices, except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office," informed the register and receiver that he was without authority to authorize the employment of Mr. Brown for the period December 7, 1920, to March 2, 1921, inclusive.

Mr. Thomas E. Owen, for whose relief the bill is introduced, as special disbursing agent of the Clayton land office, paid and charged in his account for the second quarter, 1921, $80 for the services of Mr. Brown from December 7 to 31, inclusive, 1920. In his account for the third quarter, 1921, Mr. Owen paid $206.67 for Mr. Brown's services from January 1 to March 2, inclusive, 1921. The Government has received the benefit of Mr. Brown's services and, as stated in the receiver's letter of February 28, above referred to, it was only on account of an oversight that request for authority was not made and granted before the services were rendered.

The point about it is simply this: The receiver of the land office understood that the original employment was one pending permanent appointment, but instead of that the appointment was made under the act of Congress which required previous authority to be granted, and that mistake was the cause of the whole trouble. If he had simply made the request, it would have been granted, because the situation was such as to demand the services of the additional employee, and he was given authority to employ him from that time on; but this little interim was not covered by the exact language of the law. The services were performed, and they were necessary, so the Acting Secretary of the Interior recommends that the claim be allowed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the superior knowledge of the Senator from New Mexico upon these land-office matters justifies all of us, perhaps, in bowing to his views. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I shall vote against it. I can not see the wisdom of establishing a precedent of this character. The man in charge of the land office made the appointment without authority. Now we are to ratify it nunc pro tunc, so to speak. It is stated that if he had asked authority for the employment of this man it would have been granted, but it is dangerous to establish a precedent by which persons who are wholly unauthorized in the Government service to hire additional help may do so, relying upon a subsequent indorsement of their act by Congress.

I am not quite sure that the law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make those appointments if no appropriation has been made. I can see that there ought to be authority, perhaps, for the Secretary of the Interior, where an exigency arises in one of these land offices, to appoint temporarily some additional help, and no doubt the appropriation which is made covers contingencies of that character. If this were to be paid from a fund which was available, that would be one thing, but it is apparent it is not, because this carries an appropriation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I was going to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Acting Secretary of the Interior recommended that the bill be amended so as not to provide for a direct appropriation, but that he be credited on his account out of an appropriation already made. I wish to state, however, that since this report was made the term of the incumbent of the office has expired, his successor has been appointed, and it will be impossible now to make the allowance on his account. The Acting Secretary recommended that no new appropriation be made, but that he be credited on his account.

But, of course, that recommendation of the Acting Secretary was in May, 1921, and since that time Mr. Owen has gone out of office. So now the recommendation of the Acting Secretary would not be applicable to this case or furnish the relief, and I shall have to ask the Senate not to agree to the amendment which was proposed by the Committee on Claims following the recommendation of the then Acting Secretary. It would have been a very proper thing to have done at the time the Acting Secretary made his recommendation, but, owing to the fact that Mr. Owen is now out of office and his accounts have been closed so far as he is concerned, it is proper now to make a direct appropriation to cover the case, because his term of office has expired.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think there was covered back into the Treasury the amount here provided for?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, yes. Mr. Owen paid this money out of his own pocket. It was not allowed by the auditor at all. He paid the money out of his own pocket, and inasmuch as he was still in office at the time the Acting Secretary reported upon it, it could have been allowed in a subsequent account, but he is now out of office and, of course, that can not be done. The proper way to reach it is by making the direct appropriation.

Mr. KING. If there was a contingent appropriation from which the amount could have been paid and it was not paid from that but was paid by Mr. Owen himself, then it is clear that the contingent appropriation had that much surplus at the end of the year which had been covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right. That necessarily follows, because there was a fund which could have been used for that purpose in settling the account, but it was not done owing to the fact that there was no legal authority to credit it in the first place, and the fact now is that he is out of office and that would prevent any such legislation being the proper corrective method along that line.

Mr. KING. With that understanding, I shall not object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Thomas E. Owen, receiver of the land office at Clayton, N. Mex., for $286.67 paid during the second and third quarters, 1921, for clerk hire not previously authorized.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask that the amendment be rejected because of the statement which I have just made. It would have been a very proper amendment if the legislation had been enacted at the time it was recommended, but inasmuch as the then incumbent is now out of office and his accounts have been settled, leaving the matter of this personal charge, I think the amendment should not be agreed to and that the bill as originally introduced should be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $286.67 to Thomas E. Owen, receiver of the land office at Clayton, N. Mex., to reimburse him for moneys paid out by him for clerk hire in the said land office.

BUFFKIN & GIRVIN.

The bill (S. 1670) for the relief of Buffkin & Girvin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Buffkin & Girvin, of Jacksonville, Fla., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,114, in settlement of their claim for funds paid by them to the Government under protest, for manure, which was never delivered by the Government under certain contracts the said firm had with the Government for the purchase of manure at certain Army camps during the recent war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONTHLY PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 2158) to provide for the monthly payment of pensions was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

EXTENSION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PARK SYSTEM.

The bill (S. 3098) authorizing the extension of the park system in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the jurisdiction of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission, as granted in section 22, public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913 (Public No. 432), is hereby extended to cover the following tracts of land for park purposes, to wit: The tract known as the Klinge Road Valley Park, containing about 17.21 acres, as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and designated as park map No. 647 D, the Piney Branch Valley Park, containing about 16.3 acres, as shown on a map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and designated as park map No. 291, and the Patterson tract, known as parcel 129 (sub 2), containing about 81.76 acres; the commission is further authorized to reduce the area to be acquired in either of said tracts, where, by reason of improvements constructed or unreasonable prices asked, or for other reasons in their judgment the public interest may require: Provided, That if acquired by purchase the cost of the respective tracts shall not exceed the following sums: The Klinge Road Valley Park, $186,600; the Piney Branch Valley Park, $237,700; and the Patterson tract, $600,000.

Mr. BALL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 14, strike out the period after the figures "$600,000" and insert:

Provided further, That the tracts authorized to be acquired by this act shall become part of the park system of the District of Columbia and be under the control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, and the cost of the acquisition and the improvement and maintenance of said tracts as public parks shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the general funds of the Treasury in the same proportion as other expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the bill contemplates the expenditure of something like a million dollars for the acquisition of further lands for park purposes in the District of Columbia. That is quite a large sum of money, and it ought not to go without some consideration. Provision for these matters is usually made in the general District appropriation bill. I inquire of the Senator from Delaware why that course is not taken with reference to this appropriation?

Mr. BALL. That is the course taken in this instance. The pending bill does not carry the appropriation. The amendment which I have offered is simply a paragraph that was omitted in copying the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not referring to the amendment; I am referring to the bill itself.

Mr. BALL. The appropriation for this purpose will be carried in the District appropriation bill. This bill merely authorizes the purchase of the land, and there will be only a portion of the amount appropriated each year, the same as is done for other parks.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But exactly what does the bill mean? It provides that "the jurisdiction of the commission shall be extended over the following tracts" and then provides that "if acquired by purchase the cost of the respective tracts shall not exceed the following sums," specifying sums aggregating a million dollars.

Mr. BALL. The sums shall not exceed that total. The reason why I am very anxious that the bill should pass at this time is that unless the purchase of the land is authorized for park purposes now it will be very difficult, in the matter of cost hereafter, to acquire the land. These are all park lands which were authorized in the act of 1901 providing for a park system. These are the connecting links the purchase of which had not been authorized by the other acts. It is to complete the park system which was authorized at that time. For instance, on the Piney Branch extension between Sixteenth and Fourteenth Streets they are already making a fill for the purpose of erecting houses on a part of the land. Unless the purchase of that land is authorized now it will be very expensive ever to get it in the future, if, indeed, we could get it at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As I understand it, then, by the provisions of the bill we agree to take over these tracts and to acquire the title to them either by condemnation or by purchase.

Mr. BALL. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And we authorize the purchase of them at a cost aggregating $1,000,000.

Mr. BALL. Not to exceed $1,000,000. I will say that similar bills have been passed for the purchase of lands that have already been authorized for park purposes, and in no case has the purchase price equaled the amount stated in the bill. They have been able for this reason to get the land more cheaply. All those owning the land, after its purchase is by legislative enactment authorized for park purposes, can not sell it for any other purpose and must pay the taxes on the land in the meantime until it is purchased by the Government. Therefore, they are anxious to sell the land, to be paid for out of the first appropriation that is made for that purpose. For that reason they are willing to sell the land more cheaply than the amount fixed in any of the appropriation acts heretofore.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not rise for the purpose of contesting the acquisition of the land. I know nothing about it. However, heretofore, so far as my observation and recollection enable me to speak, these matters have been found in the District appropriation bill, particularly the matter of the acquisition of additional land for park purposes. When the District appropriation bill is up we usually have in the Senate something of a representation, and we all know that when the calendar is called on Monday morning there are ordinarily very few Senators here. What I rise to inquire about is, why the matter of the acquisition of the land is not deferred until the general District appropriation bill is before the Senate?

Mr. BALL. This is merely the authorization for the purchase of the land. One reason why it was called up this morning is that the District appropriation bill will be reported to the Senate probably by the middle of the week. If the Senate acts on the authorization, then the Committee on Appropriations will include, under a certain rule of the Senate, a small appropriation for the purchase of a part of the land.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. While it may be true that most of these matters have been taken care of in appropriation bills heretofore, they really are legislation and should not be taken care of in an appropriation bill. They should be cared for in a separate measure, and then the appropriation bill should carry the appropriation. It would be really a straining of our rules, except by unanimous consent, to put it in an appropriation bill. This is really the correct legislative way to do it, to first pass a bill authorizing the appropriation, and then the Appropriations Committee has the authority to provide for the appropriation in the District appropriation bill. That is the explanation that I would have for considering this bill. It is really the proper way to do it.

Mr. BALL. I would like to state that I was asked to introduce the bill as an amendment to the appropriation bill. After investigating the matter, I did not think it was proper as an amendment to that bill. It is distinctly legislation authorizing the purchase of the tracts, and I do not think it ought to be added on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do think the matter of acquiring ground for park purposes, involving an expenditure of $1,000,000, ought to be given more consideration than can ordinarily be accorded to it upon call of the calendar upon Monday morning. I do not like to object to the bill, as I understand it is approved by the District Committee, but it does seem to me a rather hasty kind of way to dispose of $1,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to say to the Senator that several members of the District Committee made personal investigation of the various tracts. We acquainted ourselves with the situation surrounding the matter, and we feel that prompt action is required in the interest of economy, because the tracts should be acquired as a part of the park system. If they are not acquired now, it is going to cost us a great deal more money to acquire them in the future.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to say to the Senator that I suppose these proceedings in connection with the tracts of land referred to are being conducted in the most businesslike way. I can understand very readily that if it is adjudged that these tracts are to be used for park purposes, the owners of them would like to have the Government take them over just as speedily as possible, inasmuch as they can not dispose of them for any other purposes; but, on the other hand, if we undertake to take them over for park purposes, then there will be no opportunity for bargaining to advantage, because then we shall have got them and will have to pay for them. I should like to inquire if any option has been secured upon any of these tracts?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think that any options have been obtained, but under this proposed legislation I think we shall be able to do just about what the Senator has suggested. I do not really know that I ought to make public the suggested procedure which was mentioned to us, but I will say to the Senator that those representing the park system did represent to us that if we would take care of this matter in this way they were satisfied that they could get the various units composing the different tracts much cheaper than if we should appropriate out and out a distinct sum for the whole tract. I do not want to say here on the floor just what procedure they said they expected to follow, but they feel that they can get these tracts much cheaper by our taking this course than in any other way.

I desire to say to the Senator from Montana, however, that these lands may be used for other purposes; indeed, they are very likely to be used for other purposes. For instance, the Patterson tract is very likely to be divided very soon and sold in lots.

The Senator from Kansas has just called my attention to the fact that some streets are being laid out, so that we shall either lose the land entirely or else we shall have to pay a much larger sum for it if we do not enact the legislation which is now proposed. Camp Meigs was located on a part of that tract, and some improvements have been made there which will be very desirable in connection with its use for park purposes. Very likely we shall lose all of them unless the property is speedily acquired.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know how it may be out in the State of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], but in my State I have observed that whenever it is perfectly well known that a certain particular tract is going to be used for public purposes, its value suddenly appreciates in the most marvelous way, so that ordinarily in connection with such a project we endeavor to get an option on the tract. If we secure the option at a reasonable price, then we devote the land to public purposes; and if we do not, then we do not devote it to public purposes. When the owners know perfectly well that this land is going to be taken for park purposes, naturally they are going to drive their price just as high as they possibly can, limited only by what they imagine they will be awarded upon proceedings in eminent domain.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall be glad to tell the Senator from Montana privately what the plan is which it is proposed to follow and the facts on which I base my judgment as to their ability to get these tracts at pretty reasonable rates; but I had rather not make the statement on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Edge in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], in view of the suggestion which has been urged by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]—and it is a very pertinent suggestion and worthy of consideration—whether it would not be wise to strike out the amount which is named as the maximum to be paid?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hardly think so, because the matter then would be wide open.

Mr. KING. Then we could provide for the purchase of the tracts for a suitable price, a report to be submitted to Congress before the transaction has been fully consummated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the limits are fixed, and the limits, as I understand, which we have placed in the bill are really below the value of the property to-day.

Mr. KING. As quoted on the market?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I should like to say—

Mr. SWANSON. I do not want to interrupt the discussion, but I desire to raise a point of order under the rule limiting debate to five minutes.

Mr. KING. I have not used all of my time.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not desire to object to the bill, but if the discussion is going to take up all of the morning hour—

Mr. KING. I have the floor, and at the expiration of my five minutes the Senator from Virginia may object to the consideration of the bill if he wishes to do so.

Mr. President, I hope my reputation for economy will reassure some Senators who might be opposed to this bill in their support of it. I think one mistake which this city and other cities have made is found in the fact that they have failed to appreciate the importance of parks and have not purchased land for park purposes when they might have done so at a reasonable price and have consequently been compelled to purchase land for such purposes upon an advancing market when prices had reached altitudinous heights. I have made some investigations in relation to this matter, and I think that we ought to acquire these tracts as well as others. I think it has been very unfortunate that the District and Congress have not in the past purchased more land than they have acquired for park purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. ELLIOTT.

The bill (S. 1784) for the relief of John B. Elliott, was announced as next in order, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John B. Elliott, whose position as collector of customs of collection district No. 27 (formerly known as the district of southern California) was inadvertently abolished under the provisions of the Executive order of February 2, 1920, the salary he would have received as collector of customs of the newly created district No. 27 (known as the district of Los Angeles) from February 2, 1920, to April 5, 1920, inclusive, had not his position been so abolished.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. I will ask that the report on the bill be read. It is very short, and I think explains fully the reason why the bill should be passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it looks from the bill itself—I have had no opportunity to read the report—that the Government abolished an office and now they are sorry for it and they are going to pay the official who had been in charge a salary although the office was abolished. Of course if there has been an abolition of an office under either a Democratic or a Republican administration I think we are to be congratulated.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the subcommittee having charge of the bill went into it pretty carefully. It was urged by the department that the amount, aggregating, I think, about $700, claimed should be allowed. The committee seemed to have no hesitation about submitting a favorable report on the measure. I ask that the Secretary read the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the report (No. 479) submitted by Mr. CAPPER on the 3d instant, which is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1784) for the relief of John B. Elliott, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in House Report No. 1221, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

[House Rept. No. 1221, 66th Cong., 3d sess.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4250) for the relief of John B. Elliott, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment: Strike out section 2.

Appended hereto is Senate Report No. 619, which is made a part of this report.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4250) for the relief of John B. Elliott, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

This bill provides for the interrupted and unpaid salary due John B. Elliott, collector of the port of Los Angeles, Calif., amounting to $888.89, accidentally cut off by an Executive order.

The committee recommend that it do pass.

The Secretary of the Treasury has given his approval of the bill in the following letter to the committee:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, April 29, 1920.

THE CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
United States Senate.

SIR: Reference is made to your letter of the 20th instant transmitting copy of S. 4250, for the relief of John B. Elliott, collector of customs at Los Angeles, Calif., in which you request, for the use of your committee, all papers or copies of the same in the files of this department relating to the matter, together with the department's opinion as to the merits of said bill.

In reply I have to inform you that when the Executive order of February 2, 1920, creating the new customs collection district of San Diego (designated as district No. 25) was prepared at the department it was not the intention to disturb Mr. Elliott's position as collector of customs but merely to transfer a portion of the territory embraced in the old district of southern California to the newly created one of San Diego.

Under the provisions of the Executive order above referred to, the abolishment of the old district of southern California was synchronous with the creation of the two new districts of Los Angeles and San Diego, and Mr. Elliott continued to perform the functions of the office of collector of customs at Los Angeles until March 19, 1920, at which time he was notified by telegram that the Solicitor of the Treasury had ruled that the Executive order of February 2 had abolished his position from that date and that it would be necessary for him to be reappointed. As the result of the solicitor's ruling, Deputy Collector L. I. Sturm, of the Los Angeles customhouse, was, on March 23, 1920, appointed acting collector of customs for the newly created district of Los Angeles, without additional compensation and effective as of February 2, to serve until Mr. Elliott's appointment as collector of said district had been confirmed by the Senate. Mr. Elliott's appointment as collector of the new district of Los Angeles was confirmed by the Senate on April 6, and although he had in fact performed the duties of the office of collector up to March 23 and had thereafter continued to exercise supervision over the work of his district until his reappointment had been confirmed by the Senate, under the solicitor's ruling herebefore referred to he was technically without pay status during the period from February 2, 1920, to April 5, 1920, inclusive.

The department considers Mr. Elliott justly entitled to the salary that accrued from the date of the Executive order which abolished the old district of southern California to the date of the confirmation by the Senate of his reappointment as collector of the new district of Los Angeles on April 6, 1920, and bill S. 4250 accordingly meets with its approval.

For the information of your committee I have the honor to transmit herewith:

1. Copy of the Executive order of February 2, 1920.
2. Copy of the solicitor's opinion of March 17, 1920.
3. Copy of department telegram of March 19, 1920, notifying Collector Elliott of the necessity for his reappointment.
4. Copy of department telegram of March 23, 1920, appointing Deputy Collector Sturm as acting collector at Los Angeles to serve pending the confirmation of Mr. Elliott's reappointment.

Respectfully,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the request of the Senator, but this is an indication of the absurd practice of the Government in creating a multitude of collectors' districts. The absurdity of having one district at Los Angeles and one at San Diego is apparent. We have been promised by several Secretaries of the Treasury that a large number of collectors' districts would be abolished. I regret that some of us did not have our attention challenged to the fact that we were creating a new district at San Diego and recreating the district at Los Angeles. Talk about the fifth wheel to a coach—this is a sixth or seventh wheel to a coach. It is the most absurd proceeding. Of course, this man has served during the period and he ought to be paid, but I protest against the action of the Government in creating a large multitude of unnecessary and superfluous offices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CITY OF BALTIMORE.

The bill (S. 2095) to reimburse the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, for moneys expended to aid the United States in the construction of works of defense during the Civil War, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH ENEMY ACT.

The bill (S. 2745) to amend subdivision (3) of subsection (B) of section 9 of an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to that bill. I did not think the calendar would be taken up this morning. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the bill, but I have not the amendment here, and I shall be compelled to ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I shall not object to its consideration, Mr. President, although I regret that I have not here the amendment to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the word "thereof," to insert "or the minor daughter or daughters of such woman, she being deceased," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (3) of subsection (B) of section 9 of an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended, be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"(3) A woman who at the time of her marriage was a citizen of the United States or was a daughter of a resident citizen of the United States and herself a resident or former resident thereof, or the minor daughter or daughters of such woman, she being deceased, and who prior to April 6, 1917, intermarried with a subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary, and that the money or other property concerned was not acquired by such woman, either directly or indirectly, from any subject or citizen of Germany or Austria-Hungary, subsequent to January 1, 1917."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGIL O. McWHORTER.

The bill (H. R. 1948) for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT G. WHITFIELD.

The bill (H. R. 7483) for the relief of Robert G. Whitfield was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Robert G. Whitfield, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $261.60 as a refund of a donation which Robert G. Whitfield made to the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill.

Mr. CAPPER. I ask that the Secretary may read the report.

Mr. KING. Yes; let the report be read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the report (No. 489) submitted by Mr. CAPPER on the 9th instant, and read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7483) for the relief of Robert G. Whitfield, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in House Report No. 271, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

[House Report No. 271, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7438) for the relief of Robert G. Whitfield, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

On April 2, 1919, the Treasury Department received from Robert G. Whitfield a check in the sum of $261.60, and the same was deposited as a donation to the Government, the amount being covered into the Treasury by miscellaneous warrant No. 68 for the fourth quarter of 1919.

At the time, and for a long while prior thereto, Mr. Whitfield was insane. In December, 1919, he was committed to the Washington State Hospital for the Insane at Fort Steilacoom, where he is now confined.

Above sum of money can only be withdrawn pursuant to an act of Congress.

Attached herewith and made a part of this report are letters from the Treasury Department. Also affidavit from Wilmot G. Whitfield and commitment papers establishing the insanity of Robert G. Whitfield.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 9, 1921.

HON. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. EDMONDS: In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, requesting a report on bill H. R. 7483, copy of which was inclosed with your letter, providing for the relief of Robert G. Whitfield, I have the honor to advise you that this department would interpose no objection to the passage of the bill in question. In connection therewith your attention is invited to letter of this department, dated May 13, 1920, making report on a similar bill, H. R. 13762, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, for the relief of Mr. Whitfield, and inclosing copies of correspondence in the case.

It appears that under date of April 2, 1919, this department received a communication from Robert G. Whitfield, Calgary, Alberta, inclosing a check for $261.60, and stated that—

"It seems some one used to make my safe, when a stamp clerk in the Seattle post office from 1909 to July, 1916, a repose for conscience money of some kind."

The amount is also referred to on a receipt which was given by him to the postmaster at Seattle that same was delivered to Mr. Whitfield, as "over and above surplus at stamp window."

The check above mentioned was collected and the proceeds deposited as a miscellaneous receipt under the title "Money received from persons unknown," the amount, $261.60, being covered into the Treasury of the United States under date of May 31, 1919, by miscellaneous receipt warrant No. 68, fourth quarter, 1919, and moneys so covered into the Treasury can not be withdrawn therefrom except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

Subsequent correspondence developed the fact that Mr. Robert G. Whitfield had made the remittance when insane, he having been later committed to the Western Washington Hospital for the Insane, and on January 28, 1920, his brother, Mr. Wilmot G. Whitfield, through his attorney, filed a certified copy of letters of guardianship dated December 29, 1919, issued by the Superior Court of the State of Washington.

Yours, very truly,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 13, 1920.

HON. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, inclosing copy of bill (H. R. 13762) for the relief of Robert G. Whitfield.

As requested in your letter above referred to, there is inclosed herewith copy of correspondence in this case.

This department would interpose no objection to the passage of the bill in question.

Respectfully,

D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CITY OF BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, when Order of Business 484, Senate bill 2095, was reached on the calendar, I asked to have it go over. I desire to withdraw my objection to the consideration of that measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will recur to Senate bill 2095.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2095) to reimburse the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, for moneys expended to aid the United States in the construction of works of defense during the Civil War, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$202,022.99, being the balance due said city for amounts advanced and expenses incurred and paid arising out of the request of Maj. Gen. R. C. Schenck, United States Army, dated June 20, 1863, to aid the United States in the construction of works of defense in and around the city of Baltimore during the Civil War," and to insert "$173,073.60, expended by said city in carrying out the request of Maj. Gen. R. C. Schenck, United States Army, to aid the United States in the construction of works of defense in and around the city of Baltimore on account of the Civil War," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $173,073.60, expended by said city in carrying out the request of Maj. Gen. R. C. Schenck, United States Army, to aid the United States in the construction of works of defense in and around the city of Baltimore on account of the Civil War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES JOHNSON.

The bill (S. 942) for the relief of James Johnson was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSFER OF CUSTODY OF RELICS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) transferring to the custody of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution certain relics now in the possession of the Department of State was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Whereas by a joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, approved March 4, 1844, the sword of George Washington and the staff of Benjamin Franklin were accepted in the name of the Nation as gifts from Samuel T. Washington and deposited for safe-keeping in the Department of State; and

Whereas by a joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, approved February 28, 1855, the sword of Andrew Jackson was accepted in the name of the Nation as a gift from the family of Gen. Robert Armstrong and deposited for safe-keeping in the Department of State; and

Whereas it is represented by the Secretary of State that he has no appropriate place for the exhibition of these relics: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer the said relics to the custody of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution for safe-keeping and exhibition in the National Museum.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION ACT.

The bill (H. R. 8924) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved March 30, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second proviso of the first paragraph under the head "Miscellaneous" of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved March 30, 1920 (41 Stats. L., p. 548), is amended to read as follows:

"Provided further, That any cadet now at the academy may, at his option exercised prior to June 11, 1920, continue at the academy one additional year and postpone thereby his prospective graduation. Any cadet not electing so to prolong his course shall be graduated in the year assigned his class prior to the passage of this act, except that any such cadet may subsequently, at any time not less than three months prior to his prospective graduation in such year, choose to reexercise such option for the purpose of so prolonging his course."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOTEL ON FORT MONROE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to erect and maintain a hotel upon the Fort Monroe Military Reservation in Virginia was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to such individuals or corporations as to him may seem proper to construct, operate, and maintain a hotel upon the Fort Monroe Military Reservation in Virginia, for a term not exceeding 50 years, upon such site, according to such plans and dimensions, and subject to such conditions and restrictions as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the State of Virginia, by its general assembly and governor, shall by proper legal enactment give the consent of such State to the construction, operation, and maintenance of such hotel: Provided further, That after the expiration of the grant herein authorized, or in case at any time previous thereto the building hereby authorized is destroyed by fire or other casualty, then all buildings erected or other installations made on said site or the remains thereof shall be removed and the site restored at the expense of the then owner or owners of such hotel to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, whenever he shall so direct, unless such grant shall be renewed for another term not exceeding 50 years, which renewal is hereby authorized in the discretion of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That no claim for damages against the United States shall be made by reason of the enforcement of any conditions or restrictions which have been approved by the Secretary of War or by reason of the removal of buildings and installations and restoration of the site thereof: And provided further, That the buildings so erected shall be subject to State, local, and national taxation as other property located in the county of Elizabeth City, Va.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia if this joint resolution will permit the erection of a hotel on the site of the old Chamberlin Hotel?

Mr. SWANSON. It does not designate the specific place, but it allows the Secretary of War to pass upon the plans and authorize the erection of a hotel on that reservation.

Mr. CALDER. Does it permit the charging of rental?

Mr. SWANSON. It permits the charging of rental and the making of all other conditions that may be regarded as necessary. I will state that the permit for the erection of the old Chamberlin Hotel was given solely to John Chamberlin, and when it burned down after his death it could not be reerected.

Mr. FLETCHER. The old Chamberlin Hotel was destroyed by fire, and this hotel is to take the place of the old one.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Secretary have any control over the management of the hotel?

Mr. SWANSON. He can make any provision he pleases under this joint resolution. It was drawn by the War Department, and they are very anxious to have it passed. It was sent down here, and I introduced it with the conditions imposed by them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEGLIGENT DIPPING OF TICK-INFESTED CATTLE.

The bill (S. 854) to reimburse J. B. Glanville and others for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, was considered as in Committee of the whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $105.25 to J. B. Glanville; the sum of $60 to R. Pendergraft; the sum of $205 to Daniel H. Mehl; the sum of $350 to E. C. Stockebrand; the sum of $1,193 to Albert Matti; the sum of $80 to Fred Reine; the sum of $100 to George M. Miller; the sum of $70 to R. F. Morton; the sum of $9,102.98 to George F. Shotwell; the sum of $100 to Romain Gurley; the sum of $3,740.54 to W. E. Huntsinger; the sum of $662.79 to Arthur Letts; the sum of $7,080.74 to James Dobbs; the sum of $36,198.60 to McCready, Shroyer & Gafford; the sum of $3,106.20 to Pet Nation; the sum of $52,528.31 to Fred Nation; the sum of $13,960 to Carl Nation; the sum of $19,987.56 to Nation & Berns; the sum of $4,743.10 to Donaldson & Barker; the sum of $15,039.91 to Charles H. Giddings; the sum of $2,446.05 to F. L. Giddings; the sum of $278 to June Williams; the sum of $1,112.53 to F. Wesley Barker; the sum of $9,587.98 to T. M. Stribling; the sum of $5,885.37 to Whittington & Sweeney; the sum of $12,830.16 to Crocker, Robb & Kitzelman; the sum of $26,841.56 to Hudelson & Crocker Bros.; the sum of $12,966.30 to Hudelson, Whittington & Crocker Bros.; the sum of $4,261.44 to Clay & Easley; the sum of $152.49 to G. F. Brough; the sum of $482.26 to Robert L. Wood; in all, the sum of $245,258.12 for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligence of the veterinary inspectors employed by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, in their failure to properly dip 48 head of Texas cattle that were shipped from Fort Worth stockyards in April, 1919, by Fred Nation to Kansas, where they infested the native Kansas cattle with the Texas fever tick. Said sums to be paid to each of the above-named parties in full for all losses and damages so sustained by them.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I would like to know what is the aggregate amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For losses and damages, $245,258.12.

Mr. DIAL. If we commence passing bills of this kind, Mr. President, it will be establishing a very bad precedent.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to state to the Senator that the precedent has already been set. A similar case of damage was settled in the last Congress. This matter has been submitted to the department, and a report has been made and the figures agreed to by the Department of Agriculture. There is no question about the carelessness, and there is no question about the disease having been transmitted as a result of the imperfect dipping.

Mr. DIAL. Then it is time to get rid of some of the officials guilty of such negligence. I do not see how the country can stand the passage of such bills very long.

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF OFFICERS OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF ATLANTA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to bring to the attention of the Senate a question which I think is of considerable importance, not only to the Senate and the House but to the whole country.

I have had occasion to criticize Gov. Harding of the Federal Reserve Board for participating in politics through the Federal Reserve Board. There are thousands of people in the country who believe that he bore down harder with that deflation policy just before the election of 1920 than at any other time. As I have said before, the Washington Times said he had changed his politics and supported the Republican ticket.

A few days ago the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] made a speech upon the floor of this Senate which he had thoroughly prepared, and in which he attacked me a number of times. I intimated in my speech that he had been prevailed upon to make that speech. I do not mean to say that the Senator meant to do anything wrong himself, but that he was imposed upon and deceived by members of the Federal Reserve Board and those interested, whose crooked conduct I have condemned.

The speech made by the Senator from Virginia contained many inaccurate statements of fact pertaining to the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. I challenged many of the statements, and I quoted from the former Comptroller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams, to show that those statements were inaccurate and misleading.

Mr. President, I have just received a letter from a good friend in my State, a part of which I am going to read to the Senate without giving his name. He is a banker and I want the Senate to say what action we shall take with regard to the matter mentioned in the letter.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suffer an interruption from the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEFLIN. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has interrupted the Senator from Alabama. Will the Senator from Alabama suffer an interruption?

Mr. WILLIS. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator knows I do not desire to interrupt his speech, but I wondered if he would not let this matter go over until we get through with the morning hour. There are two or three bills which many of us are very much interested in which can not come up after 2 o'clock.

Mr. HEFLIN. It will not take me three minutes to conclude.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

Mr. HEFLIN. This letter reads:

FEBRUARY 15, 1922.

DEAR SENATOR HEFLIN: A few days ago the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta sent us a copy of Senator GLASS's speech on the Federal reserve system and asked that we read it in order to get a correct idea of the way in which the system had been administered and to write them what we thought about the speech.

Mr. President, the Federal reserve banks hold in their hands the lifeblood of business in my section of the country. The bankers in my State must go to the Federal reserve bank in Atlanta for money to be used by the farmers, the merchants, and other people engaged in business in our State. The Federal Reserve Board, whose conduct I have condemned and denounced, appoints the governor of the Federal reserve bank and the chairman of the board. That bank, which was never intended to be in politics, is procuring speeches made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and is distributing those speeches to bankers in my State, accompanied by letters from the Atlanta bank, urging the recipients to read the speech and to write back to that bank, to which they must apply for loans, just what they think of the speech; in other words, they demand to know whether they agree with the Senator from Virginia, who defended the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board, or the Senator from Alabama, who criticizes and condemns it.

The letter from my friend, the Alabama banker, says further:

We wrote them, of course, that we thought that you and the Manufacturers' Record were nearer right than Senator GLASS in this controversy, but it has occurred to the writer that the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta really has no business sending out to your constituents the speech of any Senator or Representative in Congress at the expense for printing letters and postage of the Atlanta bank.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time under the five-minute rule has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent that I be given two minutes more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEFLIN. The letter proceeds:

It occurs to me that the Atlanta bank is now doing what it can to bring you into disfavor with your constituents because you have had the temerity to discuss the mistakes of the members of the Federal Reserve Board and the officers of the several banks.

Of course, I do not want to get mixed up in politics in any way, and only write you this because my sympathies in this matter are with you and to put you on your guard.

Mr. President, I bring this to the attention of the Senate for the purpose of laying a foundation for a resolution to investigate the Atlanta bank's activities in this matter and for the purpose of having investigated the governor and the chairman of the board in Atlanta with the view of taking the steps necessary to keep the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta out of politics and safeguard the interests of our people.

If these men can do a thing like that, if this great banking system can take a hand in politics in this way, then a great banking system is being assaulted from within, and the Senate owes it to that system and to itself to stop this dangerous conduct now.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have but a word to say with respect to what has just been said by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and that is that his statement made some days ago, as he said, and repeated to-day, that the Senator from Virginia was induced to make the speech which he did make is utterly untrue.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I stated that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Virginia made his speech of his own accord, without suggestions from any source. As to the speech being sent to banks in Alabama or anywhere else, I have nothing to say. I hope it will be sent to all the banks and to all people who care to read it.

NEGLIGENT DIPPING OF TICK-INFESTED CATTLE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 854) to reimburse J. B. Glanville and others for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not know that I will object to this bill finally, but it comes at a time when we have not even had an opportunity to read the report on it, and I am apprehensive about the danger of a procedure of this kind. We may be flooded with claims from all over the country of this sort, it seems to me, if we pass this bill. If these Federal inspectors are so negligent in the discharge of their duties as to cause the unnecessary death of cattle and loss to the people who are endeavoring to take advantage of the provisions made for dipping cattle, the inspectors themselves undoubtedly ought to be held responsible.

I am heartily in accord with the aid given to cattle owners in this respect. I believe the system ought to be enforced and lived up to and that there ought to be a way of ridding the cattle of ticks throughout this country from one end to the other. But the inspectors are the people who ought to be made to pay the damages if such losses have occurred, and I am afraid that if we open the door for claims against the Government of this kind, there will be no limit to this sort of a demand. I would like, if the Senator can see his way clear, to have the bill go over for the present, in order to give us an opportunity to look into the report.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator desires to examine the report, that will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to do that. It may be that I shall not object to it later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator request the reading of the report?

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask to have the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HAYES MEMORIAL MUSEUM, FREMONT, OHIO.

The bill (S. 3046) to donate the gates at the head of West Executive Avenue, in the city of Washington, D. C., to the Hayes Memorial Museum, Fremont, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the Hayes Memorial Museum, of Spiegel Grove, Fremont, Ohio, the iron gates at the head of West Executive Avenue, in the city of Washington, D. C.: Provided, That the United States shall incur no expense whatever in connection with the removal and shipment of these gates.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would like to know something about what gates are referred to.

Mr. WILLIS. They are the big iron gates at the head of the avenue which separates the Executive Grounds from the State, War, and Navy Building. As the Senator knows, they are an obstruction to traffic, and have been for years, as far as that is concerned. The particular project that is in mind, the Hayes Memorial, is located at Fremont, Ohio, donated to that city by Col. Webb Hayes, whom the Senator knows. This bill has the approval of the War Department, the President, and everyone else concerned, so far as I know. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, my reference to the speech of the Senator from Virginia—

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit a vote on this bill, so that we can get it out of the way?

Mr. HEFLIN. In just one minute.

Mr. WILLIS. From a glance at the clock I see there will be only one minute. Let us vote on this bill, and then I will be delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield in response to the very touching appeal of the Senator from Ohio.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (S. 2765) for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md. It will take but a moment. It is a formal matter, which will provoke no discussion, and it can be disposed of in a very few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the Senate take up for consideration Senate bill 2765. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, after the 15th day of December, 1921, 43 per cent United States Treasury certificates of indebtedness Nos. 13387 and 13388, of the denomination of $10,000 each, series TD-1920, dated January 2, 1920, and maturing December 15, 1920, with interest from June 15, 1920, to December 15, 1920, in favor of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, without presentation of the certificates, the said certificates of indebtedness having been stolen, lost, or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificates of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented for payment; Provided further, That the said Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of the said certificates of indebtedness of the United States of America, in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stolen, lost, or destroyed certificates of indebtedness hereinbefore described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF DISABLED ARMY OFFICERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 1565) making eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided for officers of the Regular Army all officers of the United States Army during the World War who have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

Mr. BURSUM rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico allow me to call up the joint resolution to which I referred a few moments ago?

Mr. BURSUM. Will its consideration be likely to lead to debate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think not. I think it will only take a moment to dispose of it.

Mr. BURSUM. With that understanding, I consent.

OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED RADIO STATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, lines 2 and 3, to strike out the words "in any event on June 30, 1922," and insert the words "on June 30, 1927," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, under the terms and conditions and at rates prescribed by him, which rates shall be just and reasonable, and which, upon complaint, shall be subject to review and revision by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to use all radio stations and apparatus, wherever located, owned by the United States and under the control of the Navy Department—(a) for the reception and transmission of press messages offered by any newspaper published in the United States, its Territories, or possessions, or published by citizens of the United States, in foreign countries, or by any press association of the United States, and—(b) for the reception and transmission of private commercial messages: Provided, That the rates fixed for the reception and transmission of all such messages, other than press messages between the Pacific coast of the United States and the Orient, shall not be less than the rates charged by privately owned and operated stations for like messages and service: Provided further, That the right to use such stations for any of the purposes named in this section, except for the reception and transmission of press messages, other than press messages between the Atlantic coast of the United States and ships at sea, shall terminate and cease as between any countries or localities or between any locality and privately operated ships, whenever privately owned and operated stations are capable of meeting the normal communication requirements between such countries or localities or between any locality and privately operated ships, and the Secretary of Commerce shall have notified the Secretary of the Navy thereof, and all rights conferred by this section shall terminate and cease on June 30, 1927.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On page 2, line 13, after the words "United States," I move to insert the words "Hawaii and Alaska." Through a mistake in the committee the bill reads: "Messages between the Pacific coast of the United States and the Orient." That does not include communications with Hawaii and Alaska, which should be included. I therefore move that the words "Hawaii and Alaska" be inserted after the words "United States," in line 13, page 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, after the words "United States" insert "Hawaii and Alaska," so as to make the sentence read:

That the rates fixed for the reception and transmission of such messages, other than press messages between the Pacific coast of the United States, Hawaii, and Alaska, and the Orient, shall not be less than the rates charged by privately owned and operated stations for like messages and service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in connection with the consideration of the radio bill which the Senate acted on a few moments ago a letter from the President of the United States and a letter from Mr. V. S. McClatchy, of the Sacramento Bee, to Mr. Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of directors of the Radio Corporation of America. I ask that it be printed immediately following the action of the Senate upon the bill referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 13, 1922.

HON. CARROLL S. PAGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR PAGE: The Naval Committee very recently reported in favor of House joint resolution No. 7, relating to the extension of time under which there is authorized the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes. This is the measure in which the press is very greatly interested, looking to the promotion of a better and more helpful exchange of news with the Orient and the islands of the Pacific. I am well convinced that the passage of this resolution would be highly beneficial.

Very truly, yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

DECEMBER 27, 1921.

OWEN D. YOUNG, Esq.,
Chairman Board of Directors,
Radio Corporation of America,
233 Broadway, New York.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: This acknowledges your letter of December 22, after reading which I regret sincerely that I did not make the attempt to see you personally while in New York.

I understand and to a great degree sympathize with your attitude in regard to control and use of Government radio facilities for transmission of news and commercial messages. I am satisfied, however, that on a thorough understanding of the matter as I submitted it to the two committees of Congress and as you will find it covered in the transcript of my statements before them, made in late November and early December, you will perhaps be in accord with the plans suggested by me.

I made practically the following points:

1. That because of extensive cable and radio facilities and the 7-cent word rate for news, it is not necessary at this time to urge use of Government radio for trans-Atlantic news communication.

2. That existing conditions on the Pacific point to the use, temporarily at least, of such Government facilities as the only means for furnishing news communication at a word rate sufficiently low to maintain service.

3. That in view of these conditions authorization to the Navy Department for use of its facilities may be fairly confined to news purposes across the Pacific, and these, again, as between any two certain points, limited to use until such time only as privately operated stations are in position to accord service between such points.

This statement of my position seemed to eliminate the objections offered by those in both committees most antagonistic to use of Government radio for news purposes.

If you will be kind enough to have your representative in Washington look over the transcript of my statement made in executive session before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on the day in late November recess was taken, and before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs in open session December 8, I think you will be prepared to indorse the action which I urge.

I notice with gratification your closing statement that if it is made clear to you that my program is no menace to the investment in private companies you will gladly support it because you believe it to be in the interest of America.

I stated very clearly to each committee that I was in accord with the principle of encouraging and supporting the establishment of radio communication by privately operated companies and urged the present plan because it would not take from privately operated companies business which they would otherwise have or which they are willing to take at the rate necessary to maintain it. In the absence of authority in the Navy to carry on this business the present service across the Pacific which is commencing to prove adequate and satisfactory, must entirely cease. We will then revert to conditions which existed before the war under which communication between this country and China, Japan, and the Philippines depended entirely upon British and Japanese news agencies. On that situation I need make no comment.

In principle I am so thoroughly in accord with what I understand to be your own views and desires that it would please me if you would indicate wherein, if at all, my program as herein outlined and as covered in my statements before the committees would interfere with legitimate business of private radio companies or would be in any way anything save a benefit to the interests of this Nation.

Very truly, yours,

V. S. McCLATCHY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD AND FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF ATLANTA.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as I was about to say when interrupted, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said that he made a speech of his own accord and did not consult or tell anybody that he was going to speak. It was a rather strange thing that at the time he made his speech Gov. Harding, and at least one other member of the board, came up and sat in the gallery. They had notice from somebody as to when the Senator from Virginia was going to speak. They stayed and heard his speech.

The Senator from Virginia said that he would like to see the speech sent to all the banks and to anybody else who will read it. I have no objection to that. I would like to have my speech go along with it. I do not object to the Senator from Virginia circulating his speech, but I do object to the Federal Reserve Board circulating the speech at the expense of the Government. I object to the Federal Reserve Bank in Atlanta circulating the speech at the expense of the people who support that bank. I object to that bank, or any other bank in the great Federal reserve system, taking such a hand in politics. I have no objection to the speech of the Senator from Virginia being circulated because, as I said and I wish to repeat, he is the only Democrat in the Senate from the South, especially from the principal cotton-growing States, who would make a speech in this Chamber or to the public anywhere, defending the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy.

I have not undertaken to circulate my speech. I have not sent it to a single newspaper in the country. I did what I thought was my duty here in replying to the speech made by the Senator from Virginia. I replied to his speech later in a speech of five and one-half hours long, and I will have that speech ready to be printed in the RECORD in a very few days. I differed with the Senator from Virginia, as I had a right to do, and he had a right to differ with me; but it is not the business of the Federal Reserve Board or of the Federal reserve banks to distribute my speeches or the speeches of the Senator from Virginia.

I want to tell the Senate and the country that they who control the money supply and the credits of the country control the life-giving power of the business of the country, and whenever you put it in the power of a bank to send out literature attacking the position of somebody they hope to hurt and demanding of the local bank which has to come to them to borrow money to report to them just how it feels about the subject, you are putting a club of coercion and intimidation in the hands of the Federal reserve bank and you are mistreating and working grave injury to the local banks and therefore working injury to the people.

How would the president of a local bank in Alabama feel if he indorsed my position, and was seeking a loan from the bank in Atlanta, and he was called upon to tell the Atlanta bank, which wanted my position repudiated, his position in the matter, and he should write and say that he agreed with me, would the Atlanta bank enthuse over the matter of granting him the accommodation he wanted? Shall the Atlanta bank or any other regional bank in the system be permitted to handle money that the Government issues directly or indirectly to carry on a political propaganda?

An Atlanta bank, located in the State of Georgia, is distributing the speeches of the Senator from Virginia amongst the banks in my State, and a banker writes me that it is done for the purpose of injuring me politically. Mr. President, the bank in Atlanta and the 11 other Federal reserve banks can not deter or stop me in fighting the battle that I am fighting for a fair, just, free, and honest banking business in America. I do not intend to sit silent and permit this great banking system to be changed into an instrument of business disaster or an agency of political propaganda.

Now, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is one of the reputed authors of the Federal reserve banking system. He introduced the bill in the House. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] said on this floor that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] was the real author of the bill. Nearly all, if not all, of the Democrats supported it. I helped to pass it, and I certainly never intended that it should be mismanaged as it has been, and made to conform exactly to what the old system was when Wall Street could produce a panic in 24 hours, contract the currency, deflate credits, and control the situation absolutely. That is what we had under the old system. That is what we have had for months under the new system under the administration of a board that shaped its creed for its cravings and swallowed its convictions for a job.

Mr. President, this is a serious matter. This banking system belongs to the country. The people in America have a right to demand that it be kept out of politics and true to the purposes for which it was created. When a Senator from a cotton-growing State whose people were literally crucified under the deflation policy, started by a resolution introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] and carried out by the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Gov. Harding, gets up here or any other place to tell the truth about this thing the board and its yelpers begin to howl.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator quote the resolution to which he refers?

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator's resolution, which passed the Senate May 17, 1920, calling on the board to know what it was going to do about deflation. That is the resolution I refer to.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator continue?

Mr. HEFLIN. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. McCORMICK. What else did the resolution contain?

Mr. HEFLIN. It had a camouflaging, misleading—

Mr. McCORMICK. Wait a minute!

Mr. HEFLIN (continuing). Line in the last part of it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think the Senator does not want to impute to a colleague here a motive to camouflage. I think, under the rule, he will consider that is improper.

Mr. HEFLIN. The resolution speaks for itself.

Mr. McCORMICK. It does.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think this, and I am bringing it to the attention of the Senator, that the last line in it deceived a good many Senators—I do not charge that it was put there for that purpose—but the last line said something about "money for crop-moving purposes," or something to that effect. In my judgment that part of it deceived the Senate. The resolution passed the Republican Senate, and became the order of this body. I want to place the responsibility for deflation just where it belongs.

But, Mr. President, I was coming to a situation that has confronted us for some time. I have studied this situation for months and months; I have read the bulletins of the Federal Reserve Board; I have read the stock-market papers of the country; I have read various periodicals; I have read the book written by Col. George Armstrong, of Fort Worth, Tex., a big cotton producer, and he calls that book "The Crime of 1920"; I have read the Manufacturers' Record, which has indicted, arraigned, and convicted the Federal Reserve Board of "hoarding the Nation's life blood and refusing to let it circulate." I contended that that policy was wrong; that it was an outrage upon the American people, and that it destroyed property values by the billions. Being convinced as I was that that was true, I dared in my place as a United States Senator to get up here and say that.

Now, then, what do we find? We find the Federal Reserve Board coming up and listening and smiling when the Senator from Virginia makes his speech. Then we find the speech being circulated in my State among the bankers by the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta. I repeat, the governor of the Federal Reserve Board here and his board name the governor and the chairman of the board of the bank in Atlanta, and through that bank the Federal Reserve Board is circulating an unwarranted and unfounded attack on me and my position regarding the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. President, in that speech which I made I criticized the extravagance of the New York Federal Reserve Bank. I condemned the graft business in which that bank had indulged when it raised the salaries of clerks who were getting $1,200 a year to $12,000 a year, of those who were getting $1,600 a year to $16,000 a year, of those who were getting $1,800 a year to $18,000 a year, of those who were getting $2,500 a year to $25,000 a year, and the salary of the president of the bank from $30,000 a year to $50,000 a year.

I condemned the officials of that bank for spending more than $4,000,000 to buy just one lot on which to build a bank, the lot costing more than all of the 26 buildings of the Corn Exchange National Bank of New York. I was condemning all that; and the Senator from Virginia criticized me and attacked my position.

I condemned that board for lending money by the millions in New York when it was lending only a pittance to the agricultural interests of the South and West. That is what happened. I was showing that the debt-paying power of the farmers of my State had been destroyed. I said on this floor that the young farmer just starting out in life who had but 10 bales of cotton when cotton was 40 cents a pound could pay $2,000 worth of debts with that cotton, but in 12 months the debt-paying power of that cotton was reduced to $500 and it would take 40 bales to pay the debt he had incurred in making the crop of 1920. That is the offense which I have committed.

I have been criticizing the Federal Reserve Board for employing a deflation policy that resulted in pouring money into Wall Street by the millions and enabling Wall Street to make money by the billions upon the distress and misfortune of the South and West; and now I am to be attacked by this cowardly, contemptible, and curlike plan of sending the speech of somebody secretly into my State with a letter from a Government bank demanding of the poor struggling banks in Alabama, "Write me back and give me your views upon this subject." What does that mean? It is practically saying to that bank, "You have got to come here for accommodations; we hold the purse strings; we have got the money supply; we control the credit; and if you are with Heflin and the fight that he is making for a fair administration of the banking system, in the demand that he is making that money shall circulate and that credit shall be extended to every legitimate enterprise in the country, then you can not get any credit and you can not get any currency."

Mr. President, it is a terrible thing that they are doing, intimidating the local banks. The banking system with the creation of which myself and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and others had to do, was never intended to be perverted from the ends of its institution in this manner and made the handy instrument of sinister interests or political propaganda.

Mr. President, when I started this fight I realized it was a big undertaking; I knew how resourceful were those who would seek to injure one and stab him in the back who dared to expose their conduct and crime against the business of the average man. But that did not deter me. It will not deter me now. I have never lowered my arm in fighting for what I believed to be right; I did not owe my seat in the other branch of Congress for 16½ years nor do I owe my election to the Senate of the United States to the corrupt use of a single dollar or to the predatory interests of any concern in the country. My support has come from the minds and hearts of a splendid and noble people, and it is the confidence that they have reposed and the esteem in which they have held me that has been a constant stimulus and inspiring power in all the battles that I have fought, and I spurn and I despise the contemptible play at politics which sneaks through the mail from another State, campaign literature by a Government bank, for the purpose of influencing and intimidating the bankers of my State.

I shall ask the Senate a little later to take action upon a resolution which I shall present in regard to this matter. If the officials of the Federal reserve bank in Atlanta are guilty of this act as indicated in this letter to me, they ought to be removed. There ought not to be a Democrat or Republican in this body who would vote against a resolution looking to that end.

Mr. President, the Government will not let you and me coin money; if it would, I should coin all I wanted, and so would you; but the Government reserves to itself the right to coin money and stamp the value upon it. What is money? It is a medium of exchange and a measure of value. If the farmers of the West and the farmers of the South are to be confined to $2,000,000,000, that is all the crop is worth; if they are to be confined to $4,000,000,000, then it is worth $4,000,000,000; and $4,000,000,000 becomes the measure of the value of all the crops, worth, maybe, $20,000,000,000.

So I am to be condemned and the effort is to be made, through a Government banking institution, to hurt me politically because I have dared to stand here and fight for what I know is to the best interest of the farmer, the wage earner, the merchant, and local banker in every community in the country.

Senators, do you want the time to come when the Senator who knows the truth and knows the right will be afraid to tell the one or defend the other?

Mr. President, the farmer out yonder goes to work and figures in the spring of the year how much it is going to cost him to make a crop, and he figures how much he is going to get for the crop in the fall on market day. The cattleman moves out upon the plains with his sheep and his cattle and figures how much it is going to cost him to produce beef and mutton and wool, and he figures how much he is going to make in the market place. He has got to have money, and he has got to have credit; they both must flow within his reach. If you are going to put it in the power of somebody to contract the currency, to reduce its volume, to make it scarce and hard to get, what happens to that poor fellow? The value of his product goes down and down, and he finds himself in the market place forced to sell below the cost of production. Then what happens? You kill that man's business. What happens to the sheepman? One of them testified before our committee that he could not get his loans renewed, and he was forced to sell his sheep on a rapidly declining market. He said that after paying freight rates and for feed for his sheep on the way to market he received only 34 cents a head above what it had cost him for the feed and freight rates on the way to market; so that he lost hundreds of dollars in the transaction. What happened to him? You killed his business.

What happened to the cattleman? I have told you once before about a poor fellow out in Texas. He said, "Cattle are pretty cheap; I will buy a little ranch." So he borrowed $2,000 and bought a few head of cattle and put them out on the plains. He gave his time to their care; looked after them faithfully; and in the fall of the year his paper came due. He said, "The price of cattle is too low for me to sell now; it is going to be better after a while." So he goes to the bank and says, "I understand that you extend notes; that you grant time on loans to other people; I want you to grant me a little more time in which to pay this note." The bank replied, "We can not do it." Listen, Senators. They forced him to sell his cattle, and after he had given his year's work, after his investment of $2,000, and after paying for the feed which he had bought, and all other expenses to which he had been put, under the forced sale he received but $1,300 for them. He paid that back on the $2,000 note, leaving himself in debt $700 and his business was ruined. That is what the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy has done. That is what I have condemned, and I repeat there is not a southern Democrat in this body who will defend that deflation policy except the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. President, I have given serious thought and great study to this question. It is no small offense to call in the money supply of the country and withhold it from business, that must have it or perish. I served on the Agricultural Committee of the House for 12 years out of the 16½ years I was in the House. I have been on the Agricultural Committee of the Senate since I came to this body. In our committee since deflation came upon us I have heard men testify with tears in their eyes, telling us of the woeful conditions that exist in the West and in the South. We have suffered the same affliction, and now when I come to present the cause of the people—oppressed, down-trodden, demoralized, their property destroyed—this discredited Federal Reserve Board operates through the Federal reserve banks and slips a speech full of inaccurate statements into my State amongst the bankers and calls on them to write back to the source to which they must go for money and credits to know whether or not they condemn their Senator from Alabama, who dares to fight for the right in this matter.

Senators, Old Hickory Jackson dared to challenge the national bank of his day when it undertook to dominate the politics of the country. The people connected with it even got so bold and arrogant that when Jackson wanted to put a measure through Congress they went to him to yoke with it some measure they had, and Jackson did not take well to it, and the spokesmen for the national bank of that time said: "Well, if you will not put our measure in with yours, then you can not pass yours through Congress." What did Old Hickory say? He said: "Have you power enough to defeat a righteous measure that the President of the United States, the Chief Executive of the whole people, wants to put through Congress for their benefit?" They said, "Yes." "Then," he said, "that is too damned much power for one concern to have, and I will take it away from you," and he did.

Now what have we? We have the best banking system, in my judgment, that was ever put upon a statute book—this elastic system, this system that saved the South and saved the West from the crop gamblers of Wall Street, fought them in the open and routed them in 1919; and then, in 1920, when the wolves of Wall Street came out again, licking their chops and howling in glee, we said, "Let them come; we have the sinews of war; we have a banking system that can whip them in the open; we have whipped them once, and we will whip them again." Then the Federal Reserve Board, the commander of our reserve army, would not order them out to battle, and left 60,000,000 of defenseless people in the South and West to have their hard-earned substance taken from them by those wolves, and would not furnish them weapons with which to fight and defend themselves. That is the gang I am fighting.

I do not blame them for fighting me. It is all right; but I want them to fight me in the open; and I do not intend that they shall use the instrumentalities of the Government that I am trying to serve to weaken my arm in the fight that I am making. I appeal to the President. It is his business to see that that law is enforced. It is his business to see that that board keeps out of politics. It is his business to see that the bank in Atlanta takes its hands out of the politics of the South. It was intended, purely and wholly, singly and solely, to serve the business needs of the people. I do not ask any favors of the Federal Reserve Board.

That board has smitten my people sore. That board has destroyed billions of property values in the South. That board's deflation policy, as I have said, grew out of the resolution of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]; and you will remember that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] got up at the time and said that it meant deflation and depression, and subsequent developments showed that to be true. No, Mr. President, I do not ask any favors of that board, and I am not asking any favors of the bank down yonder, but I am protesting against using these governmental instrumentalities of my country to further my claims politically or the claims of anybody else.

It ought not to be done. It ought not to be permitted. The President can stop it. The best thing he could do for the American people, I repeat, would be to remove the members of the Federal Reserve Board.

In the fight that I have made against deflation and in favor of a fair and honest administration of the Federal reserve banking system I am in company with the Senators from North Carolina, Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. OVERMAN, the Senator from South Carolina, Mr. SMITH, the Senators from Arkansas, Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. CARAWAY, the Senators from Georgia, Mr. HARRIS and Mr. WATSON, the Senators from Florida, Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. TRAMMELL, and others that I can name. There is not one of them that will stand on this floor and say: "I indorse the deflation policy or the management of the Federal reserve banking system by the Federal Reserve Board during the year 1920"—not one.

Mr. President, this is a live issue that I am on. There is not a question that is more vital to honest business of the country. We may differ on the tariff, we may differ on foreign policies, we may differ on legislative propositions that affect some of our other domestic concerns, but there ought not to be any difference between Democrats and Republicans when it comes to lashing this system back out of the political entanglements into which Gov. Harding has dragged it.

I repeat, before I sit down, there is not anything in the country that affects more vitally the interests of the whole people than the control of the money supply and credits of the country. If ever Congress, under the control of either party, sits supinely down and permits this system to dabble in politics Congress will prove unfaithful, and every Senator who permits it will violate his oath. When I came into this body and stood at the altar place of this Chamber I took an oath that I would defend the Constitution of the United States, which is the sheet anchor of my country, against all enemies, both foreign and domestic, and I say to you that any man or set of men who manipulate the money supply, the credits of the country, and try to control politics with them is an enemy to my country.

Mr. President, I believe I have said about all on this phase of the matter that I care to say now. I am going to ask the Senate to act. I am going to put this grave matter square up to the Senate of the United States and let the Senate say whether or not a Federal reserve bank shall be permitted to use its power in politics anywhere.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the Senate has been carried away—very far away—by the fervid eloquence of the heroic and martyred Senator from Alabama. Therefore I ask that in this connection the resolution to which he made allusion, and the brief discussion of the resolution upon May 17, 1920, as published on page 7145 of the Record, may here be incorporated in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, what was the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That the resolution to which the Senator from Alabama referred, and the discussion thereon, be incorporated in the Record.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection. Did the Senator include the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], in which he said that it meant deflation?

Mr. McCORMICK. I included that part of the Record which appears on page 7145, the day on which the resolution was adopted. If I remember correctly, the Senator from Oklahoma did not speak at that time.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to put in the Record what he did say when he spoke. I will find that part of the Record—it is not very long—and I ask unanimous consent that it may follow the matter that the Senator from Illinois asks to have printed in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCORMICK. Then, Mr. President, I ask that the answer of the Federal Reserve Board, sent to the Senate in reply to the resolution, be also incorporated in the Record.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, that is too long. Besides that, it comes from a repudiated source.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will ask the Senator how long it is?

Mr. McCORMICK. I am sure I do not know.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, I do not object to printing it. It will cost the Government a good deal; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Senate resolution 363, submitted by Mr. McCORMICK on May 15, 1920, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be directed to advise the Senate what steps it purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal reserve system to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and consequent high prices, and what further steps it purposes to take or recommend to mobilize credits in order to move the 1920 crop.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 17, 1920, pp. 7145 and 7146.]
FINANCIAL POLICY.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up Senate resolution 363, on which I desire to say only a word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it is a resolution coming over from a preceding day.

Mr. McCORMICK. It is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule the Senator has a right to call it up, if there is no objection.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think there will not be any objection to the resolution.

Mr. GERRY. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read Senate resolution 363, submitted by Mr. McCORMICK on the 15th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be directed to advise the Senate what steps it purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal reserve system to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and consequent high prices, and what further steps it purposes to take or recommend to mobilize credits in order to move the 1920 crop.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the resolution has been reported by the committee?

Mr. McCORMICK. It has not been referred to a committee. It is a Senate resolution. I recognize that there may be some question in the mind of the Senator from Utah as to the purpose of the resolution, but I do not believe he will have any objection to it after a word of explanation.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator, if he will pardon me, that I do not know that I have any objection to it, and yet there are some recitations in it that may not be agreed to by many students of political economy and many members of the committee to which the resolution would properly go.

Mr. McCORMICK. What recitations, may I ask the Senator?
